The Question Answered, WAS JOSEPH SMITH SENT OF GOD!

BY ORSON PRATT, OF ENGLAND.

A few days since, Mrs. Pratt and myself, were invited to take tea with a very respectable gentleman of this town (Liverpool), who, though not connected with our church, yet was, with his family, sincerely enquiring after the truth. They seemed to be fully convinced in relation to the most important features of our doctrine, and were desirous of extending their investigations still further. We hope that their researches may happily result in a full conviction of the truth, and that they may obtain that certainty, so much to be desired, as to the divine authority of the great and important message now revealed from heaven—a message which must assuredly prove a savor of life or death to the generation now living. This message is beginning to awake the attention of the honest, virtuous, and upright among all classes of society. They seem to be aroused from the slumber of ages.

A message of simple truth, when sent from God—when published by divine authority, through divinely inspired men, penetrates the mind like a sharp two-edged sword, and cuts asunder the deeply-rooted prejudices, the iron-bound sinews of ancient error and tradition, made sacred by age and rendered popular by human wisdom. It severs with undeviating exactness between truth and falsehood—between the doctrine of Christ and the doctrines of men; it levels with the most perfect ease every argument that human learning may array against it. Opinions, creeds invented by uninspired men, and doctrines originated in schools of divinity, all vanish like the morning dew—all sink into insignificance when compared with a message direct from heaven. Such a message shines upon the understanding like the splendors of the noon-day sun; it whispers in the ears of mortals, saying "this is the way, walk ye in it." Certainty and assurance are its constant companions: it is entirely unlike all plans or systems ever invented by human authority; it has no alliance, connexion, or fellowship with any of them; it speaks with divine authority, and all nations, without an exception, are required to obey. He that receives the message and endures to the end shall be saved; he that rejects it will be damned. It matters not what his former righteousness may have been—none can be excused.

As a specimen of the anxious inquiry which now pervades the minds of many in relation to this church, we publish the following extract from a letter, which was kindly read to us during our aforementioned visit, by a gentleman who received it from his friend in London. We were struck with the apparent candor, the sound judgment and the correct conclusions of the author of the letter, and earnestly solicited the privilege of publishing it. Permission was granted on condition that we would withhold names. We here present it to our readers, and shall endeavor, in the same spirit of candor, to answer the all-important inquiries contained in it.

JULY 15th.

My dear Sir: I have been expecting, time after time, to be able to return you the "Letters" you so kindly left with me. As I informed you in my last, I cursorily read through the letters, and then handed the book to Mr. ——. With him it is at the present time. The impression made thereby on his mind is very remarkable, and he requests me to inform you, that if you will allow him, he means to keep the book, if you will please to let him know the price thereof. He and I concur in our view of Mormonism at present. Do you enquire what that view is? I will then proceed to state it. We consider that the proofs which Mormonism gives of the ostensible agency are, without question, clear and demonstrative; we entirely concur also in the personal appearance and reign of our Lord; we are persuaded that all the preachers and teachers of the day are without authority—that their teachings and interpretations are uncertain as to the truth—that the translations of the scripture, being done without inspiration, are also uncertain. All is uncertain! melancholy thought! a deplorable picture but a true one!—the different teachers doing the best they can —all laying no concerning [illegible] division, multiplied division! And they have a right if they think proper to divide from an authority strictly human. But their multiplied division is a multiplied proof that they are wrong—that they are without that spirit who guides into truth, and truth is one!

My dear sir, the "Saints" have made out a strong and irrefragable case to show that "authority to teach" is no where, if not with them; but the proposition that they have authority to teach, interpret, &c., is one that at present does not create a conviction in Mr. —— or my mind. We admit that it is very reasonable to suppose that, under such circumstances, God would raise up and send one invested with authority. Whether Joseph Smith was such an one is the all important question. I also admit, that so far as I am acquainted with his history, there is something very remarkable about him; perhaps I should be fully convinced if I were more fully read in writing relating to him. I wish I lived near to you, and then I would read more fully on the subject; I confess my mind is much concerned to arrive at a clear conclusion upon the point.

Mr. —— wishes you, if you will be so good, to select a few books that you think clearly prove the divine mission of Joseph Smith, and send them in a parcel to him with the prices; he will feel much obliged, and will send you a post-office order for the amount. He believes your selection will be a judicious one. I have heard Mr. Banks twice since I saw you, and other individual teachers also.—There is also much in the public service that I approve. I am greatly struck with the simplicity of their celebration of the ordinances. Mr. Banks and the others assert strongly the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission; this is however not enough; the church of the early saints had proofs to give by inspired apostles like Peter, inspired deacons like Stephen, inspired evangelists like Philip, inspired Prophets like Agabas, and inspired prophetesses like Philip's daughters. All this was the result of the Spirit being in and with them in authority and power. The church of the latter day ought to be the same, if having the same spirit of authority and power. The sects are without these proofs, therefore they are sects groping in the dark, and hoping, and thinking, and guessing they are right, and all this convinces that they are not "the Church, the body of Christ;" bodies they are of their doctors and founders sure enough! Now I think the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints must resemble the original, or it is at once proved to be only a sect. One result of my conversation with you and Banks, and perusing the Letters, is, that I can be no longer connected with any sect. So far as I see, I can without difficulty confound in argument—plain scriptual argument—any into whose company I am at any time thrown. The Methodist system I am convinced is the worst, because its pretensions are highest. I stand, therefore, fully alone. I declare I should be glad to be convinced that Mormonism is what it professes to be; I would [illegible] convinced that its elders had authority to baptize me for the remission of sins and to lay hands on me for the gift of the Holy Ghost. These sacred ordinances I would gladly obey, if I knew men having authority to administer them! To have these ordinances administered without divine authority is mere child's play. Thus you see my position. A Methodist leader, an old friend, said to me the other day, "Are you connected with the Church of Christ now?—I hear you are not with us now." I answered, "Where is the Church of Christ?" He replied it is found among the different sects. I then inquired, "Are you in the Church of Christ?—for if you are, you must be a member of all the sects." This rather puzzled him. I then asked him "Shew me the sect that resembled the church at the beginning; does any one of them, or do they all put together resemble the church of the beginning?" He said certainly not. I enquired why not? He was shrewd enough to be silent and to see that his own mouth must condemn his sect and [illegible] the sects. Observe, in the absence of the spirit, men must do as well as they can This I am trying to do, only I confess that I am poor, and blind, and naked, bereft of the glory of the certainty of the authority and truth of the church of Christ. The sects, however, are satisfied, though "poor, blind, and naked," to boast of increase of goods, chapels, rich friends, preachers, &c., &c. So much for my present views and standing. I suppose that you have acted on your convictions, and are joined to the Saints; in all honesty you ought, I confess. The moment a conviction that divine authority and certainty of teaching is with them, that moment will I join them. * * *

Farewell. My respectful regards to Mrs. ——, and ever believe me my dear sir, yours very truly,

First.—The author of the above letter has carefully examined the present state of the world, and declares himself fully convinced of the awful apostacy which now universally prevails. He unhesitatingly admits that all authority to teach—to administer ordinaces—to build up the church of Christ, has entirely ceased from the earth—that "all is uncertain." He also admits that "it is very reasonable to suppose that under such circumstances, God would raise up and send one invested with authority. Whether Joseph Smith was such an one is the all-important question. Yes, indeed, it is an important question, and one that involves the fate of the present generation. If Joseph Smith was not sent of God, this church cannot be the church of God, and the tens of thousands who have been baptized into this church are yet in their sins, and no better off than the millions that have gone before them. The form, without the power and authority, is no better than the hundreds of [illegible] forms that have no resemblance to the ancient pattern, indeed, it is more dangerous, because better calculated to deceive. Other churches do not profess to have inspired apostles, prophets, prophetesses, evangelists, &c.; hence we know, if the New Testament be true, that they cannot be the church of God. But the Latter-day Saints profess to have all these officers and gifts among them, and profess to have authority to administer in every form, ordinance, and blessing of the ancient church; hence we know, that so far as the offices, doctrines, ordinances, and ceremonies are evidence, this church can exhibit a perfect pattern. In these things, then, both ancient and modern Saints are exactly alike. By the New Testament then we cannot be condemned.

If the Latter-day Saints are not what they profess to be, one thing is certain, that no one ever will be able to confute their doctrine by the scriptures; however imperfect the people may be, their doctrine is infallible. Can this be said of any other people who have existed on the eastern hemisphere during the last 1700 years? No. Their doctrines have been a heterogenous mixture of truth and error, that would not stand the test one moment when measured by a pattern of inspiration; some disparity could be seen and pointed out—some deviation either in the organization or in the ordinances of the gospel could be shown to exist. And now after so many centuries have elapsed, and when human wisdom has been exerted to its utmost strength, and the most exalted and gigantic talents displayed to lay a stable foundation whereon to build, we awake and behold all an empty bubble—a vain show—a phantom of man's creation, with scarcely a vestige of the ancient form, to say nothing of the power. In the midst of all this darkness, a young, illiterate, obscure, and inexperienced man announces a message from heaven; before which darkness flees away; human dogmas are overturned; the traditions of ages are uprooted; all forms of church government tremble like an aspen leaf at its approach, and the mighty fabric of popular sectarianism is convulsed and shaken to its very foundation. How happens all this? If Joseph Smith were an impostor, whence his superior wisdom? What power enervated his mind in laying the foundation of a church according to the ancient order? How could an impostor, so far surpass the combined wisdom of centuries as to originate a system diverse from every other system under heaven, and yet harmonize with the system of Jesus and his apostles in every particular? What! an impostor discover the gross darkness of ages, and publish a doctrine perfect in every respect, against which not one scriptual argument can be adduced! The idea is preposterous! The purity and infallibility of the doctrine of this great modern prophet is a presumptive evidence of no small moment in favor of his divine mission.

We do not pretend that a perfect doctrine is an infallible evidence in favor of the divine authority of the one who teaches it. We can conceive it possible, though not probable, for a man to teach a doctrine unmixed with error, and yet be without authority to administer its ordinances. Swedenborg, Irving, and many others taught doctrines in many respects true, in other respects false; hence their authority should be rejected, even though they should perform miracles. We have no examples on the records of history, of a doctrine perfect in every respect, being taught by any person or persons, unless they were inspired with divine authority. If Joseph Smith taught a doctrine in any respect false, he should be rejected as an imposter, though he should, like the magicians of Egypt, turn rivers of water into blood, or create frogs in abundance, or even raise the dead like the witch of Endor. On the other hand; if he taught a true and perfect doctrine, he might be sent of God, though he should perform no miracle, like John the Baptist, or the prophet Noah, or many other prophets of the old Testament.

In ancient times, many great prophets were sent of God, and we have no record of their doing miracles, yet their respective messages were of infinite importance, and could not be rejected without condemnation Where is there a man, no matter how great his attainments, that can show Mr. Smith's doctrine to be false? Did the ancient Saints teach baptism to the penitent believer for the remission of sins? So did Mr. S. Did they teach the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit? So did Mr. S. Did the Former-day Saints teach that apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, deacons, bishops, elders, &c., all inspired of God, were necessary in the church? So did Mr. S. Did the ancient Saints teach that dreams, visions, new revelations, ministering of angels, healings, tongues, interpretations, and all other spiritual gifts were necessary in the church? So did this modern prophet. Where then is the discrepency between the ancient and modern teaching? No where. The teaching of the one is as perfect as the other; and we again assert that this perfect coincidence in teaching, in every point is a strong presumptive evidence that Mr. Smith was sent of God.

Second.—In what manner does Joseph Smith declare that a dispensation of the gospel was committed unto him! He testifies that an angel of God, whose name was Moroni, appeared unto him; that this angel was formerly an ancient prophet of the tribe of Joseph on the continent of America. He testifies that Moroni revealed unto him where he deposited the sacred records of his nation some fourteen hundred years ago; that these records contained the "everlasting gospel" as it was anciently taught by this branch of Israel. He gave Mr. Smith power to reveal the contents of those records to the nations of the earth. Now, how does the testimony of Joseph Smith agree with the book of John's prophecy given on the Isle of Patmos! John testifies that when the gospel is again committed to the nations, it shall be through the medium of an angel from heaven. J. Smith testifies that a dispensation of the gospel for all nations has been committed to him by an angel. The one uttered the prediction; the other testifies its fulfilment. Though a perfect doctrine, yet if he had testified that his doctrine was not restored by an angel, all would at once know him to have been an impostor. How came Mr. Smith, if an imposter, to not only discover a perfect doctrine, but also to discover the precise medium through which the doctrine should be restored to the earth! Did Swedendorg, Irving, Wesley, or any other persons, not only preach a pure system, but at the same time did they declare that it was committed to them by an angel from heaven! If not, however pure and holy their teaching, they were not divinely authorized to administer ordinances. If Mr. Smith had professed to have accidentally discovered those records, and that he was inspired to reveal their contents through the Urim and Thummim; or if he had professed to have received a message through the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, or the Urim and Thummim, or in any other way; but that of the ministering of an angel, we should, without further inquiry, have known him to be without authority. How came Mr. Smith, if a deceiver, to think of all this! Did Martin Luther, Wesley, Whitfield, Swedendorg, or Irving think of this! Whence his superior intellect—his depth of understanding—his extensive foresight—that he should so far surpass all former impostors for 1700 years! John testifies that when the everlasting gospel is restored to the earth it shall be by an angel. Smith testifies that it was restored by an angel, and in no other way. This is another presumptive evidence that he was sent of God.

Third.—A revelation and restoration to the earth of the "everlasting gospel" through the angel Moroni would be of no benefit to the nations, unless some one should be ordained with authority to preach it and administer its ordinances. Moroni might reveal a book containing a beautiful and glorious system of salvation, but no one could obey even its first principles without a legally authorized administrator, ordained to preach, baptize, lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, &c. Did Moroni ordain Mr. Smith to the apostleship, and command him to administer ordinances? No, he did not. But why not confer authority by ordination, as well as to reveal the everlasting gospel! Because in all probability he had not the right so to do. All angels have not the same authority—they do not all hold the same keys. Moroni was a prophet, but we have no account of his holding the office of an apostle; and if not he had no right to ordain Mr. Smith to an office which he himself never possessed. He no doubt went as far as he was authorized, and that was to reveal the "stick of Ephraim"—the record of his fathers, containing the "everlasting gospel." How then did Mr. Smith obtain the office of an apostle, if Moroni had no authority to ordain him to such office! Mr. Smith testifies that Peter, James, and John came to him in the capacity of ministering angels, and by the laying on of hands ordained him an apostle, and commanded him to preach, baptize, lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and administer all other ordinances of the gospel as they themselves did in ancient days. Did Swedenborg—did Irving's apostle—or did any other impostors during the [illegible]nage of darkness—profess that the apostleship was conferred upon them by those who held it last—by an angel who held the office himself! No; and therefore they are not apostles, but deceivers. If Mr. Smith had pretended that he had received the apostleship by the revelation of the Holy Ghost, without the ordination under the hands of an apostle, we should at once know that his pretensions were vain, and that he was a deceiver. If an impostor, how came Mr. Smith to discover all this! Why did he not, like the Irvingites, assume the apostleship without an apostle to ordain him! How came he to possess so much more wisdom than Irving, as to discover that he could not be an apostle without being ordained under the hands of an apostle! If Mr. Smith be a false apostle, it must be confessed that he has exhibited far more judgment than all the apostles who have preceded him, learned and talented as they were. Is not this another presumptive evidence of Joseph Smith's divine mission? Such a correctness upon matters of so great a moment, and upon subjects on which millions have heretofore erred, indicates something more than human—it indicates the inspiration of the Almighty. The purity of Mr. Smith's doctrine—the perfect coincidence of his testimony with that of John's, in relation to the restoration of the everlasting gospel to the earth, and the consistency of his testimony in relation to the manner of the restoration of the apostleship, are presumptive evidences that beautifully harmonize with and strengthen each other; the evidence is therefore accumulative, increases with every additional condition or circumstance in a multiplied ratio, and seems almost irresistably to force conviction upon the mind.

Fourth.—Joseph Smith not only professes, through the medium of angels, to have received a dispensation of the gospel, and the power and authority of the apostleship, but he also professes to have received, through revelation and commandment from God, a dispensation for the gathering of the Saints from all nations. Now the doctrine of the gathering of the Saints in the last days must either be false or true; if false, then J. Smith must be an impostor. It matters not how correct he may have been in all other points of his system, if this one point—the doctrine of the gathering—be false he must be a deceiver. Why! Because he professes to have received this doctrine by direct revelation and commandment. On the other hand, if the doctrine of the gathering be a true doctrine and scriptural, this will be another presumptive evidence that Mr. Smith was sent of God.

Now a doctrine may be true and not be scriptural; as for example, Newton's doctrine or law of universal gravitation is a true doctrine, but not a scriptural one; that is, it can neither be proved or disproved by the scriptures. So Noah's doctrine of gathering into an ark—Lot's doctrine of fleeing out of Sodom—Christ's doctrine to depart out of Jerusalem and flee to the mountains to escape destruction, were all true; but none of them could be proved or disproved by any scripture given to any of the former prophets. So likewise Mr. Smith's doctrine of the gathering of the Saints in the last days might be true, even though there should be no former scripture that predicted such an event; but in this case such a doctrine would be no evidence that Mr. Smith, who advocated it, was sent of God; but if such a doctrine can be proved to be a scriptural doctrine, that is, if the gathering of the Saints was predicted in ancient scriptures as an event to take place in a certain age, in a certain way, and through certain means, and Mr. Smith comes in that age, professing to have a message to gather the Saints in such way, and by such means as the scriptures have foretold, then the exact and perfect agreement between the professed message of Mr. Smith, and the scriptural predictions relating to such a message or work, would be a presumptive evidence of great weight in favor of his divine mission.

The doctrine of the gathering of the people of God, including Israel, is one so clearly predicted by the inspired writers, that it seems almost superfluous to refer to the numerous passages relating to it. The dispensation in which the people of God were to be gathered in one, is called by the apostle Paul, "the dispensation of the fulness of times;" which he represents as being an event then in the future. John, nearly one hundred years after the birth of our Saviour, saw the wonderful events and sceneries of unborn generations displayed in majestic and awful grandeur before him. He saw the churches of Asia, then under his own personal watchcare, lukewarm, corrupted, and about ready to be moved out of their place. He saw the universal apostacy that was soon to succeed and hold dominion for ages over all kindreds and tongues, under the name of the Mother of Harlots—the great Babylon that should make all nations drunk with her wickedness. He saw that after the nations had been thus overwhelmed in thick darkness for ages, without the church of God, without apostles, without prophets, without the ministering of angels, without one cheering message from heaven, that there would be one more proclamation of mercy made to all people—one more dispensation of glad tidings from the heavens, to be ushered in by an angel restoring the everlasting gospel, which was to receive a universal proclamation to all the inhabitants of the earth, accompanied with a loud cry, that "the hour of God's judgment is come." He saw the universal proclamation of this warning message immediately followed by another angel, proclaiming the complete overthrow and downfall of Babylon. Between the interval of the flying of these two angels, he "heard another voice from heaven, saying COME OUT OF HER, MY PEOPLE, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye recieve not of her plagues; for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Remember, that this voice, commanding the people to come out of Babylon, was to be a "voice from heaven." It was not to be a cunningly devised plan of uninspired man, brought about by human ingenuity; but it was to be a voice from heaven a message sent from God—a new revelation, commanding the saints to come out of Babylon previous to its downfall. How came Mr. Smith, if an imposter, to get, not only all the other particulars which we have mentioned, perfectly exact, but also to discover that there must be a gathering of the saints out of Babylon, and that that work must immediately follow the introduction of the gospel by an angel? Why did he not say, my doctrine is true, and if you will embrace it, you can be saved, and still remain where you are? It matters not how correct his doctrine might have been in all other points, if he had told his deciples to remain among the corrupt nations, and not gather together—this alone would have exposed the cloven foot, and proved him to be a deceiver. Swedenborg, Wesley, Irving, and a numerous host of others, during the last seventeen hundred years, have entirely neglected the gathering, which proves that they were without authority—that a dispensation of the gospel was never committed to them—that the voice from heaven to come out of Babylon had never saluted their ears. Previous to the restoration of the gospel by an angel, God had no people in Babylon, and therefore could not call them out. An unauthorised, uninspired priesthood, preaching a perverted gospel, never could raise up a people of God in Babylon; for they themselves are Babylon, and all their converts or children are begotten after their own likeness with Babylonish inscriptions upon their foreheads. It is only when the gospel, apostleship, and power are again restored in the way and manner predicted, that a people of God can be raised up among the nations. It is then, and not till then, that the voice is heard from heaven, calling that people out from among the nations. Mr. Smith did not forget this. It is marvelously strange, indeed, that he should be an impostor, and yet embrace in his system every particular that was to characterize the great dispensation of the latter times. It matters not how diverse the points of his doctrine were to the popular doctrines current among the great modern systems of religion. He seems to have introduced his system without paying the least regard as to what would be popular or unpopular—as to whether it would suit the learned or the unlearned—as to whether it would suit the temporal circumstances of man or not.—He did not stop to make the enquiry whether the gathering of the Saints would be congenial to the feelings of those who occupied splendid mansions, upon fine farms, surrounded with every luxury of life. He did not stop to consider any of those things, but spoke as one having authority; saying "thus saith the Lord," upon every point of doctrine which he promulgated. Now, for a young man, inexperienced and illiterate, to profess to give the word of the Lord upon subjects of so great a moment—to reveal doctrines which were directly opposed, not only to his own traditions, but to the teachings and doctrines of the most popular, numerous, and powerful sects of the day, and at the same time have those doctrines exactly accord, not only with the ancient gospel, but with every minute prediction relative to the dispensation of the last days—is an evidence that carries TRUTH upon the face of it, and leaves a deep and lasting impression upon every reflecting mind, and we can hardly refrain from assenting in our hearts, that surely he must have been sent of God.

Fifth.—What else besides the "everlasting gospel" does the Book of Mormon profess to contain? It professes to contain a brief but faithful history of a small branch of the tribe of Joseph. It contains numerous and pointed predictions, shewing exressply that the age in which their records should, by the power of God, be revealed to the nations, should also be the day in which Israel should be gathered: and that their records, in conjunction with the records of the Jews, should be the powerful instruments in the hands of the servants of God in bringing about that great work. Now, how does this accord with the word of the Lord to Ezekiel upon the same subject? Ezekiel was commanded to write upon two sticks, one for Judah, and the other for Joseph; after which he was commanded to join them together into one. And when the children of Israel should make enquiry what these two united writings of Judah and Joseph meant, he was to say unto them, that the Lord God would join the writings of Joseph with those of Judah; immediately after which he would take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they were gone, and would gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and that he would make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and that one king should be king to them all; and that they should no more be two nations or kingdoms. Ezekiel testifies that the writings of Joseph should be joined with the writings of Judah. Mr. Smith presents this generation with a book, consisting of several hundred pages, professing to be the sacred writings of the inspired prophets of the tribe of Joseph, who anciently inhabited the great western hemisphere. Ezekiel testifies that Israel should be gathered, never again to be scattered, immediately after the union of these two records. Ezekiel uttered the prediction; Mr. Smith presents a professed fulfilment. This is another presumptive evidence in favor of the divine authority of his mission. for if the gathering of Israel had not been included in the mission of Mr. Smith, as an important part of the great work of the last dispensation, all would have had good reason for rejecting him without further inquiry. The ministering of an angel—the restoration of the gospel—the conferring of the apostleship—the setting up of the kingdom of God—the gathering of the Saints—the revelation of the record of Joseph, and its union with the Jewish record—and the restoration of all the house of Israel to their own lands—are the wonderful events to be fulfilled in the great "dispensation of the fulness of times." Whatever person or persons are divinely commissioned to usher in that dispensation, must have the keys of authority to perform every work pertaining thereunto. If Joseph Smith had included all these remarkable events in his mission, excepting one; then that one exception would be sufficient to prove him to be acting without authority. But where, we ask, is there one exception? What particular event or circumstance pertaining to the dispensation, of which he professed to hold the keys, has he excluded from his system? Did John predict the restoration of the gospel by an angel? It is included in the system of Joseph Smith, and the Saints are now obeying it. Did Ezekiel predict the final gathering of Israel as an immediate result of the union of the two records of Joseph and Judah? Mr. Smith also includes this in his system. The two records are already united in their testimony, and will soon accomplish the purpose for which they were sent forth. What then is lacking! Is there any of the prophets, or inspired writers of ancient times, who have pointed out some other way for the latter day dispensation to be brought about! Can any man show that the gospel will not be restored by an angel, or that the Saints will not be called out of Babylon by a message from heaven? or that the record of the tribe of Joseph will not be joined with the Jewish record—the Bible? or that Israel will not be gathered to their own lands through the instrumentality of more revelation? or that the kingdom of God will not be set up in the latter days to break in pieces all other kingdoms? or that apostles and prophets will not be restored to the earth as in ancient times? If all these things are possible, probable, and scriptural—if these events must come to pass in their time, and in the manner predicted—can any one show that this is not the time? that the Book of Mormon is not the record of Joseph, about which Ezekiel prophesied? Can any one show any cause why Joseph Smith should not receive the ministering of an angel! why he should not be ordained an apostle, or prophet, or receive revelations and commandments from God! If the gospel is to be restored by an angel, it must be restored at the first by some person. Why not that person be Mr. Smith! If the records of two different tribes are to be joined in one, why not the Book of Mormon and the Bible be the two records! and why not Mr. Smith be the instrument in the hands of God in fulfilling this prophecy! If these things are not the fulfilment of those ancient predictions, will the generation that lives when they do come to pass be any more believing than they are at present in this work! Will they be any more ready to receive new revelations, visions, angels, or ancient sacred records than they are now! When God sets up his kingdom, will mankind be any more willing to receive the apostles, prophets, and inspired officers of that kingdom, than they are now! One thing is certain; if the angel has not come—if the gospel is not restored—if the records of Joseph are not revealed—then there is no kingdom of God on the earth, no authority to preach or administer ordinances among men; all is gross darkness—all is uncertainty—and our only alternative is to wait till the voice of the angel is heard, till the great work of the last dispensation is ushered in. But will we then receive it? Will not our prejudices be as great then as they are now against Mr. Smith! Are there any qualifications that Mr. Smith should possess that he did not possess? Were there any doctrines which he advocated adverse to scriptural doctrine? Were there any principles connected with his system inconsistent with the prophecies? If then perfection characterizes every doctrine embraced in the great scheme of this modern prophet, who can say that he was not sent of God? Who dare oppose so great and perfect a system, without the least shadow of evidence to prove its falsity! Who so lost to every sense of reason and sound judgment, as not to perceive an overwhelming evidence flowing in from every quarter to establish the divine mission of Joseph Smith? Who that has examined his mission or system impartially, can bring even one evidence against it! Are we not bound then to yield, at least, our faith on the side of evidence! What excuse then can the learned, and great, and wise of the earth, render for opposing a work of so great importance with nought but ridicule, and slander, and vile reproaches! Let them bring forth their strong reasonings, or else let them hear, and say, it is TRUTH.

TO OUR READERS.

Respected Friends and Brethren:

In assuming the duties of an Editor at this period and under existing circumstances, in a region remote from the usual circles of intelligence, where the facilities for interchange are "few and far between," particularly in the winter, when the snows are so deep as they now are, and have been since the 20th of November last, the difficulties and obstacles that we must, of necessity, contend with, are not a few. In assuming the duties of Editor, we must also assume the responsibilities of the same. The press is a powerful engine, for good or for evil, and calculated to make a deep and lasting impression upon the community where it is. The actions of both old and young, male and female, to a great extent, are directed and controlled by this agent that speaks with a thousand tongues. A wise head, a mind that knows not fear, and that will not be fettered, and a heart stored with "good will to man" should be the fundamental qualifications of him who is destined, through the press, to give tone and color to public sentiment. Feeling our own deficiency in this respect, it is with a trembling hand and a faltering knee that we step forward to our seat in the Editorial Chair.

The matter that flows from our pen will lodge in the columns of our sheet to meet the eyes of thousands, and pass under the scrutiny of both friend and foe. It will be regarded, and justly too, as a fac simile of our own heart, and will form the basis of that sentence that will be pronounced upon our head at the bar of public opinion. Were this, however, the only ordeal that our words are subject to pass, we should rest comparatively easy. But there is yet another and higher tribunal at which all men must appear and be justified or condemned by the words which they have spoken. It is, therefore, not without the most ardent wish, and sincere prayer that the words we employ, and thoughts we record may be the dictation of that Spirit, that is destined to bless the world, make an end of sin and triumph gloriously over all things, that we engage in the arduous labors that our station requires us to perform. Should we fail to realize this, in consequence of any momentary excitement or vexation, we hope to find forgiveness with both God and man.

The principles of our religion will always have a conspicuous place in our columns. And we shall labor with all care and patience to illustrate and enforce them by every reason and argument that we can bring to bear on the subject, both original and borrowed. With us, this is a matter of conscience and not of speculation. We desire to discharge our duty as a faithful watchman, and to clear our garments from the blood of souls. Whatever motive others may ascribe to us for our course, it matters little to us; but it is highly satisfactory to know that our Supreme Judge knows and understands our motive, and can appreciate the causes of our action.

We shall spare no pains or labor to keep up a healthy moral atmosphere so far as our words and influence may extend, ever bearing in mind this noble sentiment: "His religion cannot be far wrong whose actions are right," and his religion can never save or benefit him whose actions are wrong. Still, correct views are more likely to induce just and proper actions, and when the mind has given birth to a noble thought or a just principle, it should be as eager to adorn it with a chaste and virtuous life, as the mother is to adorn her newly born infant with fabrics of the finest texture.

Being situated upon the extreme borders of civilization, in a wilderness country, where the means and facilities for improvement in science and learning are not so available as in many other sections, it will give us great satisfaction to aid, by all laudable means in our power, in an enterprize so important as that of the education of our youth. It afford us unwearied pleasure to see the favorable results of some limited exertions not long since made in favor of education. Two flourishing schools in our little town of about eighty scholars each, conducted by a principal and an assistant in each one, with many others in various parts of the county that have sprung into being, and may be continued with increased zeal and numbers, by giving to the subject of education that attention which, we trust, it may be in our power to bestow. On the rising generation will rest the responsibility of completing the work which we have begun. How necessary, then, that the juvenile mind be fed with food to cause it to expand, flourish and become qualified, not only to meet, but to remove those obstacles that may oppose themselves to their carrying forward the designs of their parents to perfection and glory. The history of the world has left this sad and mournful truth on record, in bold relief, that where education has been a minor or secondary consideration, tyranny and oppression have been the primary objects. True light and knowledge are most fatal to all the selfish schemes of worldly policy, and will expose to view every dark and intricate spot in the science of government.

With political questions it is not our present design to interfere to any great extent. Still, when duty calls us to raise our voice upon this subject, we know our constitutional rights and privileges, and we dare to assert them. It must needs be, however, that offences come; and if our law makers will take away our rights, or deprive us of their enjoyment, (which we are unwilling to believe of them,) because we have conscientiously voted for General Taylor, and if, for the same cause, they have magnified our faults with a malicious spirit, only surpassed by that of the tragedy at Carthage Jail in '44, we must submit to it because we cannot help ourselves; and in turn, public opinion will compel them to submit to the disgrace of making us the objects of their vindictive displeasure, and shear the locks of their power like a Samson was shorn in the lap of Delilah. Generosity extended to an opponent when in your power, not unfrequently disarms him, and converts him to be your friend; but oppression, never! We feel to be content, however, let these matters turn as they may. It is our firm conviction that all earthly governments will soon be laid aside like a garment that is worn out, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our God, and He alone reign King of nations as he now does King of saints. Why, then, should illiberality exclude a portion of human beings from being shielded from a thousand disadvantages by the waning folds of worldly power?

It is our intention to spare no pains or labor to make the Guardian both interesting and useful to all classes of our citizens, by giving them the foreign and domestic news, and publishing all matter that may be offered which we may esteem interesting and beneficial to the community.

The season of emigration will soon open, and outfitting for the mountains and "gold regions" will soon commence. Our business men in all parts of the county would do well to advertise their business and prices, and if possible, put them so low as to induce new comers to postpone their purchases till they arrive at the Bluffs. "A nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling," and we would gladly encourage the home trade, if we can do it without doing injustice to the new comer and emigrant. We are willing that the trade of one part of the county should succeed and prosper just as well as that of another, provided it is honorable and just. Farmers that wish to go west can avail themselves of the opportunity of advertising their farms and property for sale,—cattle, horses, mules, wagons, &c., &c. Come then, with your advertisements and support the Guardian! Come one, come all!—Lend us your aid, and in turn the Guardian will sustain you.

It is desired that every person who feels interested in the foregoing sentiments and principles should become a subscriber to the Guardian. We shall labor incessantly to give all a word in due season, and we trust that none will feel that their money is thrown away or lost by patronizing this sheet; and it is hoped that few are so poor that they cannot, in some way, pay for the paper and have it to themselves without being under the disagreeable necessity of borrowing from their neighbors.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the Guardian on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

Notice.

The citizens of Pottawatamie county, residing on the low bottoms of the Missouri river, are hereby notified and advised, in due season, to remove to higher ground. The vast quantities of snow that have fallen here, and in the vicinity and neighborhood of the mountains, will, most certainly cause an unusual rise of these waters in the months of May and June, and perhaps sooner.

ORSON HYDE.

Kanesville, Jan. 16, 1849.

Appeared at Last!

The "Guardian," so long looked for and so long delayed, is now before the public. On our part, we were ready to have issued at the time proposed in our prospectus. But the printer, whom we engaged in St. Louis last fall, was detained there by ill health of his family until the winter sat in with all severity, and rendered a journey to this place almost impracticable. He, however, has arrived, and his face was skinned by frost and cold. But his health is good and face getting smooth again. We trust, now, that we shall be able to proceed without further interruption or delay. Send in your subscriptions, therefore, from all quarters, and your business shall be done with fidelity and dispatch.

To Emigrants.

Emigrants to this place, by the Missouri River, should land at Council Point, some three miles above Trading Point or Bellevue. Charles Bird resides there—and to him should our friends make application for information immediately on landing. This is the most eligible point on the river for the accommodation of emigrants to get removed to their friends in the various settlements in this region, and also the nearest point to this place.

Saints, Remember This!

Before you listen to tales that are like castles in the air—before you enlist in any pretended great work or mission that directs your course and energies aside from the general course and counsel of the church upon the pretence that some man has a great deal of power—high appointment in the church that the generality know nothing about; come to the High Council, or to the Twelve who are left here in charge of the church, and ask advice before you ensnare yourselves like the followers of Emmett and others. Some men proudly boast of their ability to stand against the counsel and advice of their friends, and consider it a disgrace to yield this position; but confident in their own strength, they persist in a stubborn self-will which is a sure precursor of disaster and ruin.

Single copies of the "Guardian" can be had at this office, nicely enclosed in a wrapper for the mail, to be sent away to friends and acquaintances. No extra charge for the wrapper. Friends leaving this place, would do well to purchase a number of copies. They may distribute them to good advantage.

We are always pleased to see our friends, except when they follow us into the printer's room and commence conversation with the compositors. This is very annoying to them, and a detriment to business. A printing office is no place to drop in to spend time in unnecessary conversation. If you will have the papers in due season, leave us to ourselves as much as possible, and we will give them to you. If you have actual business with the office, we shall be happy to see you there, but if you have not, leave us to ourselves.

We have just read a letter from Br. Appleby, of New Jersey, which he requests us to publish. We should be pleased to comply with his request, if the subject of his communication was not such a melancholy picture of human weakness, depravity, and woe. William Smith was excluded from the church in Nauvoo, for saying that his brethren had wronged him and sought his life. This was a slander upon the church which they would not endure. He said this to excite a sympathy in his favor that merit would never award to him. As bad as he represents the church to be, he has written two or three letters to us, confessing a part of his sins, and desireing to get back into this "wicked and abominable church:" but the church would not receive his confession, and consequently would not receive him. He would confess many things that he was not guilty of; but the church required him to confess fully the things that he was guilty of. He never wished the priesthood for any other purpose than to use it as a key to sensuality, avarice and ease. Being righteously cast out from the church, he seeks the ruin of those who did it, by trying to transfer his own sins to their account.

The people in New Jersey know him so well that he can do no harm there, neither in Philadelphia. We do not wish to disgrace the colums of our paper by admitting any of his low blackguard and vulgarity. He cannot harm you Bro. Appleby, neither the cause of our Master. A pure and noble mind will never dwell upon such scenes of depravity as he seems to take delight in.

Your letter speaks of three dollars being sent on subscription. This was a mistake. The letter contained only a one dollar note on the "Trenton Banking Company." The ten dollars sent in a former letter, mentioned in your last, was duly received. But we send you the papers.

The Gold Region and Gold Fever.

The mountains and valleys of California appear to be glittering with the precious ore. This wonderful discovery was first made by Mormons, if we are correctly informed. Indeed, the gentleman is now here that claims this honor, and to whom, we believe, it is justly due. Gold certainly has a great attractive power, and a charm that few can resist. Not a danger but that has been encountered for its sake. Not a sea or an ocean that has not been navigated, and scarcely a country that has not been explored in search of the god of this world. Had the true God of heaven been sought with half the zeal and perseverance, one might reasonably conclude that the whole human family, like an Enoch, would have been translated to heaven, and left the earth to be inhabited by inferior tribes.

The vast numbers of persons that are going to the golden mountains of California, from the Eastern, Western, Middle and Southern States, from Europe, from Oregon and from the Sandwich Islands, and also from various other parts by sea and by land, must cause pestilence, famine and war among them. Who will keep order among the miners? None, unless they can be paid for it as much as they can make by digging gold; and what company or government will pay that price to soldiers? We do not believe that any will. All classes appear to be neglecting agricultural pursuits in that region, and if sights are not seen there before one year, we shall be ready to believe that the love of money is hardly the root of all evil. They will be on the plains, in the valleys, and on the mountains like the locust of Egypt, sweeping every green thing before them. What a sea can be imagined! Famishing for a little bread while wading in glod dust. Stealing it from one another, fighting, dirking, shooting, &c., &c. Black eyes and bloody noses will be more common there than bread, at times, in our opinion. It is not that class of men, generally, that are of the most quiet and peaceable dispositions that will be draw there.

We are frequently asked: "Is it best to go to the gold regions of California?" We will answer this question by asking another. "What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

James H. Mulholland whose trial is reported on the fourth page, claimed to be a member of our church. We therefore tried him for his fellowship by the laws of the church. But sincerely, we lack evidence of his ever being a member of our body at all. There is no record of it to be found in any of the books kept by the various branches. He may have been ducked at mid-night by some brother counterfeiter, the better to carry on their dark designs. If any man will own that he baptized Mulholland, we believe that we can prove that he is connected with him in the same business.

Let all good citizens keep their eye upon this grand villain, and mark his associates and companions, for "birds of a feather will flock together." We would not recommend driving them off, but let them stop and wither under the frowns and just contempt of all virtuous and good men. The very children in the street will point out this gang, and the places where they are harbored, and when they see any one of them pass, they will say, "There goes a bogus maker:" for even the children know that we have no law here, but are dependent upon moral force to suppress such evils and put them to shame.

On our first page we insert for the benefit of our readers an article from the writings of Elder Orson Pratt. The productions of this excellent and worthy man are marked with mathematical clearness and precision. Every circumstance and item of doctrine connected with our church, seem to find a place in his fruitful and retentive memory. The church in England, from all accounts is flourishing under his watchcare and counsel. May God speed the good work in that country, and crown the labors of our brethren there with abundant success. Our peace and blessing be with them.

We must ask pardon of our readers for troubling them with so lengthy a tale as that of the "Dixborough Ghost." We were strongly solicited to publish it, as it was thought to be a true illustration of the character of some of the counterfeiting gang into whose arrangements we have of late made some inroads. It was furnished us by a friend, recently from the Mississippi River. The citizens of Dixborough, we are told, know the characters represented in this tale, and believe it to be strictly applicable to some person or persons now in Pottawatamie County. We do not pretend to be responsible for the correctness of the tale, neither for the correctness of its application: but we publish it and leave the community to judge.

The names of this gang will probably all come out to the public unless they comply with the letter of our requirements. We know them, and we know who has given them assistance, "aid and comfort" with the promise of being helped, and though some of such may not now be in the county, they will nevertheless be waited on in their time and in their season. Some of our friends have suggested the thought of keeping an eye upon our office by night, lest this gang might do it harm by way of retaliation. We are thankful for this suggestion, but had taken the hint before.

A gang of scoundrels have come here into this county, beyond the reach of law (as they think) on the extreme frontier of the states, to entail upon an innocent and an industrious community, the consequences of their criminal and disgraceful works.

We do not wish to countenance or tolerate any violent measures: yet we have been so vexed sometimes, that we could hardly refrain from wiping them out of existence, and stand the consequences, be they what they might. But it is hoped that the Legislature have had some mercy upon us here and upon our organization also, so that we can legally dispose of such matters, without resorting to any fatal extremes which we hope to be ever able to avoid.

Daniel Browitt, Ezra H. Allen, and Henderson Cox, were murdered by the Indians, as it was supposed, in the California mountains, on the 27th June last. They left the main company to search out a new road to cross the mountains. Judging from the distance they had travelled, they were murdered on the night of the second day after starting. When the main company came up on the 19th of July, they found the three bodies in a sort of grave on the mountain side. Some dozen arrows were found about the spot. Their bodies had been pierced with arrows &c They were robbed of goods and money to the amount of about $500. A purse belonging to Mr Allen was found near his grave containing 70 or 80 dollars in gold dust and 7 dollars in silver, which the Indians did not happen to find.

Mr. Browitt was 2nd Sergent of company E, of the Mormon Battalion, and respected and beloved by all who knew him. Messrs. Allen and Cox also belonged to said Battalion.

Correspondence of the Missouri Republican.

Near Fairfield, Iowa, Dec. 25, 1848.

On my return from a trip on the Upper Missouri, I took occasion to visit the Mormon settlement at Council Bluffs. I found the Saints in what they call a prosperous and happy condition; but which I, (not seeing things with an eye of faith,) call a most miserable and degraded state, considering that they claim to be—the chosen of the Lord, an example to all nations, and harbingers of the Millenium.

The generality of their dwellings, are mere huts formed of willow sticks, the interstices filled with mud—the roofs, of the same material, covered with dirt, or long grass. There are, however, some houses of more aristocratic pretensions, among which is the Temple, although this, is a perfect burlesque on their beautiful structure at Nauvoo. The Temple is built of logs, (which, from the extreme scarcity of timber, were hauled a very long distance,) and is as near as I could ascertain, about one hundred and twenty feet long by eighty wide. The fire place extends the entire width of the building, and is sufficient to render the house comfortable even during the recent extreme cold weather.

I arrived in the settlement on election day, and found the polls opened in the Temple, where the sovereigns were congregated to vote, watched by a delegation of four staunch Democrats from Fairfield, Jefferson county, who finding their political influence not of the strongest character, concluded to turn the expedition into a frolic, and pretended they had been out Buffalo hunting.

The writer of the above signs his name "Sky Scraper." We have lived at this place for the last two and a half years, and we confess that we have never yet seen, to our best recollection, one single house of the description given by this gentleman. Still, there may be some for ought we know, yet we are very well acquainted in most parts of the county. Many houses are covered with dirt on the top of the boards, or shingles, to keep out the snow which is carried by the piercing winds that prevail here in winter, through the smallest cracks and crevices: But "huts formed of willow sticks," we have not seen by the natural eye, nor yet by faith in this region. We do not intend to accuse Mr. Skyscraper of telling falsehoods; but he scrapes so high that he had not a clear view of earthly things. We would advise him, in his next circuit, to scrape a little nearer the earth and he may then see things as they are. But though we should live in huts or in caves or dens of the earth, and dress in sheep skins and goat skins, we are not aware that this would be an evidence against our being "the chosen of the Lord, an example to all nations and harbingers of the Millennium." If, by our own idleness and negligence, we had been brought down thus low, our condition would witness against us; but it must now witness against our enemies by whose persecuting and oppressing hand we have been pinched with poverty, distress, and want; and many, in consequence of it, have gone to tell the story of their wrongs in the world of spirits.

We remember to have read of One who was the chosen of the Lord, that had not even a hut made of "dirt and willow sticks"—Not even so well off as the foxes that had holes, or the birds of the air that had nests. He had not where to lay his head and yet, Mr. Skyscraper, this same Man of Sorrows will judge you and us at the last day.

Cincinnati Type Foundery.

Our printer, Mr. Gooch, says that our press, type, apparatus, fixtures, &c., which we purchased at the above establishment, were all complete, and every thing necessary was sent. They were well packed, and all came in good order.

Should any of our readers wish to purchase any thing in the line of printing materials, we take great pleasure in recommending them to Mr. Wells' establishment. We have no hesitancy in expressing our belief that any person patronizing the above concern, even if he be not a practical printer, will be dealt with honorably, as much so as if he understood every branch of the business. Our sheet must speak for the quality of the type.

The Council at the Salt Lake continued Lyman Wight as one of the Twelve. In this they did right; for they acted upon the latest evidence they had. We discontinued him at the same time and we believe that we did right also; for we acted upon the evidence that we had: But our evidence was later than theirs.

We have been applied to indirectly to use an influence among our citizens to get them to sign a petition to get Major John Miller, the Indian agent at Bellevue, removed from office, and some other gentleman appointed. We are tolerably well acquainted with Major Miller, but the other proposed candidate to supply his place, we are not acquainted with. We do not know that we should gain any thing by the change provided it should be made. We think Major Miller is true to the Government and intends to do right. But if, when the Indians steal our horses and mules, he would get a Lieutenant and some twenty men or less from the fort, and compel the Indians to restore them, it would please us much better. We do not pretend to understand his powers. But if an American Minister in China could command and order the American fleet in those waters to blockade the port of Canton, to humble the haughty pride and insolence of the Governor of that city, we should think that our American Minister to the Ottoe and Omahaw nations would have the power to make them restore stolen horses and mules, and to smart for stealing and killing our cattle. Should occasion or circumstances, hereafter, make it necessary for the exercise of any such power, we flatter ourselves that it will be promptly and effectually brought to bear.

With all good wishes to the present applicant, we feel to decline, at this time, any part in the removal of Major Miller from office.

On the Death of the Phrophet.

Joseph, Farewell! thy spirit pure,
Is now beneath the Altar crying,
Unto that God of mercies sure,
On whom thou call'dst when thou wert dying.

Thy cry is heard, and vengeance certain,
Will fall on those who caused thy death;
For God will raise the secret curtain
And blight thy murderers with his breath.

We felt thy loss! Yea, tears of sadness,
Filled every eye in Zion's land;
We would have met thy fate with gladness,
Could we have staid thy murderers hand.

But fare thee well! thy woes are ended,
And perfected at suffering's shrine;
Thy name with holy martyrs blended,
Shall in eternal glory shine.

New Theology.—A wag said in our hearing the other day, that chewing tobacco was original sin; Spitting upon a lady's floor or carpet was unpardonable sin, and staining the shirt bosom with tobacco juice was total depravity.

One day last week, two men by the name of Woolsey and Thomas, went over to the Mission House near Bellevue, and in the night, entered some apartment and took several hundred pounds of bacon, ham, &c. They had a two horse sled upon which they hauled it. The recent snows enabled a man in the employ of the Rev. E. McKenny, the superintendent or present incumbent of the establishment, to track the sled to, or near to the residence of the men suspected. These men had been in the employment of Mr. McKenny and knew the situation of the bacon. They had been kindly treated there and honorably paid for their labor. Many of our citizens have been in the service of this gentleman, and all agree that he is a kind, honorable, and benevolent man.

Mr. McKenney applied to Esquire Bigler on this side of the river for a search warrant, which was immediately issued, placed in the hands of the proper officer, and they were soon under way for the park region. When about starting from this place, they met the two men returning back to the Mission House to complete a job of work which they had contracted to perform. The officer, Mr. Brimhall, followed to the track to the house where the team belonged that hauled away the pork, made diligent search about the premises, but found no pork. They concluded to go to another house, to search. It appears there were two roads leading to the house to which they contemplated going, and the man of the house where the team was owned, was very anxious to have them take the other road from that which they were inclined to take. But they took their own road, and had not gone far before they discovered there all found the pork and took it to the Magistrate's. Then hurried over the river and arrested the two men that had returned there to work, by a process from the Indian agent, and they will probably be dealt with according to their works.

Though the man who owned the team proved himself clear, yet Mr. Brimhall thought his looks and actions were rather suspicious.

We publish the above to make an example of men who commit such depredations. We are sorry and ashamed to be compelled to know of such transactions. When will men, created in the image of God, be wise and honest? But if men will not heed the counsel and instruction of their friends, they must feel the sham and disgrace of stealing from their neighbors. We hope this will be a warning to all, that we may be saved the mortification of recording another such a disgraceful act.

Who that is a friend to the Latter Day Saints, will not take the Guardian? And who, that wishes well to Zion's cause, will not seek to extend its circulation?

We return our thanks to Messrs. Butts and Bradford, of Linden, for late papers.

State of Iowa,
Pottawatamie County, ss.

Personally appeared before me, J. G. Bigler, a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, on this fifth day of February in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, William A. Hickman, who being duly sworn according to law, deposeth and saith: That whereas certain reports have been put into circulation by some evil designed person or persons, prudicial to the character of Mr. Orson Hyde, and tat also of my own; I do hereby solemnly declare that Mr. Hyde never indused me to commit vicence upon the person of any man, either white or red. Neither has he ever tried, by day or night, in public or private, to persuade me to injure any person, neither did I ever do anything of the kind at his instance.

However much I may differ in matters of the church from Mr. Hyde, I feel that it is a duty that I owe to him, and particularly to myself and family to make the above statements; and further this deponent saith not. WILLAM A. HICKMAN.

Sworn to, and subscribed before me, at Kanesville, in Potawatamie county, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1849.

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP,
More proof that
SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP
Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

Cuyahoga Falls, O., March 16, 1848

Sir:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours,
O. B. BEEBE.

Troy, In., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

R. BATES, P. M.

Jefferson co., Ky., Aug. 4, 1848.

This is to certify that I was afflicted last Summer with ague and fever, and had then had it for three years, and during that time I despaired of ever getting well. I was induced to get Smith's Tonic Syrup; or Vegetable Febrifuge, and by using two bottles I was entirely restored to my usual good health, and have continued so up to this time; I therefore do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and the public, as the most effectual and innocent remedy that has ever came to my knowledge.

THE DIXBORO GHOST.

Being a full exposition of all the facts relating to the Dixboro Ghost, which is said to have appeared in Dixboro, Washtenaw Co. Michigan.

BY A SPECTATOR.

"Trifles light as air, are to the jealous;
Confirmations, strong as proofs of holy writ."

"There are more things in heaven, Horatio,
Than are dreamed of in thy philosophy."
SHAKSPEARE.

The public mind having for some time been somewhat excited by the "vague rumors" and "strange whisperings," of the appearance of an inhabitant of the other world, in this, our merry earth, and as news from "that bourne from which no traveller returns," must be acceptable to all, even the most skeptical, the following lucid exposition of the whole matter cannot but be interesting. The strange fact that a "Ghost" has actually appeared in the "nineteenth century," and held daily converse with flesh and blood, is, in itself, of sufficient importance to attract the notice of all lovers of the marvellous. It would be superfluous, in this place, to enter into the discussion as to the possibility or impossibility and still more, the probability or improbability of the appearance of a spiritual visitant in all the accoutrements and habiliments of mortality, as argument in such cases can go no farther than the mere expression of opinions, which seldom have the power of convincing minds disposed to doubt either the truth or falsity of a position. Therefore a plain and unvarnished statement of facts as far as they can be obtained will be given, and every one left to form his own opinions in regard to the reality of the visitation of the unhappy spirit.

To those disposed to give credence to this strange and unaccountable affair, it will be interesting to know that it is no preconcerted farce invented to impose upon their credulity —no dark legerdemain played off for deception in order to excite the minds and waken the imagination of the ignorant. To those otherwise disposed, it is for this reason more worthy a calm and dispassionate consideration than a philosophical investigation. 'Tis true, when cases of this kind occur, it is easier for the skeptic to pass it by with a sneer of contempt than to attempt to account for it on those principles for which he would be glad to be accredited. Some for fear of being thought credulous will avoid the subject, by a jest, others wrapped in the mock dignity of their own supertative wisdom, will consider it as wholly beneath their notice, while those who are so fortunate as to have a contrary opinion will be silent for some other reason equally unworthy a truly wise man. There is something truly awful in the thought, that an inhabitant of the other world, should be so effected by what has happened in this habitation of mortality, that she cannot rest among her sister spirits. Behold the unhappy spirit wandering above and dejected along the halls of its new residence,—like a mist from the beams of morn she glides from the welcome of kindred shades, refusing to receive the proffered joys of the spirit land. Still turns the panting soul to the vale of tears from which it has been ultimely driven. Perchance there were bright scenes it had loved in the sunny climes of its native earth, or more grievious still where hance it was hurried unprepared to the presence of its maker, with all its sin stained garments upon it,—who then shall say that the cause of its uneasiness is not sufficient to send it sighing back to its earthly abode! Woe, say it ery wo, wo! to the wicked, for even though their guilt shall be hid from mortal eyes, will not the spirit of the injured come back to whisper in their ears, GUILTY! GUILTY!! GUILTY!!!

But to return to the thread of our story, the facts which are connected with this strange affair as near as can be found out are as follows:

Some time during the year '28 or 29, the Messrs. ——, emigrated to the then territory of Michigan, and settled in the town of Dixboro, the site of which was then mostly covered with its primeval forests, which had not yet yielded to the innovations of the sturdy pioneer of the west. At the time of their emigration but one of them was the head of a family, and with him, his brothers made their home—and thus they lived for several years. Some time after this, the sister of Mrs. ——, then a widdow, possessed of some attractions, and these increased by some considerable property, then made a visit (with her son, an only child, then four or five years of age,) to her relations in Dixboro, where she remained for some time, during which she was a constant resident at the house of her brother-in-law. The Messrs. —— on their settling in Dixboro had purchased a small farm, and by their industry had made of it considerable improvements, and were considered by their neighbors as thriving farmes, "well to do in this world." The forest, before the stroke of their industry had vanished, and in its stead had arisen the cultivated field and the waving grain, and to the prowling beasts of the wilderness, had succeeded the lowing herd, and the face of nature was changed. But who shall unravel the mysteries of the human heart, or the secret workings of the inner man,—man, busy, restless, avaricious man—ever grasping after something beyond that which he possesses, ever reaching forward for the dim phantoms of the future, he despises the realities of the present, and looks for contentment in the dreamy uncertainties of futurity. Wealth, wealth! at thy unholy shrine do the sons of mortality kneel, at thy shrine do they come to offer up as a sacrifice, all that is lovely below, all that can render the sojourn of mortals in this vale of woe, a sojourn of happiness rather than of misery. To thee are sacrificed honesty, peace of mind, the welfare of friends and the harmony of society. Why are we troubled with the mysterious whisperings of doubting friends and credulous strangers? Why comes the murmer of untold secrets from the ripple of peaceful waters? Lake of the forest wild, bearest thou in thy bosom the tale of crime and cruelty! Have thy waves shrunk from the contaminating touch of secret murderous doings but for a moment, and then closed over the deed, hiding it from the gaze of injured justice in thy secret depths! But the strange whisperings have gone forth, and men point, with meaning look, to the lake where violence hath been concealed. Yet it may be but the tale of suspicion which the imaginations of men have conceived, and credulous minds have believed. Many there are who can feast their vicious appetites on the mysterious and marvellous, swallowing with greedy zest each meaning word and look, which, the credulous with wise shake of the head, which says, "stranger things there are, of which thou hast not heard," throw out for the gratification of kindred spirits. There is in man this eagerness for the marvellous and wonderful, this continual desire for something out of the common course of events, to gratify this taste for novelty. Time also adds its charm to the tale of other days, casting the false glare of reality around that which exists only in the brain of those who had conceived it. But the story of the Lake and its contents were forgotten and perhaps would have remained buried in the gulf of oblivion, had not the "troubled spirit" returned from its "long home," again to call to men's minds their former suspicions.

When spirits were wont to hold their revels on earth, and ever as the waning moon sank behind the western hills, to wander through the scenes they had known, while coupled with their earthly forms, the appearance of such visiters might have been no wonder-making event; but now when we no longer look for their visitations, when we have nor even a Shakespeare to create them in his fertile brain, nor bring them at his beck from the watsty deep," even the fabled appearance of one from the invisible world, must needs become the topic of a wondering age. But the statement of facts is what we have promised the gratification of the impatient and curious reader, and we therefore again turn to their narration as they have transpired.

During the stay of the lady at her sister's, Mrs. ——, one of the younger brothers had conceived a strong attachment for her, and as the attachment proved to be mutual, the consequence was that she consented to be his at no distant day. Thus the fates seemed to smile on the anticipated pleasures of the happy pair. But alas! how vain are all our calculations of worldly joy, even when we least expect it, we are cherishing that in our bosoms, as the star of a bright destiny, which is for ever to embitter the bright current of life, and render us, like Tantalus of old, miserable in the midst of surrounding happiness, which ever recedes from our eager grasp. Mrs. ——, had for some time past, been gradually settling into a gloomy and melancholy state, from which it was almost impossible to arouse her, even for a short interval, and if she did assume, for a time, her former gayity of spirits, it was evident that it was only assumed for the gratification of anxious friends. All could see that some secret care was wasting away the joyous spring of her existence; yet she complained not, nor repined but in secret. There were strange whisperings of the former infidelity of him, to whom she had given her heart's young affections, which came to her ear like the wail of far off winds, distinct though uncertain. But was there not a deeper sorrow still that haunted her sleepless nights! Was there not the untold tale of crime and cruelty in him she loved, her constant though unwelcome guest! Oh woman, trusting in the hollow promises of him thou callest thy lord, how often dost thou take to thyself, in the garb of friendship and protection, nought but thine own undoing and misery. When she was informed of her sisters promise to become the wife of her brother-in-law her unhappiness was evident to every observer, and she tried in every way to dissuade her from the fulfillment of her engagement; still finding her determined, she one day in secret told her—what, it is not our business to relate, but which at once determined her to break her previous promise, and turned her love to loathing, and her admiration to disgust. She immediately began to make preparations to return to her home in Canada, determined to remove as far as possible from a place which could no longer be otherwise than hateful to her, and from friends whom she must tremble to look upon. When this decision was made known, the brothers, surprised at her sudden resolution on a course so opposite to what, a short time before she had led them to expect, tried all their arts of persuasion, though in vain, to induce her to abandon this, to them unaccountable freak of waywardness. But still she remained firm to her resolve, until her brother-in-law was induced to resort to a more convincing argument which was, that since she had promised to marry his brother, if she refused to fulfil her promise, she would never reach Canada alive. Fear had the effect which persuasion could not, and she was finally married to the man she could not love. Up to this and some time after, the brothers held their property in common, without ever having made a division, but the younger now fearing, as he was much out of health, that he could not much longer remain an inhabitant of this world, was anxious for a division, for the benefit of his family after he should be taken away—which he finally effected a short time before his death. He left his wife, and her two children, the eldest of which was a son by her former husband, to lament his loss. His own son, however, then a child, did not long survive him—and the mother was left a second time a widow, with only her son Joseph, to console her in her deprivations. Her sister, of whom we have before spoken as Mrs. ——, had died soon after the marriage, she had in vain tried to prevent, seeking that quiet from anxious cares in another world which was denied her in this.

Thus have we given the principle events, up to the time shortly before the unhappy death of the widow, whose tragic end, and more tragic re-appearance, has given rise to these pages. When we come to this part of our story, we confess our inability, from the thick veil of mystery and doubt which is thrown around this strange affair, to do justice to the curiosity of readers, or to our subject. Although we are no believer in the appearance of ghosts or apparitions from the other world, yet when we attempt to use our philosophy, we frequently find ourselves staggered and at a loss in this unaccountable combination of facts and absurdities. Still we are disposed to believe that much which seems now mysterious and strange, by proper and patient investigation, may yet be accounted for without calling to aid any supernatural visitations or interpositions—and reason and justice tells us that if this can be done, it is far the better way. But we have promised a statement of facts as they have been elicited in the several examinations that have taken place, and not an unravelling of the most complicated and strange event that has ever fallen to our lot to narrate. Should the reader feel disposed to complain of darkness and mysticism, let him remember that we are laboring under the same dilemma; and that where the sun refuses to shine, it is hard supplying his place by the uncertain light of man's ingenuity, which is at the best but a feeble ray, illuminating but a small portion of the surrounding gloom. Many and various have been the speculations, man has invented to account for that which is beyond accounting for—at least, with the light which has, as yet, been given to assist him in his endeavors. The widow, or as she was familiarly known, Matty, continued to reside, after the death of her husband, in one of the houses on her land in the village, with her son, often subjected to the ill usage of her brother-in-law, who seemed to take every opportunity to make her life as full of trouble as possible. Avarice, and a greedy covetousness of gain, would appear to account for this ill treatment of his brother's widow, and it was the opinion of many of the neighbors, that his only study was, how he might possess himself of the property which had been possessed by his brother, and was now in possession of his unfortunate widow. It is an old saying, that, "money is the root of all evil," and in this case it seems to have been peculiarly exemplified, if we may give credence to what has been attested by many and creditable witnesses. How much of the misery of this world might men avoid, would they but consider the consequences that must arise from the harboring of this one most despicable of vices, "covetousness." Would they but learn to use, and not abuse, the goods of this world, which fortune has assigned them. Why will we be ever greedily hankering for that, which we may not live to enjoy, or which we are unable to enjoy, while we eagerly reach and crave for something still beyond our grasp, refusing to consider the happiness, which our present possessions might afford us? Avarice, avarice! how long must the sons of men be goaded on to deeds of darkness, by thy unhallowed voice! how long wilt thou continue to arm neighbor against neighbor, brother against brother, and guilt and oppression, against innocence and weakness. How long continue to fill the world with crime, fraud and injustice, making our sunny earth, a fit residence, only for monsters in human shape! Yet art thou cherished as a thing most desirable to make men happy and respectable, and he, is counted most worthy the admiration of his fellows, who has paid most assiduous court to thy hated visage, and been blessed most bountifully with thy hated offspring, wealth, pride and insolence! Then who shall say that man is blame-worthy for yielding too implicitly to thy behests, when the upright and independent, though "poor," meet with nothing but scorn and derision, or the more miserable "pity" of his fellow men.

But to return—the affairs of the widow remained as we have stated, until some time last summer, when she was taken sick, from which she never recovered. During her illness she often appeared melancholy and downcast, as if laboring under the dread of some secret danger, which it was impossible to avert, and often waked from her troubled sleep, frightened with horrid dreams for which she was unable to account. Frequently would she arouse herself from her slumber with her cries and exclamations, shuddering and exhausted, as if endeavoring to escape some eminent danger. Vague suspicions began to float among her neighbors, and former rumors which had partially died away, were revived, and some strongly suspected that foul play was being practiced in the present case of the widow—but still all was vague and undefined, and might be but the idle thoughts of the gossipping, or the invidious hints carelessly thrown out by enemies. Yet when such strange occurences take place, the multitude will account for them as seems best to suit the tastes and dispositions of the most prominent members of the multitude, and others will coincide in their decisions, whether just or unjust, and when the popular current has set out, like the tide on the strand, it is vain to oppose its course. Hence the necessity of living in such a manner as to be wholly above, even the breath of suspicion, if we would keep clear and unsuspected a character for rectitude and morality—for when we once become the subject of suspicion we know not where the evil may end.

During the illness of the widow, she was occasionally attended by Dr. D——, who affirms that her symptoms were such as he could not account for, on the general principles of any natural disorder. She was frequently in a state nearly approaching to insanity, apparently the effect of mental agitation, which during her lucid intervals was evidently intense. Yet whatever load was resting on her mind, she constantly refused to reveal the cause of her uneasiness, lest evil consequences should result from the disclosure. She complained of incessant pain in the stomach and chest, which she attributed to the medicine which had been administered to her.

As the prospect of recovery became every day less and less, the invalid became more anxious and uneasy in her mind, as if she could not be willing to die without revealing the secret whether real or imaginary, which preying upon her mind, and eating away the vitals of her life. A few days previous to her death, she requested a private interview with Dr. D. alone. When the Doctor went into her room she appeared to be perfectly rational, telling him that she had a proposition to make, which she hoped he would not refuse to consent to. Upon being encouraged to proceed, she told him that she had long been laboring under misery of concealing something which she was anxious to divulge before she died, and that as she could not expect to live much longer, she wished to reveal it to him and then have him bleed her to death, as she did not wish to survive the disclosure. Dr. D. tried, though in vain to dissuade her from her purpose, till thinking she might be laboring under some hallucination of mind, he thought it might be for the best to humor her, and accordingly consented to the horrid proposal. She then related to him, what her sister had, a number of years previous related to her, saying that her sister had known much more about the affair than herself, and that the uneasiness of her (her sister) had been the principal cause of her death. When she had concluded, she requested the Doctor to fulfil his part of the engagement, and showed him the vien she wished him to open, in order to bleed her to death. He, shocked at the idea of becoming a murderer, tried to divert her from her purpose, but she was earnest that he should do as he had promised, declaring that if he did not kill her some one else would. Dr. D. finding it useless to reason with her, took out his lancet, but after examining it pretended that it was out of order, and consequently that it would be impossible for him to perform the operation, until he could go home and obtain another instrument. On his arising to leave the room, she burst out into the most pitiable lamentations, frequently exclaiming, "they will murder, they will kill me," at the same time adjuring him not to tell them anything that he had told him. Upon his pledging himself to keep her secret, she was more calm and permitted him, though reluctantly to leave the room.

As she continued to fail rapidly in strength, both of body and mind, the anxiety of her friends increased, and many did not scruple to express their suspicions that all was not as it should be and that some thing more than a natural disorder, was carrying her to the grave. Two or three days before her death, Dr. D. was again called in to see her, but would do nothing towards alleviating her unhappy condition. She continued to labor under great mental depression, frequently in a state of delirium; as it haunted by some frightful spectre which she was compelled to carry in her own agitated bosom. Thus she continued until finally death brought her that relief which in vain had been sought for (latterly) in life.

After the death of the widow, nothing occurred to justify the suspicion which that event had excited, until the latter part of September last, when commences the most singular part of this extraordinary affair, giving to the whole more the appearance of romance, than of reality. Mr. Isaac Van Woert, as appears from his affidavit, left the State of New York about the middle of September, for the purpose of settling in Michigan, that he might follow his occupation, which is that of a mechanic to better advantage, than in the place where he then resided.

The place to which he had directed his attention, and whither he intended to proceed, was Ann Arbor; but passing through Dixboro, on his way to the former place, and seeing the frame of a large dwelling house just erected, he was induced to inquire of some one whom he met in the street, to whom the frame belonged, and was told that it was the property of Mr. J. Hawkins, who was then standing not far distant, and to him he was referred. Finding that Mr. Hawkins was willing to employ him, he immediately enqutred if there was a vacant house into which he might move with his family. Mr H. answered, pointing to the house occupied by the widow ——, previous to her decease, that there was one which he presumed he might obtain, and calling upon a young man, apparently fifteen or sixteen years of age, who was busy a few yards distant unloading astone from a cart, and who was no other than the son of the widow, enquired if the house could be had, and was answered in the affirmative. Mr. Van Woert immediately sent to recall the team with his family, which during the conversation, had passed on its way to Ann Arbor. The team returned, and the same night Mr. Van Woert with his family took up his abode in the house before mentioned. He was an entire stranger in the place, there being no one in the village that he had ever before seen, and being of industrious and steady habits, and attending more to his own affairs than those of his neighbors, he was unlikely to become very intimate with any one immediately. This, as will be seen by a reference to the deposition, was on Wednesday the 27th of Sept., and on the following Saturday, he first saw the apparition, ghost, or whatever we are disposed to call it, of the deceased widow. Now, however sceptical we are disposed to be in regard to this part of the story, we cannot but say that, at least, it is very strange, ay, passing strange! Only three days had elapsed, during which time, Mr. Van Woert had held no conversation with any of his neighbors in regard to the previous occupants of the house in which he resided, nor heard any of the rumors which had formerly been prevalent in the place. His nearest neighbors affirm that no farther acquaintance had been formed, than the mere passing of those common civilities which are due to strangers in all civilized communities. We have been thus particular in regard to this part of the subject, that none might be led to suspect that a hoax has been played off to impose upon their credulity; and lead astray the minds and imaginations of the ignorant. No one can be a more obstinate disbeliever in the re-appearance of spirits in this world, dressed in all the habiliments of their former clayey habitation, while those habiliments and that habitation, lies rottening and mouldering to its kindred dust in the grave, than the writer of these pages, yet he feels disposed, as every reasonable man must, "to give the gost her due."

Mr. Van Woert is a man worthy and respectable, and a member of the Methodist Church of good standing, and according to several eminent phrenologists who have examined his phrenological developments, would be disposed, rather to doubt, than to give credence to every passing report. Marvelousness small, with a temperament rather inclining to the "bilious." He is a nephew of the illustrious Van Woert of revolutionary memory, and has numerous testimonials of his general character for probity, and veracity, previous to his emigration to this State. In concluding, upon the truth or falsity of any report, all these circumstances must of course be taken into consideration, and we have therefore given these particulars, that every one may form his opinion as seems most consanant with his ideas of probability, and not urge or strengthen the belief in ghosts or hobgoblins—for as we have before stated, we are an entire disbeliever in every thing of the kind, and by no means disposed to revive the superstition of by-gone ages. We only wish to give all the opportunity of acting on this, as on every other occasion: I should act, rationally and naturally, by taking a middle course, avoiding either extreme, one being as foolish as the other.

We give the deposition verbatum, as given by Mr. Van Woert before W. Perry, Esq., at Ann Arbor, on the 8th day of December last, as we consider that, a more full account of all pertaining to the "re-appearance," than any which we might give in our own style, besides being less liable to misconstruction.

I, Isaac Van Woert, left Livingston county, New York, about the middle of September, 1845, for the purpose of moving to Michigan with my family, and I arrived on Wednesday the 24th day of September, and took lodgings the same night in a vacant house pointed out to me by Jackson Hawkins.

On Saturday the 27th day of September, between 7 and 8 o'clock, I was standing in front of said house, my wife had stepped into Mrs. Hammond's about two rods distant, my two little boys were in the backyard, for I had just passed through the house and was combing my hair, when I saw a light through the window; I put my hand on the window sill and looked in; saw a woman with a candlestick in her hand, in which was a candle burning. She held it in her left hand; she was a middling size women, wore a loose gown, had a white cloth around her head,—her right hand was clasped in her clothes near the waist; she was a little bent forward, her large eye had much sunken, very pale indeed; her lips projected and her teeth showed some. She moved slowly across the floor until she entered the bedroom and the door closed. I then went up and opened the bedroom door and all was dark; I stepped forward and lighted a candle with a match, but saw no one, or heard any noise, except just before I opened the bedroom door, I thought I heard one of the bureau draws open and shut.

I spoke of what I had seen several days after, and then learned for the first time, that the house in which I then lived, had been previously occupied by a widow M——, and that she died there.

The second time I saw her was in October about one o'clock in the morning. I got up, started to go out the back door; as I opened the bed-room door, it was light in the outer room; I saw no candle, but I saw the same woman that I had seen before; I was about five feet from her; she said, "don't touch me—touch me not." I stepped back a little, and asked her, "What she wanted," she said he has got it. He robbed me little by little until he kilt me!" "They kilt me, now he has got all." I then asked her, "who had it all." She said "J——, J——, yes, J——, has got it at last, but it won't do him long." "Joseph! Oh Joseph! I wish Joseph would come away." Then all was dark and still.

October.—The third time I saw her, I awoke in the night, know not what hour, the bedroom was entirely light—I saw no candle; but saw the woman—she said, "J——; can't hurt me any more. No, he can't—I am out of his reach. Why don't they get Joseph away! Oh my boy! Why not come away. And all was dark and still.

October.—The fourth time I saw her, was about 11 o'clock at night. I was sitting with my feet on the stove hearth. My family had retired and was eating a lunch, when all at once the door stood open, and I saw the same woman in the door, supported in the arms of a man whom I knew. She was stretched back and looked as if she was in the agonies of death; she said nothing, but the man said, "she is dying! she will die," &c., and all disappeared and the door closed without noise.

October.—The fifth time I saw her was a little past sunrise, I came out of the house to my work. I saw the same woman in the front yard—she said, "I wanted Joseph to keep my papers, but they are——." Here something seemed to stop her utterance. She then said, "Joseph, Joseph! I fear something will befall my boy!" Then all was gone.

October.—The sixth time I saw her was near midnight, it was the same woman standing in the bedroom. The room was again light as before, no candle was visible. I looked at my wife fearing she might awake. She then raised her hand and said, "she will not awake;" shee seemed to be in great pain; she then leaned over, grasped her bowels in one hand, and in the other held a phial containing a liquid. I asked her what it was, "The Doctor said it was balm of Gilead," she replied, and all disappeared.

October.—The seventh time I saw her I was working at a little bench, which was standing in the room and which I worked on evenings —I saw the same woman. "I wanted to tell James something, but I could not." I asked what she wanted to tell: "Oh, he did an awful thing to me." I asked her who did? "The man they would not let me have," she answered.

I asked hee what he did? "Oh, he gave me a great deal of trouble in my mind," she replied. Oh, they kilt me!" She repeated this several times over. I walked forward and tried to reach her, but she kept the same distance from me. I asked her if she had taken anything that had killed her, she answered, "Oh, I don't! Oh, I don't" the froth in her mouth seemed to stop her utterance.

Then she said, "Oh, they kilt me, they kilt me" this she repeated a number of times. I asked her "Who killed you?" "I will show you," she said. Then she went out of the back door near the fence, and I followed her. There I saw two men whom I knew, standing. They looked east down and dejected. I saw them begin at their feet and melt down like lead melting until they were entirely melted; then a blue blaze two inches thick burned over the service of the melted massr then all began bubbling up like lime slacking. I turned to see where the woman was but she was gone—I looked back again and all was gone and dark.

The next time I saw the woman was in the back yard, about five o'clock, P. M. She said, "I want you to tell J—— to repent. Oh if he would repent. But he won't, he won't, he can't. John was a bad man; and muttered something I could not understand. She then said. "Do you know where Frain's boy is?" She then asked another question of much importance and said, "Don't tell that."

I asked her if I should inform the public of the two men that killed her. She replied "There will be a time. The time is coming. The time will come," &c., several times, "But oh, their end! their end! their wicked end!" and she muttered something about Joseph, and all was dark.

The next time I saw her was on the sixth of November, about midnight in the bedroom. She was dressed in white; her hands hung down by her side, stood very straight and looked very pale, and said, "I don't want anybody here." I want nobody here; and muttered over something that I did not understand, except now and then the word Joseph. She then said, "I wanted to tell a secret and I thought I had."

In all her conversation, she used the Irish accent. Intermixed, in all her conversations, was the expression very often repeated, "they have kilt me, oh, they have kilt me," and also the name of "Joseph."

Sworn and subscribed to, before me at my office in Ann Arbor, Dec. 8, 1845.

WM. R. PERRY.

When Mr. Van Woert first related the extraordinary fact of his having seen the deceased, to some of his neighbors, as appears from his affidavit, he was ignorant of any person having died in the house in which he resided; yet from his description, those who had been acquainted with widow ——, immediately recognized her, as being the only person in the place who could answer the description. Many of those who had been most intimately acquainted with her, assert that had they been called upon to describe her, it would have been impossible to have done it with more truth and accuracy. At her second visit she expressed great anxiety for her son Joseph, as if fearing, lest he too should suffer some violence from those whom she asserts had "kilt" her. It will be remembered that Joseph was a son by her first husband, and probably for this reason, she feared that justice might not be done him.

At her fourth appearance, she was in the door supported by a man whom he knew. This scene, as it appears from the admission (since denied) of Mr. ——, had actually occurred, the night previous to her decease, and was further admitted that no living person but himself could have told it to Van Woert, as it was in the night when it happened, and no other person had been witness to it. It seems that on that night she was at the house of one of the neighbors, not far distant from her own, and in a state of delirium had left her house, followed by her brother-in-law, who overtook her just as she reached her own, when she fell back, and he caught her in his arms, and supposing that she was dying, he cried out in the words given in the affidavit, to alarm those who were sleeping in the house, but did not immediately succeed in awaking any one.

Whatever credit we may feel disposed to give to these strange occurrences, it is certain, that those living in the immediate vicinity have thought them worthy of consideration, and were so far convinced of their credibility, as to have the body disinterred, and the stomach examined by a committee of eminent physicians, and although no effects of mineral poison was detected, yet from other circumstances it appeared that she had died from poison.

Thus we have given, as far as circumstances would permit, a true statement of all the most interesting facts connected with this most singular romance of real life, leaving the reader to make his own comments, and to decide for himself whether to believe or disbelieve.

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a superropal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week. Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will reserve the right and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy, both Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the interior, and will try, by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall ride forth in His cloudy chariot, and dash in pieces the things which Nebuchadnezzar saw, that it become fine like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of Him who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth! Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and unburnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two Dollars a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United States, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

POETRY.

From the Prophet.

THE FALLEN SAVED.

Shine on Thou bright beacon,
Unclouded and free,
From the City of Zion
O'er life's troubled sea;
From our great land of promise
Whose Kingdom's begun;
Thou Star of the West,
In thy glory shine on.

Shine on thou bright Star
Of the fallen one's dream,
Thou shalt guide him to virtue
And honor again:
In the whirlwinds of passion
His bark has been tossed,
If Thou art his beacon
He cannot be lost.

Thou "stone from the mountains
Cut out without hands,"
Whose fame has gone forth,
Into far distant lands;
Thou beacon of liberty,
Justice—and peace,
Thou bright Star of Israel's,
Wronged despised race.

Guide the fallen one's bark
To its haven of rest,
Where safely are anchored
The good and the just;
No more from the calm sea
Of virtue to glide,
But stay with the righteous,
The Savior's own bride.

His heart's faithful magnet,
Retains thy loved power,
And varies not now,
In this dread trying hour;
See! the black clouds of evil
His beacon hath crossed,
And now, shouldst thou fail,
If he lose thee, he's lost.

Oh, thou hast not failed,
But dost point to the pole,
Where the loadstone of virtue
Shall save his wrecked soul;
See! his beacon shines out,
And the reefs are all passed,
In mercy's blest harbor,
He's anchored at last.

EPISTLE FROM SALT LAKE CITY.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, GREAT BASIN, NORTH AMERICA, Oct. 9th, 1848.

To Elders Orson Hyde, George A. Smith, and Ezra T. Benson, and the Saints scattered abroad, in Pottawatamie county, and neighborhood—GREETING:

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN: It has pleased Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in his infinite mercy, to grant unto us the desire of our hearts, in delivering us out of every danger, in a savage and perilous country; and permitting us to arrive once more in the goodly land; and which is to be unto us, a haven of rest, a place for our souls, a place where we may dwell in safety; free from the blasts and triumphs of all mobbing spirits, or the persecutions of our deadly foes; who have so often driven us from our homes, our habitations, our lands, our possessions, our temples, our all; and as they fondly hoped, never to be enabled to assemble ourselves again; but through the help, guidance and assistance of the Lord God of Israel, we are once more enabled to worship Him, under our own vine and bowery, where there is none to molest or make us afraid; and where we can plant, and as we humbly trust be permitted to eat the fruit of our labors; build and inhabit in peace and in safety, and once more rear a temple to His His names' honor and glory, and in which we can again sing, and pray, and praise His high and holy name, and shout with shouts that shall rend the air, Hosanna, Hosanna, to God and the Lamb, forever and ever. Amen.

On the 28th of August last, we wrote you an epistle from the Sweetwater, from which place we returned those wagons and teams, that the brethern in Iowa had kindly loaned to us, to assist us on our journey,; considering it wisdom that they should have an early start, make the best of their way while the weather and feed were in tolerable condition, so that they may reach their destination before the severity of the weather would be likely to set in upon them—while we remained at the Sweetwater with our goods and families on the ground, exposed to the keen frosty nights and storms that are so prevalent in that country.

On the 30th of August we were glad to meet with a number of the brethren from the Valley, with 47 wagons and 124 yoke of oxen, being three yoke of cattle over and above replacing the wagons and teams that we had previously sent back to the Saints in Iowa, towards filling the vacancy of the great number of cattle, that had unfortunately died on our hands, and been left by the wayside to feed the ravenous wolves and birds, that inhabit the desolate country through which we are obliged to travel. Yet, notwithstanding so inadequate assistance, our hearts fainted not; but relying on the arm of Jehovah, we re-loaded our wagons and continued our journey. On the 1st of September, going through the South Pass to the waters that flow into the Pacific, and had a miserable evening's journey of it; the next day we had a mizzling rain, and only removed about a mile in order to find feed to sustain our cattle, at night a snow storm passed over us, and on Sunday the 3d of September, the entire of the Wind River chain of mountains, was covered with snow, the weather was then severe, but afterwards cleared up with pleasant days and frosty nights, which continued with us nearly the whole of our journey, with the exception of showers which were of frequent occurrence, but never so heavy as in the States, and we considered ourselves the highly favored of the Lord. We were under the necessity of travelling from this place in small companies on account of the many narrow kanyons, crossing of creeks and scanty feed, so as to expedite our journey.

President Young arrived in the Valley on Wednesday the 20th of September, and was escorted into the city by Bishop Hunter and others, who guided them through the grain fields to the west side of the fort, and President Kimball on Sunday the 24th, in the afternoon; the meeting being adjourned for two hours to give him and his company an opportunity of being present—many of the brethren and sisters went out to welcome him into the Valley. And at the meeting in the bowery, a beautiful hymn, composed by Miss Eliza R. Snow, "welcoming President Young and Kimball to the Valley," was sung by the whole choir with a pleasing effect.

We were glad to see the crops look so well and make such a promising appearance to yield a bountiful supply of the products of the earth to sustain life, after the many frosts and destruction by crickets, as if they were going to wipe out the crops off the face of the earth. Still we are sorry to see the apathy of many in regard to saving the remainder of the crops, now they are nearly matured; and it requires all the efforts, and all the authority, and all the power that we have, to induce the people to render a sufficient attention to them and preserve them from destruction by the cattle; yet we trust by the blessing of Heaven, that we shall be able to induce the people to do their duty in this, and all other matters.

At our suggestion the brethren have entered into a combination to enclose a Big Field for farming purposes, and already there has been 863 applications for lots in it, taking up 11,045 acres of land; it is our intention to have the five acre lots next to the city, to accommodate the mechanics and artizans; the ten acres next, to be for the smaller description of farmers; the twenty acres join in succession, followed by the forty and eighty acres, which will be farthest from the city and where farmers will build and dwell, and all these different varieties will be enclosed in one common fence, which will be 17 miles and 53 rods long, and 8 feet high. And to the end that every man may be satisfied with his lot, and put away any hardness that might occur by any other method of dividing the land, we have proposed that it shall all be done by ballot, or casting lots as in the days of old, it was judged expedient among israel.

The city that we have laid out is already filled up, and we have many families that are at present without an inheritance, and many families are coming in Elders Richards and Lyman's companies. We have deemed it expedient to run off an addition to the city, commencing at the eastern line of the city, and running east as far as the nature of the land will allow for building purposes.

Not only is this addition necessary, but we are agoing to lay off a cite for a city about ten miles north of our present location, and another about ten miles to the South of our city, so that when the people flee away from the destructions and wrath that are being poured out upon the earth, by an almighty hand, they may find in the Valley of the Mountain a city of rest, a refuge from the oppressor, where the soles of his feet may no longer be compelled to run from the shafts of death at the hands of his persecutors, but where he can rest from his oppression, and be at peace.

Neither is there any more fear that there will not be a sufficiency of timber to supply the wants of the people; for, after our arrival in the Valley; a number of the bretheren signed a petition to the High Council, to grant the inhabitants the privilege of cutting down every tree, green as well as dry, that can be found within thirty miles of the Valley to be drawn into the city for city purposes, during the present fall and coming winter—which was granted; thus giving conclusive evidence that there is a sufficiency to meet the wants of the people, when used with wisdom and prudence, and much of the timber is in such a high state of preservation, that it is very likely to remain where it is, until the mountains are brought down, and the valleys exalted.

On the 6th of October, we opened our Semi-Annual Conference, and adjourned to Sunday October 8th, in order to oblige the brethren who had been in the service of the United States, who had returned to the Valley, and requested a day of recreation, which was granted to them, they had appointed the 5th for their meeting, but on account of the weather it was postponed and the brethren gave way to them, and they celebrated their return home by a dinner and the firing cannon at intervals during the day, bringing their meeting to a close at the setting of the sun.

On Sunday the 8th, Conference convened at 11 A. M., was opened by singing and prayer by Elder Taylor. After the Choir had sung another hymn, President Young resumed the business of the Conference by introducing the order of the day; when Elder Parley P. Pratt nominated President Brigham Young as the First President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, seconded by Elder Heber C. Kimball, and carried without a dissenting voice.

Elder Pratt then nominated Heber C. Kimball to be President Young's first counsellor, seconded and carried unanimously. Elder Pratt Willard Richards as his second counsellor, seconded and carried unanimously. Elder Pratt then nominated John Smith to be Patriarch over the whole church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, seconded and carried unanimously. President Young then rose, and spoke upon the principles of the priesthood and its keys, and stated that the elders of Israel were in deep mystery pertaining to Godliness, and that the mystery among the people in the days of Paul, was, that Lord Jesus Christ could take a tabernacle of flesh. President Young then showed that it was no mystery at all when once understood, and that God Almighty had an eternity of qualifications beyond the comprehension of worldly man. After speaking with much power for about an hour and a half, he moved that we release Father John Smith from his former office as President of the stake, seconded and carried. He then moved, that Charles C. Rich, take the place of John Smith as president over the church at this place. Charles C. Rich then nominated John Young as his counsellor, seconded and carried. He then nominated Erastus Snow as his second counsellor, seconded and carried.

Elder Kimball then arose and laid before the people the Quorum of the Twelve, and, after a short address, presented Orson Hyde to the congregation, and said if they were in favor of his continuing as one of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to signify it by the uplifted hand, when all hands were raised. He then presented Parley P. Pratt as one of the Twelve which was also unanimous. He then presented Orson Pratt as one of the Twelve, which was also unanimous. He then presented Lyman Wight; when President Young rose and stated that since Lyman Wight had left us, the Quorum had held on to him by faith, and he had not been cut off. He had heard of Lyman last winter being in Texas, building mills and doing very well among the Camanches, and he would soon come to us again, as he gave him his faith. President Kimball then presented him to the people as one of the Twelve Apostles, and he was unanimously voted. He then presented Wilford Woodruff as one of the Twelve Apostles, who was unanimously voted. He then presented John Taylor as one of the Twelve Apostles, who was unanimously voted. He then presented Amasa Lyman as one of the Twelve Apostles, who was unanimously voted. He then presented George A. Smith as one of the Twelve Apostles, who was unanimously voted. He then presented Ezra T. Benson as one of the Twelve apostles, who was unanimously voted. He then presented Joseph Young as the Senior President of all the Seventies, who was unanimously voted; also Levi Hancock as the second; Zera Pulsifer the third; Henry Herriman the fourth; Jedidiah M. Grant the fifth; Albert P. Rockwood the sixth; and Benjamin L. Clapp the seventh, members of the same Quorum; all of which were, in turn, unanimously voted. Charles C. Rich then rose, and stated that there was a vacancy of one in the High Council, and presented the remaining eleven, as follows: Henry G. Sherwood, Levi Jackman, Daniel Spencer, Ira Eldridge, Shadrac Roundy, Willard Snow, John Murdock, Lewis Abbott, Edson Whipple, John Vance and Abraham O. Smoot, who were voted to remain as the High Council of this stake.

Benediction by C. C. Rich, and adjourned for one hour intermission.

At 3 P. M., Conference again convened. After singing and prayer by Elder Kimball, Elder Kimball brought up the case of Bishop Whitney, and requested the people, if they wished to have him continued in office, as the Presiding Bishop of the Church, to signify it by the uplifted hand, when all hands were lifted up.

President Young then spoke for sometime upon the subject of oppression, and on the necessity of doing away with it. He said he wanted to see a community who were without a sheriff, constable, officer, or any man to attend to any such small business, as commonly came before them; and to see a community where a High Council or Bishop's court do not need to sit more than once in six months, to settle that, which every man ought to know how to settle between man and man; and to see every man and woman do right.

After transacting some local business, and entering into arrangements for the building of a Council House by tithing. President Young motioned that the Conference adjourn until next Sabbath at 10 A. M., and continue every Sabbath, in order to give an opportunity for Elder Richards and Amasa Lyman to arrive with their companies, and be with us at the closing of the Conference.

We have one important item for your serious consideration, which is in relation to bringing the poor to this place. What method, or what means do you suggest to be the most beneficial, or what will operate to the greatest good in removing those Saints who are poor, who have been robbed and driven from their all, and who have not the means to convey themselves away from a sickly land, from a place where they are in daily fear from their enemies, and who are desirous of coming to this place, and serving the Lord with full purpose of heart, and living as Saints in very deed. Those who humbly devote themselves to the service of the Lord, and who wish to magnify the holy calling which has been placed upon them as the Saints of the Most High God. We believe that the best we can do as a community, already arrived at this place; is, to use all our united strength in raising grain to maintain the present community, and all the emigration that may come; and when this is done, our efforts and property we design to be devoted to assist the emigration.

We also think it will be wisdom for the Saints to build their wagons at the Bluffs, as timber for those purposes is scarce here; and the iron will also be needed here, and be worked up for many purposes, and we think it will be equally as convenient a method to bring it, as it would to carry it in the wagons. For the next season our cattle will be much needed in the Valley to cultivate the ground, and to be used in making the fence round the big field, and other purposes.

We think that the brethren will not have occasion to bring any more breadstuff than will last them through their journey, as we consider that we shall be able to raise all they may want on their arrival; but they may instead thereof, bring clothing, dry goods, olive oil, groceries, sheep, cows, young cattle, turkies, geese, ducks, doves, pea fowl, ginuea fowl, bees, and seeds of all kinds, not forgeting potatoes, beets, turnips, carrots, parsnips, cabbage, lowland and upland rice, chesnuts, hickory nuts, peanuts, black and sweet locust, and all flowering and shade trees; fruit trees of all descriptions, flowering shrubs, and all manner of flower seeds and vegetables, that will please the eye or gladden the heart of man, as it is our desire to build a beautiful city to the Lord, which shall soon become the pride and ornament of the whole earth.

We wish you to send by Elder Howard Egan, the carding machine and fixtures, so that it may be placed in a suitable building, and at as early a time as possible for the convenience of the brethren. We wish him to start as early as he can, that he may arrive here by the time of sheep shearing.

We send a mail in charge of Elder Egan, from which you can obtain intelligence in regard to many items that may have been overlooked in this epistle to you.

October 11th, 1848.

Since writing the foregoing, we are rejoiced to announce the arrival of Elder Amasa Lyman, on the evening of the 10th, in good health, a few of his company have also arrived, and we anticipate they will all be here in the course of the ensuing week.

We also cheerfully wish to inform you, that better melons, squashes, beets, carrots, parsnips, onions, and turnips never grew any where. Elder Kimball has had a squash sent to him weighing 74 pounds, and turnips frequently weigh eight pounds and upwards, and we anticipate that we shall be able to raise grain sufficient, not only to sustain the present inhabitants, but all the future emigration to this place. When the emigrants come, we wish them to bring, in addition to what we have written above, a wagon load of the best glass; steel of all kinds, saw mill, cross cut, circular, and other saws; all kinds of files, plenty of scythes and sickles, and paper and ink.

We are also glad to report the arrival of Elder Addison Pratt from the Pacific Isles, in company with 13 wagons from San Francisco, with most of the brethren of the battalion that were remaining behind; and we are daily expecting 15 wagons more, with a portion of the Saints that went out from New York in the Brooklyn, and who have tarried sometime in the neighborhood of San Francisco.

May grace and peace be with you—bless you in all your laudable undertakings, open the way for your escape to a land where you can dwell in peace and safety and be prepared for His coming and kingdom.

BRIGHAM YOUNG,
President of the Church of Jessus Christ of Latter-day Saints.
THOMAS BULLOCK, Clerk.

Meeting of the High Council.

KANESVILLE, Jan. 6, 1849.

The High Council of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, assembled this day at 10 o'clock A. M., in this place, being the day of their regular session.

The Council being duly organized, the clerk read the notice that had been served upon Mr. James H. Mulholland, citing him to appear there for trial:

NOTICE.

BRO. JAMES H. MULHOLLAND, Sir: You are hereby notified to appear before the High Council of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, on Saturday, the 6th day of January next, and answer to the following charges, to wit: For bringing, or causing to be brought, or aiding or abetting in the same, a press and fixtures with the intention of making and putting into circulation a spurious coin.

Charge preferred by Orson Hyde, this 30th day of December, 1848.

Done by order of the Council,
E. M. GREEN, Clerk.

The parties were all present. Defendant said he was ready for trial, but should object to Mr. Hyde's speaking before the witnesses were heard. Mr. Alred, President of the High Council, said it was the usage of the body to hear the plaintiff state the case, and set it forth to the understanding of the Counsellors. Counsellor Harris, confirmed the statements of Mr. Alred, and moved that Mr. Hyde be heard in the declaration. Carried.

Mr. H. then called upon Josiah Merritt, Esq., to know if a charge thus preferred would be actionable as slander in any legal or judicial court of the State. Mr. Merritt said, that so far as related to a charge being preferred to the Council or authorities of any religious church against any of its members, it was not an actionable case. Mr. Alred said he wished to give plain statements of facts. Asked the defendant if guilty or not guilty. Answer. Not guilty.

Mr. Hyde then opened the case before the Council, stating that sometime about the 20th of October last, he became satisfied of the existence of a material wrong at the Ferry, which, if undisturbed, would prove a serious injury to the community. He made more and more inquiries—circumstances began to develop themselves more clearly, and at length, facts came to light. Said that Mulholland did admit to him in conversation at one time, that a press was in the country—that they did not intend to put their money in circulation here, but to box it up and send it to St. Louis. To this, Mr. H. replied, that it mattered not to him where they intended to send it, whether to St. Louis, to China or to Kamskatka, it was enough for him to know that there was a disposition here to make the accursed stuff. Mr. H. said that in this private conversation he requested Mulholland to resign up to him the press, dies, &c. M. said, what will you do with them if I should be disposed to deliver them up to you? Mr. H. replied that should he be disposed to take a sledge hammer and break the press into pieces before the public he would do so. Mulholland said, have you any knowledge what this machine cost? Mr. H. said no, and that he cared less. In this case, he said, dollars and cents were not to be considered; said also, that he had heard of such a thing costing a man his life. Mulholland then said that he would not have any more to do with it, and said that he could live without it. (This proved that he had had something to do with it.) Mr. H. assured him that he could not live with it. This gave Mulholland the alarm, and he said that Mr. H. had threatened his life. At the close of the private conversation, Mr. H. said that Mulholland plead for mercy. Mr. H. told him to give the press, and dies to him, and abandon the unlawful and disgraceful business, and act like a man, and it should be granted him. At this he smiled, and turned away, saying: Elder Hyde, you are a hard case.

Mr. Drummond then said to the Council, that an impression was out, that there was a wrong somewhere, and if Mr. Hyde had any witnesses he wanted to hear them.

Mr. Hyde called on Mr. Powers to testify. Some objection was made on account of his not being a member of the church. The Council overruled the objections on the ground that this was a peculiar case in which the interest of every citizen was concerned.

Mr. Powers then stated, that in August last he was in Nauvoo, and was there told by William Clapp, that a bogus press had gone to the Bluffs, and that he wanted to get some of the first money that was coined. Afterwards he was told by another man that he had packed a press and fixtures and sent them to the Bluffs by John M. Beideman. Said Clapp came up here, and he (Powers,) hired a passage with him. Mr. Mulholland asked the witness if he ever knew him to have any bogus money or a press. Said he never did. Do you know that Mr. Beideman brought up such a press? Said that he did not, only the man told him so.

Mr. G. A. Smith, called on: Said he knew nothing about the press—had advised Mulholland, if there was any thing of the kind, to be cautious, remove it, and quit the business. Said he did not acknoledge it, neither deny it, but from the conversation, drew the conclusion that such a thing as a bogus press was in being not far off. Said that Mulholland told him he never made or passed a bogus dollar.

William D. Huntington and Joseph Kelting were called on, but their testimony was unimportant. Kelting however, said that Mulholland told him that he had partly acknowledged to Hyde something about the press to see what he could draw out of him. Mr. H. said that Mulholland did tell him that one piece of money had been coined in that press. Mulholland said it was not finished, if I told you it was, I told you a lie, I had never seen it. (Query: If he had never seen it, how could he say that it was not finished? or how could he say that one piece had been coined?) Mr. Hyde said he would not tell how he knew it. Said that Catholic Ministers sometimes learned things that they did not feel at liberty to disclose, at least names. So, said he, it is with me. Said he knew this press was, or recently had been at the Ferry. He knew the shop where it was deposited, and the very corner where it stood, and the big box that covered it, and he knew who were engaged in it, and he knew that Mulholland was engaged in it. Said that he was not at liberty, at that time, to say whether the spirit, an angel or a man told him, but that he might tell hereafter, when circumstances should release him from his obligation. Said that he had told the truth, but the Council could act upon the testimony or throw it out, as they thought proper under the circumstances.

Mr. H. said further, that some of the party had expressed a willingness to give up the press and fixtures, but were afraid that their throats would be cut by the avenging hands of others of the party.

Said he replied to them, that for fear your throat will be cut for doing a righteous deed, you will continue your unlawful and disgraceful acts, and thereby subject the whole of this community to have their throats cut. Mr. Mulholland said that he did not think it necessary to introduce any witnesses. He should have something to say in his proper time. Counsellors Richards and Clawson summed up the case and spoke upon it pro and con to considerable length. After this, Mr. Mulholland said that Mr. Hyde had told some of their talk, but not all. Said that Mr. Hyde told him that he, G. A. Smith and E. T. Benson had a bogus press, all but the big screw, and wanted to know if they could get his if it would fit. [Laughter.] Mr. Hyde thought the wit of an Irishman was not the truth of a Saint. Said that Mr. Mulholland's statement was untrue. He did say that in consequence of a parial promise made by some of the parties to deliver up the press, he had sent Messrs. Smith and Benson with a team, and he thought they could get all the press or was in hopes of it, except the big screw which we believed him to be in charge of, and he was desired to deliver up this part also if he had it.

Pres James Allred made some remarks and then gave his decision as follows. I believe the testimony of these my brethren; to wit, Orson Hyde and Geo. A. Smith, and my decision is that Mr. Mulholland be cut off from this church, and not come into it again until he delivers up that press, or that portion of it that is under his controll, or that he use the same diligence in so doing, that he has in covering it up, and that to the satisfaction of the church and counsel here.

The decision was sanctioned by the counsel and all the assembly.

CLIPPINGS.

THE LATE GALE IN FLORIDA.—We copy the following account of the destruction caused by the recent gale on the Gulf coast Florida, from the Tallahassee Sentinel of the 24th of December. We have already given several statements of the damage done by the storm, accounts of wreck of vessels, &c., but this contains fuller particulars than any yet published.—[N. O. Delta.

The schooner Atlanta arrived at St. Marks last Saturday night from Manatee. From one of the passengers, Mr. Henry Wells of this city, we have some melancholy details of the loss of life and destruction of property occasioned by the storm of the 25th ult. on the Florida coast. The ruin of Tampa was much more complete than had been supposed. Only four house were left standing in the village; all the government stores, &c., were a total loss. The water is said to have risen almost instantaneously. There was no recession, but wave was piled on wave, and whole streets swept of houses as it were in a moment. Few of the inhabitants were left with even a change of clothing. A very large iron safe belonging to government, in the Commissary's store-house, was swept for some distance, and found lodgment in what in dry times is the bed of a brook. A strong wooden house, by the mere force of the wind, was taken from its foundations and carried several rods and set down again unharmed. Mr. Wells thinks that in some places the water must have risen forty feet above low water mark. The spray was driven with such force as to impregnate ponds five miles in the interior. Even a running brook that distance inland, which he tasted ten days after, was brackish. Probable a more furious tornado never blue in this latitude, but fortunately its track was confined, to a narrow scope. Key West, on the south escaped it altogether, and so did Cedar Keys on the north, where, we are told, the wind blew in a direction precisely opposite to the track of the tornado, which blew the hardest from the North-east.

Mr. Wells thinks that the cane crops at Manatee were not very materially injured. They were blown perfectly prostrate, and the blades being torn to ribbons, they look badly; but still he does not think the yield will be diminished more than ten per cent, by the gale of the 25th. There was another and quite a severe one on the 12th inst., which the Atlanta encountered in the neighborhood of Clear Water Harbor. The following marine disasters are reported: The smack Charleston went down in the storm of the 25th, off Charlotte Harbor; one man was lost; the rest got ashore. The smack Huron drove ashore on the 25th, near the entrance of Clear Harbor, and was about being got off, when the gale of the 12th knocked her to pieces; the crew escaped by climbing trees. The schooner Charles and Edward went ashore between Clear Water and Anchlote Keys, and it is supposed will be got off without much damage.

We now come to the most melancholy effects of the storm of the 25th yet learned. The sloop Mary Virginia, Capt. John Tallmadge, sailed from St. Marks for Manatee about the 20th of last month. As passengers, she numbered Mr. Wm. Gamble, son of Col. John Gamble of this city; Mr. Bushnell, resident on one of the Keys, but lately of Illinois; M. Butler, a lady under his protection. There was also on board a sailor, (name not known, and a negro man belonging to Dr. Braden of Manatee. After the storm of the 25th, such anxiety was felt respecting her, and the Atalanta brings intelligence of her wreck and the undoubted loss of all on board. The Alanta found the Mary Virginia near Anchlote Keys, on her beam-ends—her boom off, rudder and topmast gone, and the body the lady—Mrs. Butler—in the cabin. The Atalanta made search for the bodies of the rest of the unfortunates, but could not find them afterwards she lay by the Mary Virginia in hopes of righting her, but the weather was rough and the storm of the 12th came on, in which she went to pieces, and the Atalanta had hard work to save herself. This is melancholy, and we most deeply sympathise with Col Gamble and family in the loss of a son and brother under such afflicting circumstance. Wm. Gamble was, we think, about 22 years of age—a young man of liberal education and high moral and religious character. Mr. Bushnell has, we think, a family residing on the coast or Keys, and relatives in Belvidere, Illinois. Capt. Tallmadge has, we believe, a family residing at Manatee. Mr. Bushnell must have perished in sight of his home.

VELOCITY OF CANNON SHOT.—From an extended series of experiments made at the Washington Arsenal with the ballistic pendulum, by Capt. Mordecai, of the Ordnance Department, it has been determined that the velocity of a thirty-two pound shot varies from 1200 to 1900 feet per second, or nearly 20 miles per minute. The velocity of the electric wave along the telegraphic wire is nearly 200,000 miles per second, compared with which the speed of the cannon ball is almost quiesence.

The members of Congress from the Southern States have held a meeting to consider the best course to be persued in regard to the government of the territories. Gov. Metcalf presided and Mr. Venable acted as secretary. Mr. Morse of Louisiana opened the proceedings in a speech of some length and several others followed.

A committee of one from each of the Southern States was appointed to mature and bring forward a report upon the subject, and submit resolutions to meet the exigency.

Genius will never be neglected by the public unless it neglects itself; it must not disdain the humble alliance of industry. How can it expect encouragement, unless its existence can be manifested by performance? The surest evidence of superior talent is, that it forces itself into notice in spite of adverse circumstances, that it makes a road where it finds none.

It is stated that the segars smoked in the United States amount to $10,000,000 annually. This expense, great as it is, is incurred by boys and young men principally, and would support 50,000 of their number in the process of obtaining a liberal education, at $200 dollars per annum.

There can be nothing much more unpleasant to a lady than the accidental fall of a false ringlet in the presence of her lover.

A witness spoke several times during his testimony of occurrences about the time of his birth, when a surly Judge interrupted him—"Do you mean to say that you can relate occurrences at the time of your birth, from your recollection." The laugh which began against the witness turned upon the judge as the former replied—"Why, sir, I cannot exactly say that I remember every particular, but I can assure your honor that I was there!"

"Ephraim," said Simon, what does a young fellow look like while gallanting his sweetheart through a shower?" "Why," replied Ephraim, looking at his boots, "he has very much the appearance of a rain-beau."

KEEN REPORT.—Atterbury, Bishop of Rochester, alluding to a bill brought into the House of Lords, said "He had prophesied that the bill would be attempted the present session, and he was sorry to find that he had proved a true prophet." Lord Coningsby desired the House to remark that one of the right reverends had set himself up as a prophet; but for his part he did not know what to liken him to, unless to that furious prophet, Balaam who was rebuked by his own ass.

The Bishop replied—"Since the noble Lord has discovered in our manners such a similitude, I am well contented to be compared to the prophet Balaam; but, my lords, I am at a loss how to make out the other part of the parallel. I am sure I have been reproved by nobody but his lordship." A burst of laughter followed this castigation.

LINE OF DEMARKATION.—An amusing incident occurred a few days since between an old (white-haired) Whig and a Parson somewhat tinctured with Locofocoism, that is worth relating. The Parson called upon the Whig for a donation to the church. The Whig responded, "I am in such good humor about the election, just name your sum and here it is." The sum was named and given. "Now," says the Whig, "I'll tell you why I am in so pleasant a humor. Just look how the Lord has drawn the line between corruption and honesty. Mr. Polk is President of the United States on Saturday the 3d of March, and then goes out of office. The Lord is President on Sunday, and on Monday he will hand the Government over to honest Old Zack." The parson pocketed the cash more pleasantly than he did the remark.—[St. Louis Republican.

The Question Answered, WAS JOSEPH SMITH SENT OF GOD!

BY ORSON PRATT, OF ENGLAND.

[Concluded.]

Sixth.—The perfect agreement between the prediction of Isaiah (chap. xxix.) and Mr. Smith's account of the finding and translation of the Book of Mormon is another collateral proof that he was divinely commissioned. Mr. Smith testifies that the plates from which that book was translated were taken out of the ground from where they were originally deposited by the prophet Moroni; that the box containg them was composed of stone, so constructed as to exclude in a great degree, the moisture of the soil; that with the plates he discovered a Urim and Thummim, through the aid of which he afterwards was enabled to translate the book into the English language. Soon after obtaining the plates, a quantity of the characters were correctly transcribed, and sent to some of the most learned individuals in the United States, to see if they could translate them. Among the rest, they were presented to Professor Anthon, of New York city. But no man was found able to read them by his own learning or wisdom. Mr. Smith, though an unlearned man, testifies that he was commanded to translate them, though the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, by he aid of the Urim and Thummim, and that the Book of Mormon is that translation. Now, Isaiah says to Israel, "Thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hth a familiar spirit out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust."

Who cannot perceive the perfect harmony between Isaiah's prediction and Mr. Smith's testimony! Isaiah, as if to impress it upon the minds of those who should live in future generations, gives no less than four repetitions of the same prediction in the same passage, informing us, in the most definite language, that after Israel should be brought down, they should speak in a very familiar manner "out of the ground," and whisper "low out of the dust." Mr. Smith has been an instrument in the hands of God of fulfilling this prediction to the very leter. He has taken "out of the ground" the ancient history of one half of our globe—the sacred records of a great nation of Isael—the writings of a remnant of the tribe o Joseph, who once flourished as a powerful and great nation on the western hemisphere. The mouldering ruins of their ancient forts, and towers, and cities proclaim their former greatness, in mournful contrast with their present sad condition. They have been brought down like all the rest of Israel: but the words of their ancient prophets "speak out of the ground," and "whisper out of the dust" to the ears of the present generation, revealing in a very "familiar" manner the histey of ancient America, which before was entirely unknown to the nations. Isaiah says, that Israel should "speak out of the ground." Mr. Smith says, that he obtained the writings of Joseph from "out of the ground." Now if Mr. Smith had professed that he had got his book as Swedenborg obtained his, or as the Shakers obtained theirs; that is, if he had professed to have obtained this book to usher in this last dispensation in any other way but "out of the ground," we should have reason to suppose him a deceiver, like Swedenborg and thousands of others. Again Isaiah says, that "the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying; Read this, I pray thee: and he saith I cannot; for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men: Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." All this was fulfilled before Mr. Smith knew that it was so clearly predicted by Isaiah. He sent the "words of a book" which he found as before stated, to Professor Anthon. But it was a sealed writing to the learned professor—the aboriginal language of Ancient America could not be deciphered by him. He was as much puzzled as the wise men of Babylon were to interpret the unknown writing upon the wall. Human wisdom and learning, in this case, were altogether insufficient.—It required another Daniel, who was found in the person of Mr. Smith. What a marvellous work! What a wonder! How the wisdom of the wise and learned was made to perish by the gift of interpretation given to the unlearned! If the Book of Mormon is what it professes to be—a sacred record—then it must be the very book mentioned in Isaiah's prediction; for the prophet Nephi, one of the writers of the Book of Mormon, who lived upwards of 2400 years ago, informs us that their writings should be brought to light in the last days, in fulfillment of Isaiah's prediction; he also delivers a prophecy in relation to the same book, and predicts many events in connexion therewith, which are not mentioned by Isaiah. We here give an extract from this prediction, as also his quotations from Isaiah:

Behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles, yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles, and also the Jews, both those who shall come upon this land, and those who shall be upon other lands; yea, even upon all the lands of the earth; behold, they will be drunk with iniquity, and all manner of abominations; and when that day shall come, they shall be visited of the Lord of Hosts, with thunder and with earthquake, and with a great noise, and with storm and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire; and all the nations that fight against Zion, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision; yea, it shall be unto them, even as unto a hungry man, which dreameth, and behold he eateth, but he awaketh and his soul is empty; or like unto a thirsty man, which dreameth and behold he drinketh, but he awaketh, and behold he is faint, and his soul hath appetite; yea, even so shall the multitude of all the nations be that fight against mount Zion: for behold, all ye that do iniquity, stay yourselves and wonder, for ye shall cry out, and cry, yea, ye shall be drunken, but not with wine, ye shall stagger, but not with strong drink: for behold, the Lord hath poured upon you, the spirit of deep sleep. For behold, ye have closed your eyes, and ye have rejected the prophets, and your rulers, and the seers hath he covered because of your iniquity.

And it shall come to pass, that the Lord God shall bring forth unto you the words of a book, and they shall be the words of them who have slumbered. And behold the book shall be sealed: and in the book shall be a revelation from God, from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof. Wherefore, because of the things which are sealed up, the things which are sealed shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness and abominations of the people. Wherefore the book shall be kept from them. But the book shall be delivered unto a man, and he shall deliver the words of the book, which are the words of those who have slumbered in the dust; and he shall deliver these words unto another; but the words which are sealed, he shall not deliver, neither shall he deliver the book. For the book shall be sealed by the power of God, and the revelation which was sealed, shall be kept in the book until the own due time of the Lord, that they may come forth; for, behold, they reveal all things from the foundation of the world unto the end thereof. And the day cometh that the words of the book which were sealed, shall be read upon the housetops; and they shall be read by the power of Christ: and all things shall be revealed unto the children of men, and which ever have been among the children of men, and which ever will be, even unto the end of the earth. Wherefore, at that day when the book shall be delivered unto the man of whom I have spoken, the book shall be hid from the eyes of the world, that the eyes of none shall behold it, save it be that three witnesses shall behold it, by the power of God, besides him to whom the book shall be delivered; and they shall testify to the truth of the book, and the things therein. And there is none other which shall view it, save it be a few, according to the will of God, to bear testimony of his word unto the children of men: for the Lord God hath said that the words of the faithful should speak as it were from the dead. Wherefore, the Lord God will proceed to bring forth the words of the book; and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good, will he establish his word; and wo be unto him that rejecteth the word of God.

But behold, it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall say unto him to whom he shall deliver the book, take these words which are not sealed, and deliver them to another, that he may shew them unto the learned, saying: read this, I pray thee. And the learned shall say, bring hither the book, and I will read them: and now, because of the glory of the world, and to get gain, will they say this, and not for the glory of God. And the man shall say, I cannot bring the book, for it is sealed. Then shall the learned say, I cannot read it. Wherefore it shall come to pass, that the Lord God will deliver again the book and the words thereof, to him that is not learned; and the man that is not learned, shall say, I am not learned. Then shall the Lord God say unto him, the learned shall not read them, for they have rejected them, and I am able to do mine own work; wherefore, thou shalt read the words which I shall give unto thee. Touch not the things which are sealed, for I will bring them forth in mine own due time: for I will shew unto the children of men, that I am able to do mine own work. Wherefore, when thou hast read the words which I have commanded thee, and obtained the witnesses which I have promised unto thee, then thou shalt seal up the book again, and hide it up unto me, that I may preserve the words which thou hast not read, until I shall see fit in my own wisdom, to reveal all things unto the children of men. For behold, I am God; and I am a God of miracles; and I will shew unto the world that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and I work not among the children of men, save it be according to their faith.

And again it shall come to pass, that the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him, forasmuch as this people draw near unto me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear towards me is taught by the precepts of men, therefore, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people; yea, a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid. And wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord. And their works are in the dark; and they say, who seeth us; and who knoweth us? And they also say, surely, your turning things upside down, shall be esteemed as the potter's clay. But behold, I will shew unto them, saith the Lord of Hosts, that I know all their works. For shall the work say of him that made it, he made me not? Or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, he had no understanding? But behold, saith the Lord of Hosts, I will shew unto the children of men, that it is not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest. And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book; and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness; and the meek also shall increase, and their joy shall be in the Lord; and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. For assuredly as the Lord liveth, they shall see that the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off; and they that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought. Therefore, thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of my hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy one of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel. They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.

Here it will at once be perceived that the Book of Mormon is actually the book predicted by Isaiah, or else it must be an imposture. The book mentioned by Isaiah was to have every characteristic which seems to accompany the Book of Mormon. Did Isaiah predict that the "deaf should hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind see out of obscurity, and out of darkness?" It has been fulfilled by the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Did Isaiah say that in the day his predicted book should speak out of the ground, then those who "erred in spirit should come to understanding, and they that murmured should learn doctrine?" It has been fulfilled to the very letter through the instrumentality of the Book of Mormon: tens of thousands of honest men, who erred in spirit because of the doctrines and precepts of men, have come to understanding. Many points of doctrine which had been in controversy for ages are made perfectly plain in the Book of Mormon; hence those who have murmured because of the darkness and obscurity thrown over the scriptures by human wisdom and learning, have "learned doctrine." Did Isaiah prophecy that when the predicted book should make its appearance, that then "the house of Jacob should no longer be made ashamed, neither should the face of Jacob any more wax pale?" The Book of Mormon has come declaring that the time is at hand for the gathering of the house of Jacob no more to be scattered. Did Isaiah predict that in the day of the revelation of a certain book "the terrible one should be brought to nought, the scorner be consumed, and all that watch for iniquity be cut off;" and finally that "all the nations who should fight against Mount Zion, should pass away as the dream of a night vision, and be destroyed by earthquake and the flame of devouring fire?" The Book of Mormon comes testifying that the hour of these judgments is at hand. And finally there is no circumstance mentioned by Isaiah, connected with the revelation and translation of the book he mentions, but what is connected with the Book of Mormon. If Joseph Smith was an impostor and wished to palm himself off upon the world as the great prophet who was to usher in the preparatory dispensation for the coming of the Lord, how came he to discover all these minute particulars contained in Isaiah's prophecy, so as to so exactly and perfectly incorporate in his great scheme of imposture each and every one of them! If this illiterate youth was a deceiver, he has far outstretched all the learned divines or impostors for the last eighteen hundred years—he has made his great and extended scheme to harmonize in every particular, not only with the ancient gospel but with the ancient prophecies, and this, too, so perfectly, that no one can detect the delusion. Reader, does not such a scheme savor very strongly of the truth? Does it not require a greater effort of mind to disbelieve such a scheme than it does to believe it? If such a scheme cannot be credited, where is there a scheme that can be credited! Can you find a scheme more perfect than the one introduced by Mr. Smith! Can you find one equal to it in perfection? Can you find one that contains the one-twentieth part of the truth which his system contains! If, then, you doubt the authority of Mr. Smith, how much more ought you to doubt the authority of every other man now on the earth! If Mr. Smith's perfect scheme should be rejected surely all other schemes or doctrines, which can be shown to be ten times more imperfect, should also be rejected. If any are to be received, surely that one should be received which seems to contain all the elements of a true doctrine, and in which there cannot be detected the least evidence of imposture. To invent a scheme apparently every way suited to the last dispensation or preparatory work for the second advent of our Lord—to have that scheme agree in every minute particular with the endless circumstances and numberless events predicted by the ancient prophets, bespeaks a wisdom far superior to that of man: it bespeaks the wisdom of God. This endless train of circumstances—all harmonizing—all combining—all concentrating as it were into one focus—carries with it such irresistable evidence of truth that it is almost impossible for the careful investigator to reject the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. Like investigating the works of nature, the more he examines the more he perceives the wisdom of the Deity stamped upon every sentence.

Seventh.—According to the Book of Mormon, all of the great western continent, with all the valleys, hills, and mountains, riches and resources pertaining thereunto, was given to the remnant of Joseph, as their "land of promise." The Almighty sealed this covenant and promise by an oath, saying that the land should be given unto them forever. The western world, including both North and South America, is the "land of promise" to the remnant of Joseph, in the same sense that the land of Palestine is a promised land unto the twelve tribes of Israel. Now this testimony of the Book of Mormon agrees most perfectly with the prophetic blessing placed upon the head of Joseph by the patriarch Jacob, who just previous to his death, called together his sons and predicted upon each what should befall them or their tribes "in the last days." The blessing upon the tribe of Joseph is as follows: (Genesis xlix chap.) "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall: the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him; but his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob. (from thence is the shepherd the stone of Israel:) even by the God of thy farther, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb: the blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors, unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren." In the preceeding chapter, when blessing the two sons of Joseph, he says, let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth." And again, his seed shall become a multitude of nations." From these predictions it will be perceived that Jacob prevailed with God, and obtained a greater blessing in behalf of the tribe of Joseph than what Abraham and Isaac, his progenitors, had obtained. While the blessing of Jacob's progenitors was limited to the land of Palestine, Joseph had confirmed upon him a blessing of a country above, or far greater than Palestine—a country at a distance, represented by "the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills." Some of the "branches" of the "fruitful bough" of Joseph were to spread far abroad from the parent tree—they were to "run over the wall" of the mighty ocean—they were to "become a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth." There, among the "everlasting hills," they were to be "made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob" It was to be there, among the "multitude of nations" of the posterity of Joseph that the "shepherd—the stone of Israel" was to establish a kingdom, which should break in pieces all other kingdoms; and "fill the whole earth."

In America there is a "multitude of nations," called by us "Indians." These Indians evidently sprang from the same source as is indicated by their color, features, customs, dialects, traditions, &c.; that they are of Israelitish origin is also evident from their religious ceremonies, their language, their traditions, and the discovery of Hebrew inscriptions, &c. If America is not the land given to a branch of Joseph, where, or in what part of that globe shall the tribe receive the fulfilment of Jacob's prediction! where if not in America, has a land been peopled by a multitude of the nations of Joseph! Can a multitude of the nations of Joseph be found in Europe, Asia, or Africa, or in any of the adjoining islands! If not, then America seems to be the only place where that great prediction could receive its accomplishment. The Book of Mormon testifies that America is "the land of Joseph," given to him by promise. Is not this an additional evidence that Mr. Smith was sent of God! If Mr. Smith was an impostor, how came he to discover that the tribe of Joseph was to be favored so much above all the other tribes of Israel: Perhaps it may be replied that it was easy to discover that from the scriptures: but we ask, why did not Swedenborg, Wesley, Irving, or some of the other impostors of former times make this scriptural discovery, and incorporate it in their pretended dispensations! It would be, at first, thought far more natural to suppose the American Indians to be the ten lost tribes of Israel; indeed, this is the opinion of many of the learned at the present day. Why did not this modern prophet if a deceiver, form his deceptive scheme more in accordance with the opinions of the learned? or why should he choose a remnant of the tribe of Joseph to people ancient America! Out of the twelve tribes of Israel, why did he select only a branch of one tribe to people that vast continent! All can now perceive why the Book of Mormon should profess to be the history of a remnant of one tribe, instead of being the history of the ten tribes. All can see, why America should be represented as a promised land to Joseph, instead of being given to Reuben, Simeon, or any of the other tribes. All can now see, though it was not seen at the first, that if the Book of Mormon was different from what it now is; that is, if it professed to contain a history of the ten lost tribes; or if it had given the great western continent to any other people, or to any other tribe than that of Joseph, that it would have proved itself false—it would not have been the book or record which the prophets predicted should come forth to usher in the great work of the last days. An impostor would be obliged to take into consideration all these minute circumstances, many of which are in direct opposition to the established traditions of the day; yet none of them could be neglected without proving fatal to his scheme. But Mr. Smith, with all the accuracy of a profound mathematician, has combined all the minute elements of both doctrine and prophecy in his grand and wonderful scheme—nothing is wanting. Whatever department of his system is examined it will be found invulnerable. What an invaluable amount of evidence to establish the divine mission of Joseph Smith!

Eighth.—In the Book of Mormon are given the names and locations of numerous cities of great magnitude, which once flourished among the ancient nations of America. The northern portions of South America, and also Central America, were the most densely populated. Splendid edifices, palaces, towers, forts, and cities were reared in all directions. A careful reader of that interesting book can trace the relative bearings and distances of many of these cities from each other; and, if acquainted with the present geographical features of the country, he can, by the descriptions given in that book determine, very nearly, the precise spot of ground they once occupied. Now, since that invaluable book made its appearance in print, it is a remarkable fact, that the mouldering ruins of many splendid edifices, and towers, and magnificent cites of great extent, have been discovered by Catherwood and Stephens in the interior wilds of Central America; in the very region where the ancient cities described in the Book of Mormon were said to exist. Here then, is a certain and indisputable evidence that this illiterate youth—the translator of the Book of Mormon, was inspired of God. Mr. Smith's translation describes the region of country where great and populous cities anciently existed, together with their relative bearings and approximate distances from each other. Years after; Messrs. Catherwood and Stephens discover the ruins of forty-four of these very cities, and in the very place described. What, but the power of God, could have revealed beforehand this unknown fact, demonstrated years after by actual discovery?

Ninth.—The fulfilment of a vast number of prophecies delivered by Mr. Smith is another infallible evidence of his divine mission. Out of the many hundreds of fulfilled predictions uttered by him, we select the following as examples.

1. Soon after Mr. Smith found the plates, he commenced translating them. He had not proceeded far before he discovered from his own translation of the prophecy of Nephi as before quoted, that "THREE WITNESSES," besides himself, should be hold the book by the power of God, and should know and testify of its truth. Some length of time after this, or in the month of June, A. D. 1829, the Lord gave a revelation, through Mr. Smith, to Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, promising them that if they would exercise faith, they should have a view of the plates, and also of the Urim and Thummim. This prediction was afterwards fulfilled; and these three persons send forth their written testimony in connexion with the Book of Mormon, to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, declaring that an angel of God descended from heaven, and took the plates and exhibited them before their eyes; and that at the same time, the voice of the Lord from the heavens testified to them of the truth contained in Mr. Smith's translation of these records. Now an impostor might predict the raising up of "THREE WITNESSES," but he could never call down an angel from heaven, in the presence of these "WITNESSES," to fulfil his prædiction.

2. Before the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints" had any existence upon the earth, the prophecy of Moroni was translated and printed in the Book of Mormon. It is expressly predicted in this prophecy, that in the day that that book should be revealed "the blood of the Saints should cry unto the Lord from the ground" because of the wickedness of the people, and that the "time should soon come when" because of the cries and mourning of "widows and orphans" whose husbands and fathers should by slain by wicked hands," the Lord should avenge the blood of his Saints." And again in August, 1831, the word of the Lord came to Mr. Smith, saying that "the Saints should be scourged from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue," and but "FEW" of those in the church should "stand to receive an inheritance."—(See Book of Doctrine and Covenants, page 151.) The blood of many hundreds of Saints who have been slain and martyred in this church, is an incontrovertible evidence of the truth of the prediction. Surely Mr. Smith must have been a prophet of God to have seen not only the rise of the church of the Saints, but that their blood should cry aloud from the ground for vengeance upon the nation who should perpetrate these bloody deeds. No human foresight could have seen the bloody scenes that were to take place after the rise of the church. All natural appearances in the United States were against the fulfilment of this dreadful prediction. Every religious society throughout the whole country was strongly guarded against persecution and religious intolerance by the strong arm of the civil law. The glorious constitution of that great and free people proclaimed religious freedom to every son and daughter of Columbia's soil; yet, in the midst of that boasted land of freedom and religious rights, where universal peace seemed to have selected her quiet dwelling place, the voice of the great prophet is heard predicting the rise of the Latter-day Church, and the bloody persecutions that should follow her "from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue. Never were there any prophecies more literally and palpably fulfilled since the creation of the earth. If the foretelling of future events that could not possibly have been foreseen by human wisdom—events, too, that to all outward appearances were very unlikely to come to pass: if the predicting of such events and their subsequent fulfilment constitutes a true drophet, then Joseph Smith must have been a true prophet, and if a true prophet, he must have been sent of God.

Tenth.—There are many thousands of living witnesses who testify that God has revealed unto them the truth of the Book of Mormon, by dreams, by visions, by the revelations of the Holy Ghost, by the ministering of angels, and by his own voice. Now, if Mr. Smith is an impostor, all these witnesses must be impostors also. Perhaps if may be said, that these witnesses are not impostors, but are deceived themselves. But, we ask can any man testify that he knows a false doctrine to be true, and still not be an impostor! Men frequently are deceived when they testify their opinions, but never deceived when they testify they have a knowledge. Such must either be impostors, or else their doctrine must be true. Now would it not be marvellously strange indeed, if even three or four men who were entirely disconnected, being strangers to each other, should all undertake to deceive mankind by testifying that an angel of God had descended before them, or that God had in some other marvellous way manifested to them the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon? If the testimony of three or four impostors would appear marvellous, how infinitely more marvellous would appear the testimony of tens of thousands of impostors in different countries, widely separated from each other, and who never saw each others faces, and yet endeavoring to palm upon the world the same great imposition! If many thousands of witnesses do testify boldly, with words of soberness, that God has revealed to them that this is his church or kingdom that was to be set up in the last days, then we have an overwhelming flood of collateral evidences to establish the divine mission of Joseph Smith.

Eleventh.—The miracles wrought by Joseph Smith are evidences of no small moment to establish his divine authority. In the name of the Lord he cast out devils healed the sick, spoke with new tongues, interpreted ancient languages, and predicted future events. Many of these miracles were wrought before numerous multitudes of both believers and unbelievers, and upon persons not connected with our church. And again, the numerous miracles wrought through the instrumentality of thousands of the officers and members of this church, are additional evidences that the man who was instrumental in founding the church must have been sent of God. The thousands of sick that have been miraculously healed in all parts of the world where this gospel is preached, give forth a strong and almost irresistible testimony that Mr. Smith's authority is "from heaven." Although the great majority of mankind consider miracles to be an infallible evidence in favor of the divine authority of the one who performs them, yet we do most distinctly dissent from this idea. If miracles be admitted as an infallible evidence, then all that have ever wrought miracles must have been sent of God. The magicians of Egypt wrought some splendid miracles before that nation; they created serpents and frogs, and turned rivers of water into blood. If miraculous evidence is infallible, the Egyptians were bound to receive the contradictory messages of both Moses and the magicians as of divine authority. According to this idea, the witch of Endor must have established her divine mission beyond all controversy by calling forth a dead man from the grave in the presence of Saul, king of Israel. A certain wicked power, described by John (Rev. xiii. chap.) was to do "great wonders" and "miracles," and cause "fire to come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." If miracles are infallible evidences, surely no one should reject the divine authority of John's beast. Again, (in Rev. xvi. chap.) John "saw three unclean spirits like frogs," which he expressly says, "are the SPIRITS OF DEVILS WORKING MIRACLES, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." The learned divines and clergy of the nineteenth century boldly declare that "miracles are an infallible evidence of the divine mission of the one who performs them." If so, who can blame the "kings of the earth," and these learned divines, and all their followers for embracing the message of these divinely inspired devils! For according to their argument, they should in no wise reject them, for they prove their mission by evidences which they say are infallible. We shall expect in a few years, to see an innumerable host of sectarian ministers as well as kings, taking up their line of march for the great valley of "Armageddon," near Jerusalem, and thus prove by their works that they do really believe in the infallibility of miraculous evidence. Devils can work miracles as well as God, and as they have already persuaded the religious world that miracles are infallible evidences of divine authority, they will not have much difficulty among the followers of modern christianity in establishing the divinity of their mission. But the "Latter-day Saints" do not believe in the infallibility of miraculous evidence. We believe that miraculous gifts are absolutely necessary in the church of Christ, without which it cannot exist on the earth. Miracles, when taken in connexion with a pure, holy, and perfect doctrine, reasonable and scriptural, is a very strong collateral evidence in favor of that doctrine, and of the divine authority of those who preach it. But abstract miracles alone, unconnected with other evidences, instead of being infallible proofs are no proofs at all; they are as likely to be false as true. So baptism "for the remission of sins" is essential in the church of Christ, and when taken in connexion with all other points of doctrine embraced in the gospel is a presumptive evidence for the divine authority of the person who preaches it. But baptism "for the remission of sins," unconnected with other parts of the doctrine of Christ, would be no evidence either for or against the divine authority of any man. The many thousands of miracles wrought in this church, being connected as they are with an infallible doctrine, and with a vast number of other proofs, have carried an almost irresistible conviction to the minds of vast multitudes, who have, in consequence, yielded obedience to the message, and become in their turn the happy recipients of the same power of God, by which they themselves can also heal the sick and work by faith in the name of the Lord; thus demonstrating to themselves the truth of the Savior's promise, viz: that certain miraculous signs should follow them that believe.—(See Mark, chap. xvi.)

There is one thing connected with Joseph Smith's message which will at once prove him to be an impostor or else a true prophet. It is a certain promise contained in a revelation which was given through him to the apostles of this church in the year 1832. It reads as follows: "Go ye into all the world, and whatsoever place ye cannot go into, ye shall send, that the testimony may go from you into all the world unto every creature. And as I said unto mine apostles, even so I say unto you, for you are mine apostles, even God's high priests; ye are they whom my father hath given me—ye are my friends therefore, as I said unto mine apostles, I say unto you again, that every soul who believeth on your words, and is baptized by water for the remission of sins, shall receive the Holy Ghost. And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name they shall do many wonderful works; in my name they shall cast out devils; in my name they shall heal the sick; in my name they shall open the eyes of the blind, and unstop the ears of the deaf; and the tongue of the dumb shall speak; and if any man shall administer poison unto them, it shall not hurt them; and the poison of the serpent shall not have power to harm them. * * * Verily, verily, I say unto you, they who believe not on your words, and are not baptized in water in my name, for the remission of their sins, that they may receive the Holy Ghost, shall be damned, and shall not come into my Father's kingdom, where my Father and I am. And this revelation unto you, and commandment, is in force from this very hour upon all the world." (Doctrine and Covenants, page 86.) Here, then, this great modern prophet has presented himself before the whole world with a bold unequivocal promise to every soul who would believe on his message—a promise, too, that no impostor would dare make with the most distant hope of success. An impostor might indeed make such a promise to his followers, but they would never realize a fulfilment of it. If these miraculous signs have not followed according to the above promise, then the tens of thousands who have complied with the conditions would know Joseph Smith to be an impostor, with one accord would turn away, and that would be the end of the imposition. But the very fact that vast numbers are annually being added to the church, and continue therein year after year, is a demonstrative evidence that the promise is fulfilled—that the Holy Ghost is given, and the miraculous signs also. Dare any other societies in all the world make such a promise unto the believers in their respective systems? No, they dare not; they know full well that it would be the speedy downfall and utter overthrow of their vain, unauthorized, and powerless religions. O, what a wide and marked difference between the religion of Joseph Smith and that of Protestant and Catholic religion—between his authority and that of sectarian divines! The one promises all the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost to his followers, the other is as powerless as the dry stubble prepared for the burning. While the followers of this great prophet cast out devils, speak with new tongues; heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, cause the lame to walk, obtain heavenly visions, and converse with angels, the followers of those unauthorized, deluded, and crafty sects not only deny these great and glorious gifts, or impute them in these days to the power of the devil, but they grasp the sword, and fire-arms, and deadly weapons, to kill off the Saints, and drive them from the face of what they call civilized society. While the one class are suffering martyrdom by scores for their testimony, the other class are rolling in all the luxuries and splendors of Great Babylon, with fat salaries of from ten to twenty and twenty-seven thousand pounds sterling per annum.

As we have briefly examined into the nature of the evidences in favor of Joseph Smith's divine mission, it may be well at the close of this number to give a short summary of the proofs and arguments contained in the foregoing.

1. Joseph Smith's doctrine is reasonable, scriptural, perfect, and infallible in all its precepts, commands, ordinances, promises, blessings and gifts. In his organization of the church, no officer mentioned in the New Testament organization is omitted. Inspired apostles and prophets are considered as necessary as pastors, teachers, or any other officer.

2. Joseph Smith's account of the restoration of the gospel by an angel—of his taking out of the ground the sacred records of the tribe of Joseph—of their subsequent translation by the gift of God—and of the great western continent's being given to a remnant of Joseph, where they have grown into a multitude of nations, are all events clearly predicted by the ancient Jewish apostles and prophets; together with the minute circumstances connected therewith. The times and seasons in which these events should transpire, and the purposes which they should accomplish are also all plainly foretold. Joseph Smith presents the world with the fulfilment at the predicted time—in the predicted manner—and for the predicted purposes as anciently specified.

3. Joseph Smith incorporates in his mission the gathering of the Saints out of Babylon, and every other predicted event that was to characterize the great preparatory dispensation for the second advent of our Lord.

4. The revelation in the Book of Mormon, pointing out the location of many ancient cities, the ruins of which were subsequently discovered by Catherwood and Stephens—the direct and palpable fulfilment of many of the prophecies of Joseph Smith, which no human sagacity could have foreseen, all natural appearances and circumstances being entirely against their expected fulfilment—the raising up of numerous other witnesses who also testify to the ministering of angels and the manifestation of the power of God confirmatory of this message—the performance of many splendid miracles by Mr. Smith and his followers, and the bold unequivocal promise of the miraculous gifts to all who should believe and embrace this message, are all evidences such as no impostor ever has given, or ever can give. They are evidences such as will prove the salvation of every creature that receives the message, and the damnation of every soul who rejects it.

The circumstances attending Mr. Joseph Smith's death, are very similar to those which have attended the death of the greater part of the inspired men of Israel since the world began. The seal of his testimony to the truth of his Divine Mission was dipped in his own blood, and is stamped upon his doctrine and precepts, and meets the eye of the people continually.

A flood of testimony from the pen of Elder Pratt is poured upon the world, and if they can resist its clear and majestic current, it would really seem to us, that they possess more of a reckless opposition to the dictates of conscience, than of simple honesty of heart that is a pre-requisite to eternal life and salvation. Time, however, will not tarry long for us. We are urged onward, and must soon give an account of our stewardships at the bar of Him, whose truth cannot be rejected, with impunity, by any one.

A letter from San Francisco, published in the Washington Globe, says "Every man engaged in hunting gold, and every one that visits the gold region, goes armed to the teeth. Scenes of violence occur; there is no security for life and property.

ABSENCE OF MIND.—A peculiar case of absent-mindedness was related to us not long since. A gentleman, on retiring to bed, deliberately laid his clothes nicely between the sheets—covered them up, and hung himself on a chair.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1849.

☞ Notice.—All communications addressed to the Editor, must be post-paid to receive attention.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

To our Friends and Brethren in Missouri.

GREETING:

Our paper is, at last, sprung into being; and we desire to make it the harbinger of good tidings to you, and trust that it may find a welcome in all your habitations. The GUARDIAN bears to you the good wishes of a friend, and we hope that it will fan up a breeze around you that will revive your spirits and inspire you with new life and animation.

Because of an inability to stand against the obstacles of an entirely new country, as this was when we first came here, you left this section for a season to go where you could get an earlier return from your labor than you could possibly realize here. This was justifiable and right. Circumstances frequently compel us to yield to their force and power when our own desires would lead us to do differently. But there are no circumstances, however adverse, that can prevent us from honoring and glorifying our God, if we possess the inclination and will to do it.

To honor God, is to honor his image and likeness in the persons of men here on earth. God himself is high above us. If he were hungry, he would not ask thee food. He knows that thy nerve is too feeble and thine arm too short to reach him. He has, therefore, directed thy charitable efforts to his brethren, even, to the least of them; and hath said: "inasmuch as thou hast done it unto the least of these, thou hast done it unto me." Again, to honor God, is to honor his church.

The church is his visible body that meets the eye of both Saint and sinner, and the members may honor or dishonor the body by their words and by their actions. How important, then, that you always speak in favor of the church, and show by your integrity, firmness and good actions that you are sincerely devoted to the interests, honor, and future prosperity of your brethren.

What will be the consequences provided you neglect your religious duties in the land whither you sojourn for a season? Suppose you indulge in the intoxicating glass or jug, and in consequence thereof, blaspheme your Maker's name, curse your brethren, and become an open example in the face of Heaven and Earth, of dishonor to the Saints, and to our blessed Lord and Master? Such conduct will tend to close the eyes, stop the ears, and harden the hearts of men and women against our holy religion. Because of the bad examples of some who have a name to be Saints or Mormons, many will perish and die in their sins, and their blood be required at the hands of those whose bad examples have created unbelief in the hearts of those that perish thus. It is charitably hoped and believed that few who have a name to be Saints are thus guilty of bad examples. Still there are some who are of the above stamp and may readily be persuaded by some great-power men to go further down the river; and if such will not repent and abide the counsels of the church, our great power then may have been raised up for the very purpose of gathering out of the kingdom all things that offend and that do iniquity. Our Master hath said, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your father who is in heaven."

As a general thing, you have been prospered in your labors. The people of Missouri have given you employment and a reasonable compensation for your services; and many of you, no doubt, intend leaving for the Valley in the Spring. Let every one seek to leave a good name behind; and if any one has done you wrong, be careful and not return that wrong. If you will observe this admonition, you shall prosper and live, and no power shall prevail against you. If your employers or neighbors do not wish to hear you talk upon your religion you can keep it to yourselves; and if your tongues cannot enforce conviction upon their minds of the truth of your creed, let your faithful and upright conduct do it in all places where you may be called to act. Thus, you will do yourselves honor, and honor the church, and the faith which you profess. This may apply to all the members of our church in every place. It will harm no good person, and it may do good to some that are struggling between life and death.

As an apology for non-attendance to religious duties in some places abroad, is urged the opposition of the people, and a fear that they may not get employment. This is but a lame apology indeed. Is not this nearer the truth? The cares of the world, the love of gain, the pride of life, or what, with some, is worse than all, the whisky jug? Are not these some of the most prominent causes that have robbed you of a relish for the observance of your religious duties. When you are in the service of any man, will he think any less of you if you pray in your families, ask a blessing at your table, and even pray for your employer, refrain from strong drink, and every species of profanity? If an observance of these things, with strict and sterling honesty and integrity will expose you to the opposition and hatred of the people and be the means of throwing you out of employment, we would advise you to leave those regions as speedily as Lot left Sodom. But give them one faithful trial before you start, and just see what the result will be. With good wishes and most sincere prayers for your welfare here and hereafter, we say: May Heaven's blessings rest upon you all, in doing the will of our God.

Subscribe for the Guardian.

Flour nicely put up in sacks of from 50 to 100 pounds each will be received in exchange for the Guardian, at the rate of $2 per hundred pounds—if good. Good corn will be received at 20 cents per bushel. 5000 good sized, hard wood rails, ten feet long received at this office in exchange for the paper at $1 per hundred. Three dollars a thousand allowed for good eighteen inch shingles. Two dollars a hundred for good lumber, hard wood, inch thick.

Our citizens are particularly cautioned not to haul timber, rock, or any old buildings from Winter Quarters, neither in any way trespass upon the Indian lands west of the Missouri river. The organization of our county, we believe, is sufficiently strong to check any such trespass, and Major Miller, the Indian Agent, will be very likely to put the law in force against all persons who may thus break over their legal bounds.

The Legislature of Iowa.

This body, it would seem, has not succeeded altogether in disorganizing our county. They certainly made a high-handed and unheard of push to effect it, and for no other reason, as we verily believe, than that of our voting for Gen. Zachary Taylor. While we had nothing against Gen. Cass, believing him to be an able and talanted Statesman; Yet the noble part performed by the hero of Buena Vista's bloody plain, inclined our men to give their voice in favor of him whose brilliant career witnessed to their satisfaction, that an overruling Providence was with the man. This, with other reasons that might be rendered, was the cause of our voting as we did; and the sequel has shown that we were on the Lord's side; and whose side must they be on who sought to deprive us of our rights for doing as we did? We dare not say, on the Devil's side, for this would be harsh and uncharitable; but we will venture to say, on the Locofoco side.

But more seriously: this body has taken a very scriptural and consistent view of our character; and we are happy to learn that they were under the influence of some of the holy and sacred precepts of inspired truth in their deliberations in relation to our county organization.

It is said, that "the law was not made for the righteous, but for the lawless and disobedient." This body has wisely withheld a part of the law from us, and retained it in their own hands. But the hearts of our citizens beat high with gratitude to those honorable gentlemen who so ably and manfully defended our rights and interests in the Senate. In defending our rights, they only defended the Constitution and maintained the supremacy of the law—aside from prejudice or party interests. They have done themselves honor in our estimation, and we believe, in the estimation of every honorable man, whether he be Whig or Democrat; and they have done us justice so far as it was in their power to do.

As things now stand, we have taxation without representation. When England treated her American colonies in this way, our fathers called it oppression; and it does seem to us that if our money is required for public use, we ought to have some little voice in directing its appropriation. But we are not disposed to be contentious. If others have done us wrong, it shall be our aim to avoid their example, and hence avoid the consequences. The wrong done to us, in this respect, is but a debt contracted, drawing interest in our favor until the principal is paid, provided we act wisely and prudently in reference to the same. If we are what we should be, the never-failing promise stands recorded,—bequeathed to us by the pen of inspiration; "all things shall work together for good, to them that love God."

The following is from a correspondent of the Missouri Republican.

"The bill of the House to destroy the organization of Pottawatamie, because the people of that county had the independence to vote for Gen. Taylor, sleeps on the table of the Senate, beneath the ruins occasioned by Whig batteries; and, since misery is said to love company, it has for its companion the bill to revise the boundaries of the first Congressional District, which excludes that county from all participation in the election of members of Congress. They are beyond the reach of the hand of resurrection at this session. If not all has been done that was sought to be done against the inhabitants of this county, as a punishment for exercising the right of suffrage, the "unterrified" have done enough to consign them to the doom which awaits them. They have deprived the people of this county of the right of representation, and of the judiciary—rights guaranteed by the constitution, and "formidable to tyrants only."

Salt Lake Emigrants.

It is intended for companies to start from this point, to emigrate to the Great Valley of the Salt Lake so soon as grass is sufficiently grown to sustain cattle and teams. Whenever a company of fifty wagons have assembled at the camping ground on this side of the river near this place, (the precise place will be designated in due time,) they will forthwith be organized and start on their journey. This number can travel with much more ease, comfort and speed than any greater number. Our experience has proven this to us. The men and boys that will naturally go with fifty wagons, will be quite sufficient to protect themselves on the journey against the Indians. Every man and boy capable of using a rifle or a musket, should, by all means, have one, and a good one. If any are deficient in this respect, we will furnish every company with what they may lack, provided the captain and principal men of each company will become responsible for the arms and deliver them safely to the High Council in the Valley. As there is quite a lot of arms here that belong there, and we wish to forward them on. The organization of companies will be strictly military, and every man should be amply provided with arms and ammunition adequate to any and every exigence. Our experience last year on the Elk Horn river with the Omaha Indians abundantly shows the importance of a rigid observance of the above.

The bill of particulars, embracing provisions, and other articles to be taken, will appear in the Guardian in due time. Every wagon, before starting, will be examined to see if it contains the requisite amount of provisions, utensils and means of defence. If they are deficient in these, they will not be allowed to cross the river to proceed with our companies. The severity of the winter here, awakens some fears that they have had a severe winter in the Valley, and it will be, most likely, thought better to take a greater amount of provisions than was at first anticipated. A few extra barrels of flour will do no harm.

Gold at Council Bluffs.

Considerable excitement has prevailed here since last Fall, concerning an extensive Gold Mine, as thought by some to have been discovered in the Bluffs, between the Buoyo Lake and this town. There have been many speculations in regard to it, and many experiments tried; but from the best information we can obtain, there is nothing valuable of a mineral kind discovered, and the prospects daily fade. Some of the ore has been smelted, and submitted to the strongest tests that we could put it to. And it turns out to be a mixture of zink, copper, &c., and not enough of that to pay for working it. Better dig for corn and potatoes!!

Deaths that have occurred in the county since our paper was first issued, will be inserted free of charge, if the friends will furnish us with their account.

Marriages will also be inserted free, particularly where we superintend!! but in all other cases, the boys say, that it will cost cake or ——, to give the parties a honey-moon pleasure ride on the Guardian's wing.

Outfitting for the Valley and Gold Region.

This place is probably the most eligible point on the Missouri river for emigrants from Iowa and Illinois, residing no father south than Quincy, to rendezvous at, preparatory to launching forth upon the great Western Plains. The old Mormon trail by Pisga and Indian town is a notable thoroughfare, and is settled all along through the State to this place. Travelers need not camp out, or away from inhabitants more than one or two nights, if the roads should be good, between the Mississippi river and this place. Emigrants may start from the Mississippi as early as they please. They will be able to obtain corn on the way for their teams, if they will use a little precaution, and at some places, lay in enough to last them two or three days.

We have no hesitancy in assuring our readers that every article needed in the Gold Mines, from a crowbar to a sieve, from a barrel or sack of flour to the broad-side of a baconed porker, can all be had here at equally as low rates as can be purchased on the Mississippi. We have a goodly number of most enterprizing merchants who have anticipated all your wants, and have laid in heavy stocks of all sorts of goods. And being connected with heavy firms in New York, Philadelphia and in St. Louis, they are determined to sell at rates so low that no reasonable man will haul goods or provisions through to this place; and even if he comes by water, it is our candid opinion that he can purchase his goods and entire outfit in the little town of Kanesville at a better rate than he can purchase them in St. Louis or in any of the Eastern cities, considering the trouble, expense of transportation, and risk. We are personally acquainted with the Eastern market, and also with the St. Louis market; we likewise have the price current, weekly, from all these places; and it is our honest sentiment that this is the place for outfitting.

Many think that we have got nothing out here in the State of Pottawatamie, but a few simpletons that voted for Gen. Taylor. But if they would just come here, and step into some of our Dry Goods, Grocery, and Hardware stores, and find stocks of $50,000, they might begin to think Pottawatamie worthy of some favorable consideration in the halls of legislation.

Should it so happen that every thing that the most fastidious caterer would require, could not be had at this place; why, just run down to St. Josephs in Missouri where they have every thing, and no mistake—while your teams are resting a few days and treat yourselves to the pleasure of a little more than a hundred miles' trip, through a rich and fertile country, and there your every want can be supplied. Just get a copy of the Guardian before you leave, and run over its advertising column, and most likely you will discover the advertisements of the cheapest houses in St. Josephs. Those you would do well to patronize.

There is a Preacher in this town on whom many of the citizens of this county and of other parts frequently call for advice, counsel, and instruction upon various questions. This Preacher is not a rich man, and he complains some that his house is so thronged with comers and goers, that it seriously interrupts the arrangements of his domestic or family affairs; and, moreover, the business of some is of such a nature that they require to see him alone by himself. In this case, he is obliged to go out of doors, or send his family out, which is very uncomfortable at almost any time; but more particularly so in this extreme cold weather. We have taken the condition of the Preacher into consideration, and think that his complaints are too well founded. We have concluded, therefore, to build him an office by donation or contribution, that he may have a place to give counsel in, and relieve his family from the inconvenience occasioned by the want of such a building. The office will cost about one hundred dollars; and we would say to all that may have occasion to call on the Preacher for counsel: Now is your time to contribute something in labor, lumber, nails, glass, sash, 18 inch shingles, corn, flour, pork, and even money would not be refused. Should this call be neglected, we might possibly have reason to fear that wise and valuable counsels would not always be given us. The Preacher is very thankful that this move has been made. Our friends are requested to hand in their donations. They will be received at this office.

Suppose that every subscriber for the Guardian try his best to get, at least, one more subscriber, and a dozen or more if he can? This operation would keep us afloat.

Deep Snow and a Prospect of High Water.

Snow began to fall here in the month of November, and has continued, at intervals, up to the present time. There have been a few warm days since, just sufficient to pack the snow and it has become almost an entire body of ice. It is now about two feet deep on an average. The cold weather set in about the 1st of November, and since that time, there has hardly been a day sufficiently warm to cause snow to melt so as to make water in the road. There have been two or three little rains or mists and sleet, but not enough to diminish the quantity of snow.

Some hunters have just come down from Fort Vermillion, about one hundred and fifty miles above here, and they report the snow much deeper there than here. They say that many Indians in that region are in a state of starvation on account of the very deep snow preventing them from getting out to hunt and kill game. Vague reports from the mountains say that the snow is beyond all calculation. It is now late in the season, and this snow will be very likely to go off suddenly. We, therefore, repeat our warning to the people on the bottoms of the Missouri River in this county to prepare to get on high ground. The people in Missouri, on the low bottoms, of this river, would do well to be on the lookout and find a place, on high ground to retreat to—before they are surrounded and caught in a snare.

To Emigrants.

Emigrants to this place, by the Missouri River, should land at Council Point, some three miles above Trading Point or Bellevue. CHARLES BIRD resides there—and to him should our friends make application for information immediately on landing. This is the most eligible point on the river for the accommodation of emigrants to get removed to their friends in the various settlements in this region, and also the nearest point to this place.

Who that is a friend to the Latter Day Saints, will not take the Guardian? And who, that wishes well to Zion's cause, will not seek to extend its circulation?

Single copies of the "Guardian" can be had at this office, nicely enclosed in a wrapper for the mail, to be sent away to friends and acquaintances. No extra charge for the wrapper. Friends leaving this place, would do well to purchase a number of copies. They may distribute them to good advantage.

For the Guardian.

To the Saints in Iowa.

GREETING:

It is with grateful feelings to our Heavenly Father, that we enjoy the present opportunity of communicating unto you through the medium of the press; which privilege we can doubly appreciate, having so long been deprived of the means of printing by the ruthless hand of our persecutors; and it is unnecessary for us to counsel and advise the Saints to take the Guardian, and thereby put themselves in possession of all necessary information in relation to the affairs of the Church; as well as by paying their subscription, to enable its publication to continue; for every Saint who has been so long deprived of the privilege of reading our own publications, will hail with gratitude the opportunity of doing so. There are many things which we wish to communicate to the Saints, and when the weather shall have moderated, so that we can address you, in large assemblies at the several Log Tabernacles, we shall take the earliest opportunity of doing so; but we wish at present to give some advice and information in relation to the poor. The Lord by the revolution of seasons, has sent the snow, and the cold north winds, alike upon the just and the unjust, the strong man and the invalid, the orphan and the widow; but all men were not equally well prepared for so severe a winter; and it becomes necessary to call upon the Saints to pay up their tithing. Bring in your corn, wheat and buckwheat, flour and meal, corn fodder, oats and hay; money and California gold; groceries, honey, butter, eggs, shoes, leather, clothing, pork, beef, mutton, venison, veal, fowl, potatoes, turnips, cabbages, beans, onions, &c., &c.; that the hearts of the needy may be made glad with an abundance of the good things of the earth; and that they may not lack fire-wood, we advise that every tenth day during the cold season, the brethren all turn out with their teams, and those who have no team, take their axes to cut and prepare the wood for the fires; that the prayer of the orphan, the poor, and the sick may ascend up to the ear of the Most High for blessings and deliverance; for "he that giveth to the poor, leadeth to the Lord," &c.

We have been thus far particular that the Bishops of the different Branches may know how to proceed to supply the pressing calls that surround them; and as a great many of the poor have made complaints to us, we are determined to stir up the minds of all the brethren to this important subject. We have also learned that in some Branches, that there are very few, and in some not any, who are supported by the Bishops, consequently the tithing in many of the neighborhoods, remains unappropriated; whilst the Branches situated near this place, have more poor than the tithing will provide for. The Saints are hereby instructed to bring their tithing to the Tabernacle on each Saturday; and as Bishop Joseph Knight, in consequence of his health is not able to attend to the duties of his office. Bishop Isaac Clark, assisted by one of the Twelve will be in attendance on those days, to receive, take care of, and distribute to the needy such things as may be brought forward, and also to see that an accurate account of the tithing received, is entered in the Book of the Law of the Lord, that none may lose their reward. And those Branches which have a surplus of tithing are counselled to bring the same on the above named days. Bishop Clark will visit the Branches as far as he is able, and instruct the Brethren on this subject. Elders Lyman Stoddard, Jerome Benson, and other traveling elders, as also, the Presidents of the different Branches are instructed to give the Saints all necessary information, and stir them up to diligence and faithfulness on this important subject; for as the Lord liveth, if this people forget the poor, and neglect their tithes and offerings according to his Laws, he will forget them in the day of trouble. Let every Saint be awake for this is the key of peace on this Land, the key of plenty, the key of health; for as our hearts are open to the needy, so is the hand of the Almighty in dispensing his favors unto us; and in the great day, when the judge of all shall say, "come ye blessed, inherit the Kingdom," &c., we will learn, that visiting the sick, feeding the poor, sustaining the needy, were the very things for which we receive our crown of glory; and those who neglect these duties, were found destitute of pure and undefiled religion.

Br. Silas Richards has been appointed acting Bishop for the Block House Branch; and we hope that whenever he shall call on the Saints to turn out on Tenth Day to get wood for the poor, that every man will be on hand early, and in earnest, as there is a number of families helpless and destitute. In accordance with the commandment of the Lord, by the Prophet, the Saints will "bring in their tythes and offerings into the store house, that there may be meat in my house; and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of Heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground, neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of Hosts (Malachi, chap. iii., v. 10, 11.) We have nothing in our hearts but blessings for the Saints, and close this communication by praying for the choicest of Heavens' blessings upon your heads, even so. Amen.

GEO. A. SMITH.

Kanesville Lyceum.

The question proposed to be discussed before this institution on Saturday evening next, we learn to be the following:

"Will the admission of Slavery into our new Territories contribute to the good of the general cause of humanity, to the honor of the nation, or to the real advantage of the Southern States?" We believe that able speakers will appear on both sides—a crowded audience may be expected to hear the strong reasons of the orators of the evening, poured forth in strains that will challenge applause.

In consequence of the severity of the winter, many farmers in Missouri have lost the greater part of their stock hogs, as we are informed, having prepared no suitable shelter for them. Many cattle are dying there from the same cause and for want of food, as we are told. The winter has been so long and severe that corn and fodder are becoming very scarce. There has been very little, if any stock in Pottawattomie county that has died as yet, with the exception of the Government cattle on the rushes, some fifty miles above this place. Many of them, we are informed, are dying of cold and hunger, the snow being so deep that they cannot well get to the rushes. Whoever is responsible to the Government for these cattle, would do well to look to them in our opinion.

Work oxen will undoubtedly be high here in the spring, and the demand for them great. Every body is going to digging gold. Some on their farms, but mostly going to California. Oxen and mules will be greatly needed.

To our Farmers.

Although the snow and ice now hold the soil bound by a strong chain, the time is drawing near when it will melt away, and the naked earth, free from frost, invite again your attention and labor.

You will do well to procure wheat that is clean for the spring sowing, and select such ground as is most free from weeds to sow it upon. Let the seed be put into the ground as soon as the frost is out. Oats are a very fine, useful, and profitable crop, and we think our farmers will do well by paying more attention to this grain than they have done heretofore. Every farmer should raise flax. Its great utility and want should be sufficient argument to induce every one that possibly can, to raise the article. We hope that some attention will be paid to the raising of barley. From this kind of grain, and from the hops which grow spontaneously in large quantities through this section, a most excellent, wholesome, and cheap beer can be made. The early frosts last fall should admonish every farmer to plant his corn in April or beginning of May. Corn had better be bitten by frost twice in the spring than once in the fall. Guard your crops by good and sufficient fences. A small piece of ground well tilled and well fenced, is much better than a large piece badly tilled and badly fenced. Corn planted from the middle of May till the middle of June, will do very well for stock; but for horses, sheep and calves, about one and a half or two bushels of corn should be sowed upon an acre of ground, in the latter part of May or first of June, and ploughed or harrowed in; and in the latter part of August, or perhaps forepart, it should be cradled, cured in the sun, and nicely laid away for winter. This, for calves and sheep, is most excellent. Try it. Fodder is much more easily obtained in this way than by cutting prairie grass; and when once obtained is worth double.

The trouble and vexation caused by bad fences, and hard feelings that have sometimes risen among neighbors, by cattle and hogs breaking into enclosures, should be a sufficient admonition to all concerned, to protect their fields by good fences. Do not waste or destroy any timber unnecessarily. Let not the timber be deadened or girdled to make fields, when there is such a vast body of open prairie uncultivated. You should soon begin to lay up your fences, hunt up your chains,—have them mended and ready; ploughs, yokes, drags, spades, hoes &c. &c. should all be hunted up and put in good repair before the time that it will be necessary to use them. A farmer should have a place for every thing, and every thing in its place, if he expects to prosper in his pursuits.

THE NET ON THE RIGHT SIDE—A GREAT HAUL.—Our neighbor, Mr. Powers, with some three or four others, went to a small lake about three miles from this town a few days since, and found an open place at the margin of the water where a strong spring run into the lake. They went to work and picketed in an area of about eight or ten hundred square feet in this open place; the warm spring water having prevented it from freezing over. The pickets were of small willows that grew plentifully there. They left two or three pickets out in different places to admit the fish. About 9 o'clock in the evening another neighbor went down to the fish trap and discovered it full of fish. He drove all the stakes down and shut them in, the water being about six feet deep in the deepest part of the trap. When morning came, lo and behold!! The whole trap was crowded with one dense mass of fish, and their backs sticking out of the water. Now came the sport of spearing or gigging them. They would frequently bring out three or four fish at one throw of the gig. There were a number of sled loads taken and hauled off by two yoke of oxen each. They were mostly of a kind called "Buffalo" and would weigh from three to twenty pounds each. While this cold weather lets the fish in the lake will all seek this warm spring, and there is no doubt but that there can be fish enough caught in this very trap to supply the whole State of Pottawatamie. Friend Powers made us a present of a half dozen fine ones, and freely gave to all that wanted. "Freely he received and freely he gave."

Much interesting matter is necessarily excluded from this number. It will appear in our next.

Who can, for a moment, doubt the reality of our living in the last days, upon the very borders of the millennium? The words of the old Jewish prophet Isaiah, 60 chap., 17 v. is evidently being fulfilled. "For brass I will bring gold, for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron. I will also make thy officers peace and thine exactors righteousness."

The prophet must have had his eye upon the productions of the California mines, when he says: "For brass I will bring gold." That is, gold become as plenty as brass, silver as plenty as iron, &c., &c. The next great event upon which the eye of the man of God rested, might have been the election of Gen. Taylor, as shown by the latter part of the verse. "I will also make thy officers peace and thine exactors righteousness." The old hero fought for the war party, then and still in power, and suppressed his own private feelings and sentiments, to show his fidelity to his country. Since the responsibility of the government, will soon, by the will of the people, fall upon him, we trust his private sentiments will be carried out in his Administration, so far as circumstances will allow.

Chunks of Gold in California grow bigger, and more of them every day. In fact, we dreamed of turning out one lump the other night that weighed two hundred and fifty pounds, pure gold, and left four more in the same hole still larger! Away here on the frontier, so near California, we can't help having some golden dreams of enormous size.

MARRIED,

In this town, by the Editor, on Thursday evening, 15th inst., Mr. LISBON LAMB to Miss SARAH E. BROWN, both of this place.

DIED,

January 6th, in Browning's Settlement, SALLY SABIN, wife of Ara W. Sabin; aged 23 years, 11 months and 20 days.

WANTED by Mr. GOOCH, one set of house logs from the Cotton Woods, Length, 21 by 17 feet, nicely hewed, six inches thick, and liberal size. Two and a half cents per foot will be allowed for them on subscription for the Guardian, if delivered at this office soon. feb21

TITHING.

THE brethren in the Block House Branch, are requested to make a general turn out on Thursday, the 1st day of March for the purpose of getting wood for the widow and fatherless. They will assemble at the Tabernacle as early in the morning as consistant, with their teams and axes. They are further requested to bring in their tithing in such articles as they have to the Tabernacle, on Saturdays in each week, that the needy and destitute may have their wants supplied, and their hearts be made to rejoice. The Saints know their duty in this respect, and it is hoped and believed that they will act promptly that they may be blessed. There are many in want of food any raiment, who deserve to be supplied from this source.

A. W. Babbitt's Letter.

The following letter from A. W. Babbitt Esq., we publish; not that we wish or intend to foment strife, but that the saints at large may have it as one reason, among others, why he was disfellowshipped from our church.

This letter was read to a large meeting or Conference of the Seventies, held at the Tabernacle, on the 19th of November last., Most of the authorities of the whole church, in this country, were present.

Elder G. A. Smith spoke on the case: He wished to be pardoned for any expressions that he might make if they were not quite so polite and mild as they might be. He looked upon the letter as a direct insult upon the people. If he had drawn the dagger at him personally, he would have considered him [Babbitt] less guilty: But to aim at the whole people was an outrage upon their feelings that they ought not to endure. We have not "ceased to think and act for ourselves." We have not "prostituted our most sacred rights at the shrine of religious despots," and Mr. Babbitt ought to have learned this before now from the fact that his private letters, sent up here, assuring us that Mr. Cass must and would be elected, met with no favorable reception. We were compelled to believe that Mr. Babbitt was a very ignorant man or a very corrupt man. He was corrupt if he had any just notions with regard to the election, for he assured us to the reverse of what his real sentiments must have been. If the altar of his heart had been sacred enough to prevent strange fire from smoking thereon; if he had not laid aside the SACERDOTAL TUNIC and put on in the stead thereof, the smutty garments of political party, and suffered his mind to be blinded by the "god of this world," he must have seen that Gen. Taylor was the man. But he concluded by saying that Mr. Babbitt was a wise man, even so wise that he could not fellowship him.

Mr. Hyde then spoke and said: Mr. Babbitt has asked me a number of very pointed questions, and if it were to save my life, I could not answer them all. But if I had been playing the part of a snake in the grass, or digging a pit for my neighbor, I might perhaps have been particular enough to mark days and even hours. If Mr. Babbitt has any letters from me, written from Washington, that he thinks would convict me of a crime worthy of Purgatorial punishment, let him make them public, and not be trying to make something out of nothing. I have repeatedly told you and the world at large what I went to Washington for; but it seems that Mr. Babbitt has not yet learned my errand there—and therefore asks. I would refer him to my letters in the Republican for his answer. I never told him that I had a draft on the Whig committee at Washington, or any other committee for a dime.

Many remarks were made by different persons, and it was finally concluded, that Mr. Babbitt's conduct towards Mr. Hyde was dishonorable, uncalled for, and unchristianlike; and that Mr. Babbitt be furnished by this Conference, one evidence that we have not "ceased to think and act for ourselves," by withdrawing our fellowship from him. By the will of this people, he has held a high and responsible priesthood and station in the church, but with our consent, he can no longer be sustained therein while he calls our best friends,—men whom we know and whose worth we can appreciate, "RELIGIOUS DESPOTS."

The vote to disfellowship Mr. Babbitt was unanimous; not one hand raised to sustain him. Several staunch Democrats who voted for Mr. Cass, voted against Mr. Babbitt.

Mr. Babbitt thought that few of our Mormon friends believed our Whig apologies. We cannot help it any more than he can help seeing how many of his Mormon friends voted him out of the church for his productions against them.

To THE EDITORS OF THE IOWA STATESMAN;

Dear Sirs: I perceive from the 1st number of the Hawk-Eye that the Deacon is in direct communication with Orson Hyde; and, if Mr. Hyde is to be received as an uninterested witness, we must force the belief that the Whigs of Iowa are like Cæsar's wife, not only unsuspected but beyond suspicion; or to use Mr. Hyde's language, their intercourse has been unspotted and clear like the mirror itself. Now, I would like to ask Mr. Hyde a few questions which he may answer in his next epistle to the Deacon:

1st. Where was you at 11 o'clock on the night of the 8th of July?

2d. Where was you the next morning at 10 o'clock?

3d. Who was with you and what was he subject matter under consideration?

4th. How much did you tell me, on your return down the river, the draft on the whig committee at Washington city was for?

5th. What did you go to Washington city for?

6th. Of whom in the city of Cincinnati did you get the printing press and materials?

7th. Where did you get the money to pay for the press?

8th. What did you say to me on the subject in a letter dated at Washington, Sept. 15th, 1848?

The answers to the above questions without equivocation or anecdote may shed some light. I am aware that Mr. Hyde, in one of his letters to the Missouri Republican, undertook to give some items on this subject; and if he intended to be understood as giving the whole truth, he must have left a heavy load upon his conscience, however unspotted he may represent those who have operated with him in relation to the Mormon vote; and I can assure Mr. Hyde that few of his Mormon friends believe his whig apologies. Mr. Hyde has a style peculiar to himself in writing upon these subjects and turns many nice points with some anecdote in order to divert the mind from the point, which forcibly reminds me of the Ink or Cuttle fish, who, when closely pursued, throws out of his mouth so much fog and offensive matter that he evades pursuit, and in this way makes his escape. Does not Mr. Hyde know the fact that an order was drawn on Chambers & Knapp, by Warren, and that the same was paid and the avails sent to the Bluffs? Does he not know that Warren has acknowledged the payment of some two hundred and forty dollars to one of his coadjutors in this matter, (Mr. Pickett,) and does he not know that it is morally impossible for me to believe the statements that he has made? because knowledge supercedes faith?

But, Mr. Hyde announces himself a Whig, (but not an ultra one,) has no set notions, has not voted but once in his life, knows little or nothing about Federal and State policy, yet he assumes the responsibility of influencing a whole community; and lest he should betray ignorance, as their guide, he directs them to a political knave to counsel them "WHEN AND WHERE TO ACT." Such men we might reasonably suppose would support Gen. Taylor, for their principles are in perfect keeping, and Mr. Hyde is about as capable of counselling the Mormons how to vote as Gen. Taylor is of presiding over the people of the United States. He, like Mr. Hyde, is no politician, has not studied the science of civil government, has never voted in his life, but if elected can get Mr. Warren, or some of the same stamp, to advise him when, how and where to act.

Is it not astonishing to see the desperation of the Whig disciples in their struggle for political power: no stone is left unturned, no means too holy to be used, no altar too sacred to burn their political fire, the sacerdotal tunic must be laid aside, the smutty garments of party must clothe the minister of the altar, his influence cannot be dispensed with, heaven and earth must unite their influence or their party fails.

Are not the most cherished institutions of our country endangered by the use of such unhallowed means, when the most sacred of all human rights are prostituted at the shrine of religious despots, and men cease to think and act for themselves. It was the language of Chief Justice Story, while treating upon the constitution of our country, that it was the work of wise master builders, the work of immortality, if human institutions might aspire to such a name; yet, it might perish in an hour by the negligence of its keepers, the people. When the people no longer act upon the results of their own judgment and convictions, but tamely submit to religious and political dictators, then we may look for the elevation to office of bold and avaricious men who will feed well their operators; and thus the glory of our free institutions will depart, and despotism with all its horrors will enslave our children.

I have the honor to be,
Respectfully, Yours, &c.
A. W. BABBITT.

October 23, 1848.

Yesterday and to-day are the first two really pleasant days that we have had since the beginning of November. It is now warm, and the snow begins to disappear a little, after three months of most excellent sleighing.

For the Frontier Guardian.

KANESVILLE, Feb. 17th, 1849.

DEAR SIR: I herewith send you a correct daily list of the Thermometer reckoning since the 1st of last November; and likewise the time and depth of every snow. The observations were taken at sunrise, midday and sun set. The Thermometer hangs in the shade. The figures with cyphers placed before them denote the number of degrees below zero, and those without, the number of degrees above.

Yours, &c. Z. H. BAXTER.

FOREIGN SEIZURE OF CALIFORNIA GOLD.—The New York Sun, noticing the statement just brought from the Pacific, of some $400,000 in California gold dust having already arrived at Valparaiso and Panama, in British Government steamers, in the absence of proper naval force and restrictions on our part, says: "That some extraordinary news has been received from the War Department, ordering a large number of parole officers in the eastern States and through New York to rendezvous at once in this city, for the purpose of proceeding to California. A party of seven arrived night before last from one of the Forts on Long Island."

The South vs. the North.

We copy the following from the Washington Union, to show the feeling that is being rapidly engendered between the North and the South respecting the extension of Slavery into our newly acquired territories. The feeling is certainly not of the most happy kind. The prospects are becoming more favorable daily for a dissolution of the Union. If the North and the South divide,—division will not stop here. California, Oregon and New Mexico will begin to feel consequential. When once a blow is struck to divide the country, it can be repeated with far less restraint. Ye wise men of State, look and consider before consideration is drowned or stifled by the storm and confusion of anarchy,—by the gloom and horrors of bloody war! It would be hard for a foreign power to conquer America; but she can conquer, waste, and destroy herself with great ease.

"The New York Evening Post contains a harsh and insulting editorial against the South. It professes to be a criticism upon the course of the legislature of South Carolina, and the editorial articles of the Charleston Mercury. It belongs especially to that paper to reply to these coarse and ungenerous remarks. But upon one point we think it due to other States than South Carolina, to take some notice. We pass over the illiberal and insulting tone of the whole article. It scarcely becomes the citizen of a great confederacy of sovereign States, to use such language towards any one State, much less upon half the States of the confederacy. What is thrown out against South Carolina, is almost equally applicable to the other slaveholding States, and the peculiar institution of the southern States. It is not thus that any liberal American citizen would speak of a large portion of the Union, nor is it thus that he would hold up the character of her institutions to the nations of the eastern world. Still less would he, descend to the practice of the "Emancipator," and of the worst class of the English tourists, by republishing from a Charleston paper the advertisements of slaves for sale. It is a species of vituperation, intended to be as insulting to the South, as it is really disgraceful to the illiberal author. To show still further the ungracious and malignant style of an American journal with some pretensions to refinement, decency, and public spirit, we give the following extracts from the article, being a fit conclusion of so dignified a tirade upon the South:

"It was fit that these advertisements should appear in the same paper with the patriotic resolution upon which they are so valuable a commentary. Let any candid person read them carefully through, and then we ask him to say if he thinks the institution of slavery is a safe or proper subject for public discussion in a slaveholding community? Would it be prudent to permit, in an assembly of mechanics, for example, a discussion of the merits of an institution which permitted the sale of human beings in herds, like dumb driven cattle, among whom were carpenters, wheelwrights, blacksmiths, engineers, farmers, cooks, seamstresses, tanners, shoemakers, &c.? Would not such debates tend to impair that respect for the law which is the law's most important sanction, to render the tenure of property in human flesh insecure, and to imperil not only the fortunes but the lives of those who trafficked in it? No person, who can appreciate the just and exalting pride of an American mechanic, would doubt that this would be so. It is this everlasting curse which providentially follows slavery as well as every other species of crime, that it can never be comprehended without being condemned. Where slavery exists, freedom of speech must perish.

"We feel that we have now done our duty and our whole duty as public alarmists; and if Congress, not heeding what we say, and in the face and eyes of this resolution, proceed to exclude slavery from California and Oregon, why, they must expect early notice from South Carolina, by legislative resolutions and senatorial protests, that if any attempt to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia shall be successful, they will do things so unspeakably dreadful that our type would not probably lie still long enough to be pressed into the expression of them, and which, if we knew, we would not dare to utter in a whisper, unless, like the barber of Midas, we buried our terrible secret in the earth, and left the world to get knowledge of it, as it learned that Midas was a jackass, from the weeds which should grow over the grave where the whisper was interred."

Who principally imported the original slaves from Africa, contrary to the solemn remonstrances of the South—what are the serious difficulties which stand in the way of immediate emancipation—and how far the fanaticism of the abolitionists contributes to these difficulties—and how much more readily the object would be effected, if the South were left to herself, we will not stop to inquire. But upon one point we beg leave to set the New York Evening Post right. It levels its fiery indignation against South Carolina alone, and ridicules her empty and unsupported menaces. But does not the Evening Post see the danger of involving the other southern States in a similar movement? Does he not see the sympathy of interest which binds them all together? When thus taunted, thus insulted, by ribald reproach, and thus assailed by a fanatical course of measures, a common cause may unite the whole South together. The best way to avoid any such catastrophe is to avoid all such contumelious reproaches—to conciliate, and not to ridicule—to soothe, not to defy—to discountenance all measures which operate unequally, and to treat all the partners of a great confederacy with some show of equality, some appearance of respect, some sentiment of kindness.

THE POPE IN AMERICA.—The New York Sun of Wednesday, says: "It is said that a large number of our most influential Roman Catholic citizens intend calling a public meeting at an early day for the purpose of inviting his holiness, Pope Pius IX, to take up his permanent residence in this country. Should the temporal power of the Pope be wrested from him, it is not unlikely that he may find a home in our happy republic."

A New York letter says: "Bishop Hughes, of this (Roman Catholic) diocese, suggests that a contribution be made up in this country to aid the Pope, if he be refused a residence in Rome, in procuring some temporary place of independent residence."

Our St. Louis Mail, Quincy Mail, Montrose and Nauvoo Mail, and Burlington Mail, were sent by Wm. O. Clark, who resides near Montrose. He was here on business. The first number of the Guardian was sent by him to the above places. But in consequence of the snow leaving him at St. Joseph, he left there the St. Louis Mail, containing one hundred and seventy four copies of the first number of the Guardian. We trust that it will have been forwarded ere this.

The latest telegraphic news from Washington, represents the Southern Delegation, in Congress, rather more mild and conciliatory.

If men will go to California to dig gold, they had better take plenty of eatables rather than dry goods. Don't think that it will be too expensive to transport them. You will not think so when you get there. Do not think of recruiting your stock of provisions at the SALT LAKE; for if the winter has been comparatively severe there, they will have none to spare to you.

FROM THE PACIFIC.—We have accounts from Mazatlan, West Coast of Mexico, to December 1st. Vessels have arrived from California with gold, some of which had been assayed at Guadalaxara, and found to average 21 carats.

The British surveying steamer Pandora had taken it, $280,000 worth in all, and was to land it at Panama to be sent across the Isthmus of Chagres, and by the mail steamer to Southampton, England.

The British surveying schooner Herald arrived at Mazatlan, November 29th, from Bering's Straits, having been unable to gain any intelligence of Sir John Franklin.

A Valparaiso (Chili) paper, of Oct. 27th, says $420,000 in silver arrived per steamer of the 24th, mostly in bars from Copiapo, where another discovery of immense value has just been made. We have also $100,000 of Gold dust from California, and prices have somewhat receded for the former article, viz: bars $10 32 @ $10 30½; dollars 10¼ @ 11 ℔ cent. prem.

This is a decline of about two per cent. in the value of silver, the previous quotations for dollars having been 112½.—[N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

Railway from Cincinnati to San Francisco.

At St. Louis and Cincinnati, and all along the line between these two cities, the citizens are actively engaged in procuring the capital to construct a railway not only to connect the two cities, which will connect at Cincinnati with others extending east to Boston. The day is not very distant when the Atlantic and Mississippi will be bound together by an iron band. But the work will not stop at St. Louis. It will be carried on west until it eventually reaches the Pacific.

William Bayard & Co., a company embracing citizens of the United States and Europe, have sent in a memorial to Congress for aid, by a grant of land and the right of way, for a railroad from St. Louis to San Francisco. This will be a pretty good extension of the Cincinnati and St. Louis Railway, and connect us with what will be the great city on the eastern shore of the Pacific Ocean.

Bayard & Co state that they have contemplated the subject for many years, and spent several years in Europe, in perfecting their arrangements. The route, which heretofore was difficult to determine, is regarded as settled by the late acquisition of California. The line of the road intersects the Rio Grande, near the head waters of the Red and Gila rivers, thence to San Francisco or some port in California. The line to be located by Engineers of the United States with the concurrence of the Engineers of the Company.

The United States to grant the right of way, and set apart the lands along the road twenty-five miles on each side to aid in its construction, and where any of the lands in that distance have been disposed of, the amount to be made up of other unsold Government lands. The lands so set apart to be sold only to actual settlers, at a price not less than the Government price, and in tracts not larger than 640 acres to any one person.

The company within thirty days after the completion of the survey, to deposit in the Treasury of the United States, not less than five millions of Government securities, at their market value. The interest on this deposit at six per cent. per annum, is to be paid to the company, the principal to remain as a pledge for the construction of three-fourths of said road.

The road to be constructed in the best manner, with a heavy rail, and to be completed in eight years after the completion of the survey. The company to carry the mails from the Mississippi to the Pacific in not exceeding four days, and Congress to fix an equitable compensation for this service. Army and Navy stores for the United States to be always transported free of charge, and officers, and soldiers, and sailors of the Army and Navy to be carried at half the price charged other passengers for officers, or one-fourth for soldiers and sailors. The highest fare to be charged on the road on its whole length, not to exceed one half the present rates of passage upon the United States steamers from New York to Chagres, and from Panama to San Francisco.

Take turkeys, geese and ducks to the Valley—instead of chickens. They have a plenty of chickens there already. But turkeys! turkeys! are the birds to eat up and destroy the crickets. Pigs will eat them also. Take the latter by all means. Drive all the cows you can.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT AT WESTERLY, R. I.—We learn by a private letter that an alarming accident occurred at Westerly, R. I., on Monday evening, the 1st day of January. A large crowd had assembled in a church (which we gather was recently built.) The occasion was a ladies' fair, for the sale of fancy articles, &c. "Early in the evening," our correspondent writes, "when about five hundred had collected, the floor broke in, precipitating some three hundred, who were in the centre, down twelve feet into an unfinished basement below, on rocks and stones which had not yet been removed. Tables, men, women and children, and a large furnace stove, all went in together, besides twelve solar lamps and an innumerable assemblage of smaller lights."

The consequences of the accident were serious to many in the dislocation and breaking of bones, ruin of dresses by fire and otherwise, although, almost miraculously no one was killed.

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a superopal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will reserve the right and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy, both Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the interior, and will try, by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the "States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall ride forth in His cloudy chariot, and dash in pieces the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw, that it become fine like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of Him who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and untarnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two DOLLARS a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United States, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.

More proof that
SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP
Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, O., March 16, 1848.

SIR:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours,
O. B. BEERE.

TROY, In., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

POETRY.

From the Model American Courier.

Lines Written on the Death of a Young Lady.

And art thou gone, who shone so bright,
And blest us with thy presence here?
Forever gone to realms of light?—
Let friendship drop the burning tear.

All flesh is grass, the preacher saith:
Alas! his mournful words are true,
For we behold thee in thy bloom
And flush of youth, brief months ago.

Th' elastic step, the stately form,
The speaking eye, and radiant brow,
Prostrate before the canker worm
Of fell disease, are dust e'en now!

But thy freed spirit lies not there,—
To realms above on soaring wing
It mounted, borne by seraphs fair
To courts where angel voices ring.

What tho' the hectoring cough did shake
Thy breathing form, and urge decay,
And the flushed fever tinge thy cheek,
And scorch thy fading life away.

Death, of his gloomy terrors shorn,
To thee was welcome messenger;
Thy spirit saw the radiant morn
Of light and love that welcomed her.

As the bright sun at coming even,
Whose daily journey being o'er,
Sinks calmly through the depths of heaven,
And rolls beneath our western shore,—

But, when the hours of night be past,
In gorgeous beauty next appears,
Faithful and glowing to the last,
In the bright east to glad our years,—

So thou did'st sink beneath the shore
Of bounded time's uncertain sky.
But, filled with hope, life's journey o'er,
Rose into bright eternity.

Methinks upon thine head we see
The shining crown of gems and gold,
Promised to those who faithful be,
Of which thy suffering Savior told.

Disease shall no more try thy flesh,
Grief 'whelm the heart, tears dim the eye,
For thy freed spirit soars afresh,
And dwells in immortality,—

Soars through the boundless fields of bliss,
And bathes in seas of love divine,
Where faith, and hope, and joy, and peace
Forever live, forever shine!

MISCELLANY.

THIRTY YEARS AGO.

BY "JOHN SMITH."

Time itself is a great revolutionist: and sometimes a reformer. Its continual dropping wears away rocks of flint and undermines thrones. Time perseveres in its work of dissolution and reorganization, when other powers grow weary with hopeless effort. Time has been the witness to scenes of anguish, when goodness and genius have been immolated on the altar of passion. Time also has witnessed moral resurrections, when goodness and genius have risen from the tomb in which they seemed buried forever. Time brings us hope now, when we contrast it with time that was. Let us see.

"Come, mother, do give me the sugar in the bottom of that glass; it is so good," said a bright-looking boy as he looked wishfully up in her face, while with one hand he clung to her gown.

"Why, Charles," said his mother, "you will become a real toddy-drinker if you keep on at this rate. Your mouth waters now like an old rummy's! Here I will give you a lump from the bowl, and throw this stuff away."

She was about to suit the action to the word, when the little fellow cried out impatiently—

"I don't want a lump from the bowl, because it does not taste good like that in the glass!"

A shade of anguish flitted across the mother's countenance, as she saw such precocity in a habit she knew to be ruinous, and over which already she had wept many tears. As she contrasted the man of her heart's choice, marked with the distinct tracery of vicious indulgence, with the noble and beautiful man he once was, she could truly have said,

> "The thochts o' by-gone years,
> Still fling their shadows over my path,
> And blind my een wi' tears;
> They blind my een wi'saut, saut tears,
> And sair and sick I pine,
> As memory idly summons up
> The blithe blinks o'lang syne."

And yet because her child cried, and every-body did as she was doing, because it was fashionable, she allowed him to drain the sugar saturated with brandy. And as he did it he smacked his lips with the keen relish of a toper.

The apathy, which then held all minds on the evil of intemperance was truly astonishing. A mother's sensitive heart would sometimes penetrate the delusions of fashion and custom, and see "hungry ruin" in prospect for her son. Sometimes she would articulate her fears lest Charles would become too fond of strong drink, but the husband hushed her by saying "Fudge wife, don't be alarmed for this is nothing strange or unprecedented! In fact I believe I had as great a relish for such things at his age as Charley has now, and you see I have done well enough!"

The wife would have spoken had she dared, as she looked into the face of her husband, bloated and blossomed as it was. She would have used to the father his own prospective ruin as an argument why his son should avoid the same path of death. But such intimations only roused his anger, that she should hint that he was a drunkard, although not unfrequently he had, at some great dinner, been "kicked under the table." The wife suppressed her thoughts, and time unravelled the web of destiny. In three years that husband died—avoiding fashionable nomenclature—a drunkard.

Such a catastrophe aroused the mother from her stupor, and with what success we shall see presently.

It was on a cold blustering day, just as Charles was starting for school, that he came up to his mother:

"Mother, I am afraid I shall take cold; come, please fix me a little nice hot toddy to keep me warm!"

It was said with a sort of shame faced boldness, as though he was not altogether sure of doing right. But the mother detected the cravings of appetite, and felt that the demon must now be exorcised or keep possession forever, as she replied:

"No Charles, you must not have any more such drink. You must never touch it again or you will become such a drunkard as the poor man who died over the way. Do you remember how he shrieked and howled whilst dying of delirium tremens?

She would have said "your father," but of his ruin thoughts trooped up frightfully, and her tongue refused to pronounce the harsh comparison. She burst into a flood of tears. The boy seemed intuitively to catch what was passing in her mind, and instantly sprung to her arms, affectionately kissing her cheek, as he said, "I won't drink any more, mother." She pressed him to her heart, and prayed silently.

From that day he seemed to be a different child. No inducement could make him taste a drop of any intoxicating liquor, and with untiring diligence he pursued his studies. His mind, rarely developed, comprehended and practiced the idea that he must be the architect of his own fortune. His brilliant talents, the more shining in one so young, made him a companion whose society was courted by all. Nature had fitted him to be the admired centre of every circle in which he might move.

At the age of fourteen, Charles was entered a member of —— college. Common consent soon assigned him the first place in the class, and his brilliant qualities as a companion rendered him a universal favorite. Would, I had almost said, nature had moulded him into a ruggeder shape, with mental, moral, and physical ugliness to repel vicious associates, instead of attracting them to himself by so many admirable and fascinating qualities. Intemperance is a social vice, and not a few of its most regretted victims are those whose companionable ways give zest to vice, and pave the highway to ruin How many victims has intemperance made, through the social principle, in some circumstance perverted into the most dangerous lure that ever caught the unwary.

And what a meaning these words have when applied to youth in college. The choicest minds there are congregated. Life is still young, and sociality there sparkles like ruddy wine. Who has not an exhilarating recollection of the hearty laugh, and the brilliant rejoinder of the college circle, when "Greek has met Greek," in the witty warfare? It is the very heyday of glee, and even frosty age is melted as it recurs to those scenes when it was young. And yet that very period is the Scylla and Charybdis of an educated man's life. Thirty years ago the dangers of that period were extreme. Home has just been left behind; and now, for the first time, the youth becomes in a measure his own master. He is a social being, and in circumstances calculated to elicit all his sociality. Hence the hours of mirth and conviviality, in which at length are found not merely the blandishments of an hour, but the beginnings of inveterate habit, the cause of future tears, and, in too many cases, of premature death. The history of American colleges amply proves the assertion.

For two years Charles had avoided danger, and by diligence had secured the approbation of his fellows and instructors. The fall vacation had passed, and he was now a junior, when he met a college mate whose social disposition and fine talents he had learned to admire.

"How are you, Charles?"

"How are you, William?" were the mutual greetings with which they met, and then they recounted the pleasures they had enjoyed at home.

"Charles, come to my room this evening after nine o'clock. The tutor will be snoozing by that time, and we shall have a nice time talking over vacation and what we have seen. Come over, won't you?

Thus pressed, the unsuspecting Charles consented and was there at the appointed hour. He was surprised to find quite a company of mates, and those of a class whose company hitherto he had avoided. He felt uneasy, and wished himself away, but had not courage enough to gratify his wishes. They soon surrounded him, and their flattering attentions, and the uproar of laughter excited by some of his sayings, soon reconciled him to his situation. Anecdote, that wine of sociality, freely circulated, and in this, none could equal the widow's son. From his tenacious memory he feasted his auditors with some choice stories, which produced great merriment.

It was not long before William introduced the champagne. Charles started and thought of his mother. He would have left, but the fear of ridicule was too strong for him. He feared a laugh more than a bad action, and proved, in his own experience, a drunkard's

> "—— laugh a poor exchange,
> For Deity offended.

"Come, fellows, fill up your glasses with a little of the "O be joyful" before we part, what's the use of drowning away life, like good old aunties, afraid of stepping quick for fear they will put a wrinkle in their smooth aprons! Hurrah for a little good cheer! The tutor is in bed, and here's health to his long nap to morrow morning. What's the matter, Charles? Take a little; it's nothing but wine."

The tempted youth dared not refuse, and in a few minutes "nothing but wine" had banished mother, duty, danger and ruin, and with the ardor of his nature, he plunged headlong into the dissipation of the evening.

"Fill again, my merry boys," said the host. "Hurrah for a song! Jack, let us have one of your best!"

"Hurrah for a song," responded the whole company in concert. "Give us a good one, Jack."

The young man thus called on, had a fine voice, and being a great wag, could sing drinking-bouts with great zest. Taking the wine "giving his color in the cup," in his hand, and clearing his throat, he gave them a song from Moore.

> "Friend of my soul, this goblet sip,
> 'T will chase thy pensive tear,
> 'T is not so sweet as woman's lip,
> But oh, 't is more sincere.
> Like her delusive beam,
> 'T will steal away thy mind;
> But like affection's dream,
> It leaves no sting behind."

The song was received with noisy mirth by the company, and again the wine passed round. And thus with wine and song, the hours flew away, until several became first witty, then silly, and then drunk, and among them, Charles

The morning came, and with it the bloodshot eye and aching head to witness against the last night's carouse, and with all, that insupportable sense of degradation and loss of self-respect. What a feeling of agony was that which racked the heart of this widow's son, as the past rushed across his vision, and the future like a horrid spectre loomed up in the distance. But he was in toils, and his social qualities were the cord by which his wicked companions led him on to repeat that same disgraceful scene,

And yet by dint of talent, he secured the honors of his class, in spite of his relaxed exertions. He had seen his mother but once since that change, and her pale countenance recalled him for a time to himself. She did not know of the change, but looked with a mother's pride and hope on her son. On the altar of home, he made his vows of reform. Again among his companion, those vows melted away like snow-flakes in a river. If any man in the world can say truthfully, "the evil which I would not that do I," it is the man beginning to slide down the steeps of dissipation, with companions at his back to prevent his return. And such this brilliant youth found it.

But we must hasten. That day, so longed for by the student at length arrived. The widow, proud of her son's progress and honors, was there to witness his graduation. He had expected her, and had controlled his appetite accordingly. The splendid procession of alumni, undergraduates and spectators crowded the spacious building, the galleries of which shone with a multitude of ladies. The scene is one of the most beautiful in a man's history.

The wrangle of political and religious polemics is left outside that inclosure consecrate to the "east of reason," and woman (mother, sister and friend) lends her additional enchantment. It is a proud day for the candidate for honors! especially if he be "the observed of all observers!"

Already have two speeches been pronounced, and anxious eyes are cast around for the valedictorian. "Where is he?" is the question repeated from lip to lip.

"Have you seen Charles ——?" asked one of his classmates in a hurrid tone. "Where can he be? Zounds? I hope he will keep straight to-day for the honor of the class!

It was the veritable William who proffered the first wine glass to Charles, who was now anxiously inquiring for him.

"I tell you," said his companion, "I am afraid that we shall find him at ——'s hotel. I saw him go in there about nine s'clock, and you know his failing."

"Impossible! he can't be such a fool as to get drunk to-day, when so much is depending on him—and his mother here too!"

"Well, it can do no harm to step over and see, and we must be in a hurry, for in an hour and a half he must speak."

The young men hurried over to the hotel, and to their chagrin found their worst fears realized. There was Charles partially intoxicated. He needed a little "wineing" as he thought, to string him up for his part and his appetite once excited, he had overdone the matter.

"Charley, what do you mean by this foolery? was the first salutation of William. "Your speech, your speech—how are you going to deliver that when you are drunk as a fool!"

"Speech, ah yes, the speech, said Charles with a staggering attempt to cut a pigeon wing on the floor, in which he nearly fell, and then sung out,

> "Send round the cup, for oh, there's a spell in > Its every drop 'gainst the ills of mortality."

"No more such trash," said his impatient companion, interrupting his drunken song. "Come along and sober yourself, for the day depends on your valededictory."

They then compelled him to use water freely, and then walked him up and down the street, uttering broken snatches of song. William became indignant and almost abused him, but Charles quickly silenced him by a keen allusion to his agency in bringing him to his present situation. But for once anger did a drunken man good in recalling him to the reality of his condition. But it is now almost time for the valedictory, and when the name at length was announced, there was a buzz of expectation throughout the vast assembly, for his reputation as the finest scholar and speaker in college was fully established. As he ascended the platform, his whole look and gait revealed his condition. His mother closed her eyes as against a horrid vision she could not believe. But it was no dream, and as his situation for the first time burst on her, she shrieked "He's lost!"

His eye rolled with a sort of vacant stare, as though he were attempting to re-call his oration. The suppressed shriek of his mother, and the looks of pity so galling to a proud spirit, seemed to inspire him. For one moment he glanced over the assembly, and all hesitation vanished. Emotion was awakened, and it lent electricity to the burning words he uttered. Like a giant he grasped the feelings of his audience, and bore them away as by a torrent. The triumph was complete, but it sent a thrill of indignation to many a heart, that a man with such a genius should sacrifice his magnificent gifts at the debasing shrine of intemperance.

Charles was sober now, and hurried to the side of his mother. He reproached his own suicidal course, and vowed to be guilty no more. But the mother looked on it all without confidence, and sank with despondency, under the belief that a drunken father would soon be followed to the grave by a drunken son. She was a broken-hearted woman. Had she lived at this day, she might have hoped, but thirty years ago, the entire influences of society swept men into the whirlpool, and there "was none to deliver.

For a time, while Charles was acquiring his profession, he abstained, but at length gave way to his fatal appetite occasionally. As a lawyer he rose, with astonishing rapidity, to the high places of that noble calling. All did homage to his genius, and yet most regretted that much inspiration did that genius receive from potations of brandy. His mother lived to see his fame, yet died of grief that her only son should so ruthlessly ruin that fame by a debasing practice. Her death seemed to remove the last restraint, and he hastened on his own death, when he had scarcely attained middle age.

A HINT TO THE UNPICKED.—An old lady, resident of a neighboring place, kept a large family of turkies—perhaps sixty. She like a great many other people, thought a great deal of her turkies, and valued them very highly. Opposite her door was a West India Good Store. The man who kept it one day emptied his cask of cherries intending to replace them with new. This old lady being economical, felt it a great pity to have all these cherries wasted, and in order to have them saved, she would drive over her turkies and let them eat them. In the course of the day the old lady thought she would look after them and see if they were in no mischief. She approached the yard, and lo, in the corner lay her turkies in one huge pile, dead. Yes, they were "stone dead." What was to be done!

Surely the old matron could not lose the feathers! She must pick them! She called her daughter and picked them, intending to have them buried in the morning. Morning came, and behold, there were the turkies stalking about the yard featherless enough, (as may be supposed,) crying out, "quit, quit," feeling no doubt mortified that their drunken fit had been the means of losing their coats. Poor things, if they had said "quit," before they begun, they would not have been in this fix. We would advise all young men who are in the habit of drinking to leave off before they get picked; and to those who do not, let every young lady say "QUIT."

A BIT OF ROMANCE.

It is a trite, but at the same time a true remark, that the real incidents of life constantly occurring around us, possess a far more romantic interest than the fanciful ones conceived in the teeming brain of the novelist. Of this the following o'ur true tale, told us in brief by the steward of the packet boat Louisiana, on Saturday will furnish some illustration:

Some ten years ago, as our readers will remember, there was what was termed a "rebellion" in Canada, and after the "patriots" were subdued some were summarily executed and a portion were banished for a long term of years, to Australia. Most of these latter were men of families, from which they were torn without mercy, to expiate in far distant clime by imprisonment and hard labor, the crime of having failed in their attempt to rid their country of the evils of misgovernment. We think they acted very unwisely in proceeding to the extremes as they did, but this point we will not stop to consider. With one of the e expatriated men our tale has chiefly to do.

For seven or eight years he had borne the hardships of a lonely captivity, hopeless of ever seeing home or friends again, when a general amnesty was proclaimed by the British Government in regard to all, with one or two exceptions, of those who had been concerned in the rebellion. Our hero was now at liberty, and his first thought was to seek his home. But he had no means to pay his passage there, and he accordingly shipped on board a whaling vessel which at the end of two years more landed him on his native shores.

Wife, children, and friends filled his thoughts, and he hastened on to his old residence in Canada. Every thing remained as it had been—friends and neighbors greeted him as he passed along—but how his heart sunk within him to find the homestead deserted, and to learn that his wife had been married two years to another, supposing the husband of her youth to be dead. She and her new found mate had settled somewhere in Illinois.

The poor man felt desolate, indeed, he determined to see, and if possible reclaim his wife and children. After weary travel and many inquiries he traces them to Knox county, Illinois, where they were comfortably settled in their new home. There he presented himself a few days since. The wife could not have been more surprised or pained to see an apparition from the grave, for she had long considered him as dead. The new husband, too, was rather disagreeably surprised to see before him a claimant for his wife. What should be done! The first husband anxious to obtain the lady, the second was disinclined to give her up, looking upon his claim as good.

They were reasonable people all around. The original claimant remained in the neighborhood a couple of weeks, during which time the matter was frankly talked over. At last the rivals came to the just and rational conclusion that the lady was the proper person to make a final decision of the question, and to her it was mutually agreed to refer it, giving her time to consider it in all its bearings.

What more perplexing position can a woman be placed in than that? Here were two men with almost equal claims upon her affection. One was the father of all the children but one, the home the companion of her youth—the other, bound to her heart by near and sacred ties, and by the mutual love they bore an infant that had been born to them. She could not for a time decide—what true hearted woman could? A tumult of thoughts and emotions filled her heart alternately swaying her from side to side. Thus the conflict lasted for several days, during which time she was enabled to look clearly into her own heart, and at last she was ready for a decision.

Which could she choose but the man around whom was twined the tendrils of a first and strong affection—to whom she had given the first offerings of her heart? The needle may vibrate for a time, but it points at last with unfailing constancy to the never setting star of the north; and in a like manner the heart of a true woman, having in the universe but one fitting mate, will, after all vicissitudes, turn lovingly to the sunny warmth of "first only love."

A disposition of the youngest child must now be made, and it was mutually agreed by the two men, that, as it could not be deprived of a mother's care, first care, the first husband should take it with the other children, to be restored to the father at some future time. The re-united family now made preparations to go to a new home; and so great was the interest excited in the neighborhood by this singular affair, that as many as a hundred and fifty persons from the neighborhood were present to witness their departure. On Saturday last, they came up on the packet Louisiana, on their way to Michigan, where they will take up their residence.

We naturally sympathize with the first husband, to whom wife and children are restored, but who does not feel for the bereavment of the second.

The Subterranean Lake.

We some time since gave an account of the singular discovery of an underground lake, on the line of the Central Road, west of Niles about two miles. In crossing a low swale or marsh, it became necessary to make an embankment about twenty feet high to correspond with the grade of the road; and the narrowest part of the marsh was chosen, being about one thousand feet across, on either side of which was high level ground. After the embankment had been carried about forty feet on to this low ground, the earth gradually gave way and sank down into what seemed to be a bottomless pit.

The sudden disappearance of the embankment was accompanied by tremendous convulsions of the ground for some distance around where the casuality occurred, and cracks were caused by the upheaving of the ground, deep and large enough to bury a cart and horse in. From exploration and researches made, it appears that the piece of ground over which the grading was to be made had once been a lake, but was now covered by a soil of roots, muck, etc., to the thickness of from ten to twelve feet. The submerged lake is about two miles long, and is in some parts half a mile wide.

At the place where this railroad track crosses it is the narrowest. At one end of the lake is what appears to have been an island, as there are trees of large growth standing, while on nearly the entire circuit of the lake the ground or surface of ten feet has become so hardened that the best of grass is grown, and the spot has been regularly mowed for several years. We believe, in some parts of it, good potatoes have been grown. The depth of the lake is ascertained to be about eighty feet in the deepest part, and the water as clear and pure as that in the river at this city.

After the sinking of the first grading the work was pushed ahead with increased strength, and for eight months eighty hands were employed continually, day and night, one set retiring as the other came on to the work. As the embankment gradually extended out over the part that sank into the sod and crust, again it would become so heavy that another sinking would take place, and in this manner the work has been going on.

The excavation and embankment was, after a while, commenced on both sides of the lake, and last week the contractor says the filling in had met at the bottom, and the prospect was that no more trouble would be found in rapidly completeing the work. The above number of workmen have been engaged at this point for fifteen months—eight months of the time, as before mentioned, day and night. It has cost an immense sum to accomplish the original plan adopted of crossing at this point, but like every thing else undertaken by this company goes straight forward.

We lately saw an account of a similar lake on some of the Southern roads, but not as extensive a one as this. The soil on the surface of this lake is of a rich black color, and in some places has been plowed and planted. The grass grown is of a good quality, and the pasturage during the season of the very best.

It is certainly strange that the discovery had not been made before, but the oldest inhabitants never thought of the matter, and in all probability it would never been brought to light had not this road crossed it. The ground was solid, seemingly, as any marsh, and at all events sufficiently so for all practical purposes, except railroad embankments.

CLIPPINGS.

Bisbop Potter, of the Episcopal Church of Pennsylvania, has prepared a form of prayer to be used in all the churches of the diocese, while the Asiatic Cholera is threatening us with its ravages.

[We should think that in these Cholera times, that it would require something more than the form of prayer to be effectual.]

We heard recently a good story of an Irishman who had never seen any of the birds of America. "The first feathered fowl," said he, "that ever I see when I kum to Amerika, was a forkintine, (porcupine.) I treed him under a hay-stack, and shot him with a barn-shovel. The first time I shot him, I missed him; the second time I shot him, I hit him in the same place where I missed him before!"

According to Haller, women bear hunger longer than men; according to Plutarch, they can resist the effects of wine better; according to Unger, they grow older, and are never bald; according to Pliny, they are seldom attacked by lions, (on the contrary they will run after lions,) and according to Gunter, they can talk a few!

GOOD REASONS FOR VOTING FOR GENERAL CASS.—One of Mr. Cass' stump speakers in the dark corner of Tennessee, (where some green things vegitate,) a few days since discovered the true reason why Gen. Cass should be President, says he, "a man who has six lives, eats ten rations a day, four salaries at a time, and has an opinion for both sides of every question must be the greatest man in the world. I believe I could convince old parson Brownlow of it if I could see the old hoss."

A ROADSIDE CONFAB.—"And so, Squire, you don't take your country paper?"

"No, Major I get the city papers on much better terms, and so I take a couple of them."

"But Squire, these country papers prove of great convenience to us. The more we encourage them, the better their editors can make them."

"Why, I don't know any convenience they are to me."

"The farm you sold last fall was advertised in one of them, and you thereby obtained a customer, did you not?"

"Very true, Major, but I paid three dollars for it."

"And made much more than three dollars by it. Now, if your neighbor had not maintained the press, and kept it ready for your use, you would have been without the means of advertising your property. But I think I saw your daughter's marriage in one of these papers—did that cost you anything?"

"No; but ——"

"And your brother's death was published with a long obituary notice."

"Yes, yes, but—"

"And the destruction of your neighbor Brigg's house by fire. You know these things were exaggerated till the authentic accounts of our newspapers set them right."

"All true; but—"

"And when your cousin Splash was out for the Legislature, you were much gratified at his newspaper defence, which cost him nothing."

"Yes, yes, but these things are news for the reader. They cause people to take papers."

"No, no, Squire Grudge, not if all are like you. Now, I tell you, the day will come when some one will write a very long eulogy on your life and character, and the printer will put it in types, with a heavy black line over it; and with all your riches this will be done for you as a grave is given to a pauper. Your wealth, liberality, and all such things will be spoken of; but the Printer's boy, as he spells the words, in arranging the types will remark of you: poor, mean devil! he is even spunging for an obituary!" Good morning Squire.

LOVE.

My love is not a beauty
To other eyes than mine;
Her curls are not the fairest,
Her eyes are not divine;
Nor like the rosebud parted,
Her lips of love may be;
But though she's not a beauty,
She's dear as one to me.

Her neck is far from swan-like,
Her bosom unlike snow;
Nor walks she like a deity
This breathing world below;
Yet there's a light of happiness
Within, which all may see;
And though she's not a beauty,
She's dear as one to me.

I would not give the kindness,
The grace that dwells in her,
For all that Cupid's blindness,
In others might prefer!
I would not change her sweetness,
For pearls of any sea;
For better far than beauty
Is one kind heart to me.

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a super-royal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will reserve the right and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy, both Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the inferior, and will try by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the "States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall ride forth in His cloudy chariot, and dash to pieces the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw, that it become fine like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of Him who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and untarnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two Dollars a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United States, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

From the Times and Seasons.

Dialogue between a Clergyman and Saint.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES AND SEASONS:

SIR: Not long since, I had the honor to be in the company of a clergyman, as he styled himself, and as our religion was the engrossing topic of conversation. I had thought it would be no harm to community at large, if some of the items of our conversation were made public.

Clergyman.—Your Society, I perceive, believe in the Book of Mormon as a revelation from God.

Saint.—Yes! certainly: all truth came from the Lord by revelation.

C. Why don't you show the plates and convince the world at once?

S. For the same reason, sir, that you do not show the stone tables, and convince the world at once. They were held sacred in the ark of the covenant, and he that looked into that died. Besides Mr. Smith would be the only proper person to exhibit and explain them: and for him to travel and exhibit them to convince the world at once, over a globe of about 25,000 miles in circumferance, embracing various climes and inhabitants, using more than 300 different languages, and numbering more than 900,000,000 souls,—would be an eternal work. To do nothing but travel he would do well if he convinced one a day, which would be 365 a year. At this rate, could the present inhabitants live so long, it would require more than two and a half millions of years, leaving the increase as the world is now, in heathen darkness.

C. I see you are prepared to resist natural reasons by arguments which have never before been presented to me. But as to its being a revelation the world doubts.

S. Don't the world believe the witnesses to the book?

C. No: they testify too much: saying that an angel came down from heaven and brought the plates, and showed them.

S. Is anything contrary to scripture that an angel should come from heaven in this age of the world, more than another?

C. Yes! The idea of seeing angels is preposterous. Dr. Gill, Dr. Scott, Dr. Clark, and all our great men in divinity discard the idea. Why sir, the presence of an holy angel would consume us.

S. I see you don't believe in the administration of angels in the church of Jesus Christ.

C. No: not I—it is next to blasphemy to suppose that God would send a holy angel among men in such an enlightened age of the world.

S. Sir, your reason is contrary to the Bible; now listen to me a moment and I will show you that God never had a church and people upon the earth, without administering to them by angels. Hagar, Abraham's wife's servant saw an angel, to comfort her in the hour of distress: The Lord and two angels feasted with Abraham upon a fat calf—see Gen. 18 ch:—and the same angels went from Abraham, while he plead with the Lord for Sodom and Gomorrah, and staid all night with Lot and partook of another feast. This may be the reason why Paul said "be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Jacob saw concourses of angels descending and ascending from heaven to earth, and even wrestled with God! Moses, who, after he murdered the Egyptian, had no better reputation than other men under the same charge, saw God face to face, and seventy of the elders of Israel with him. And the angel went with the camp—Joshua saw the captain of the Lord's hosts—and from the reading of the Old Testament, it would seem that it was no very uncommon sight for men and women to see angels; even old Nebuchadnezzar, when the three holy men were cast into a fiery furnace, saw four walking in the flames, "and the form of the fourth was like unto the Son of God." It appears he knew how Jesus Christ looked several hundred years before he came in the flesh, wicked as he was, and that is more than you allow among what you call righteous.

Again, besides the administering of angels to thousands which I will not now trouble you to hear,—at the birth of Jesus and before,—the Jews, who, you admit were so wicked that they crucified the Lord, were nevertheless visited by an angel yearly at the pool of Bethesda—an angel visited Cornelius before he was initiated into the kingdom: an angel unlocked the prison doors for Peter; and when the Lord was about to show his servants things that must shortly come to pass, he sent and signified it by an angel unto his servant John, and told John that the mystery of the seven stars was the seven angels of the seven churches of Asia. What think ye, did God ever have a church without an angel in it?

C. You Mormons have too much scripture—you take all. Now we believe that reason and philosophy have the place of revelation, and as the Old Testament has been fulfilled, so has also the New, when the apostles died, there ceased to be anything more than the foundation which our learned divines were to build up churches until they converted the world to christianity, and brought in the millennium.

S. Too much scripture! why, sir, the apostle says all scripture given by inspiration, is profitable for doctrine and reproof, &c., and that in the last days God, not man, would pour out his spirit upon all flesh; and they should propheey, dream dreams, and see visions; and the Lord would reveal the abundance of peace and truth: gather his children from every country whither he had scattered them, and return to them a pure language, that they might call upon him with one consent: gather all nations to the valley of Jehoshaphat, and destroy them, that the children of Israel would be seven years in burning the carriages and implements of war; that instead of your reason and philosophy, Paul says, beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the rudiments of the world, and not after the doctrine of Christ; that instead of your easy times, the powers of heaven are to be shaken, and a time of trouble ensue which will baffle the skill of philosophy, while earthquakes, rebellion, bloodshed, and calamity will continue until great Babylon falls.

C. Must bid you good bye, sir, that doctrine is unpopular.

"Mormonism."

If Mormonism succeeds, christianity will receive a mortifying blow. The question is, what ought to be done? The answer is "inform the people." We have looked upon it as a mere delusion, containing the seeds of its own dissolution. But there is order in this fanaticism, there is a system in this imposture, and it carries with it an invisible spirit by which the learned and unlearned are strangely overcome."—[Baptist Register.

☞ Yes, Mr. Register, "inform the people," that is just what ought to be done, and if christianity, as now practised by christendom, from the Catholic with his beads down to a Millerite with his picture of Daniel's vision, does not "receive a mortifying blow," there is no truth in the Bible.

Inform the people, and if Paganism, from jugarnaut down to an Indian pow-wow, does not "receive a mortifying blow," then there is no virtue in the Priesthood of the Son of God.

Inform the people, and if all nations in their present notions, embracing Jews and Gentiles, an Infidels, do not "receive a mortifying blow," then there is no God.

Inform the people, for information is the food of Mormonism, and power the life of it. Bless the discernment of the Register! there is "order and system" in Mormonism, and there is faith, virtue, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. And again, there is a form of godliness and the acknowledgment and manifestation of power; because the signs you know were to follow them that believe.

Inform the people, for Joseph Smith, like his brethren the prophets, has been killed, and you know, the good book says it should be so. The first man that offered an acceptable offering before the Lord was killed, and Christ was killed, and the promise was that his disciples should be served likewise.

Inform the people, and give the truth, for false information will disgust wise men, and then our "invisible spirit," full of revelation, and prophecy, will overcome the learned and unlearned, and help bring to pass the strange act of God. Give the people information, do, and Mormenism is safe.

Inform the people, do that Mormonism contains the seed of its own continuation, and the elements of its own exaltation. What bore Noah's ark triumphantly over the flood will bear Mormonism victoriously through the fervent heat of the last days. Mormonism embraces everything good in heaven, or on earth, and it claims all truth in heaven, earth and hell: so do inform the people, that the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, holds the keys of the Kingdom, spoken of by Daniel, and the voice of the spirit says, this is the way—walk ye in it!

Inform the people that the "invisible spirit" of Mormonism, having the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, for walls to support the gospel of the Bible, on one side, and the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods on the other, for witnesses and messengers, is abundantly able to cope with the philosophy, wit, ambition, avarice, and aggrandizement of the priests of Baal since the apostles fell asleep, even the hireling clergy of the nineteenth century.

Inform the people, that Mormonism is the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, and will continue to roll forth until it becomes a great mountain, fills the whole earth, and even the gates of hell should not prevail against it. So Mr. Register, you perceive that Mormonism is a great leveling machine, high as heaven, deep as hell, and great as the earth, propelled by the "invisible spirit" of an all powerful God and who can stop it?

Lines written on the birth of the infant son of Mrs. Emma, widow of the late General Joseph Smith.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

Sinless as celestial Spirits—
Lovely as a morning flow'r,
Comes the smiling infant stranger
In an evil-omen'd hour.

In an hour of lamentation—
In a time—a season when
Zion's noblest sons are fallen,
By the hands of wicked men.

In an hour when peace and safety
Have the civil banner fled—
In a day when legal justice
Covers its dishonor'd head.

In an age when Saints must suffer
Without mercy or redress:
Comes to meet a generation
That has made it fatherless.

Not to share a father's fondness—
Not to know its father's worth—
By the arm of persecution
'Tis an orphan at its birth!

Smile, sweet babe! thou art unconscious
Of thy great, untimely loss!
The broad stroke of thy bereavement,
Zion's pathway seem'd to cross!

Till in childhood thou had'st known him
Had the age, thy father spar'd;
The endearment of remembrance,
Through thy life time thou had'st shar'd.

Thou may'st draw from love and kindness
All a mother can bestow;
But alas! on earth, a father
Thou art destined not to know!

Nauvoo, Nov. 24th, 1844.

Apostrophe to Gold.

God of the craven heart! Idol of millions, how splendid are thy temples, how zealous are thy worshipers! They gather around thy smile in the morning, they leave not thy devotions at midnight! Thou smilest upon them and they grow mad in the midst of their palaces. They make themselves monarchs in fancy and conquerors in dreams. Who can withstand thee! Thou leadest the feet of beauty, thou directest the arm of the brave! thy pathway is the pathway of triumphs, thy presence the solace of power! Thou silenced the voice of eloquence when the Macedonian held thee up glittering before the eye of the orator; and the mistress of the world rose before thee in the balance! Disposer of empires! thou spreadest over the world. Thy spell nerved the assassin, and urged on the betrayer. Thy yellow visage incited the spoiler when he sought thee on the crimson field, and made himself red in the carnage. In all ages thou hast triumphed. Whether in the thirty pieces rewarding a Judas, or the sparkling crown on the brow of a tyrant; always alike invincible. The man of business bows obsequiously to thee. The man of fashion falls before thee, and the miser clutches thy garments as though it were the curtains of heaven! Thou hast a goal of a splendid misery, where guilt makes her alliance with death! The virgin at the sanctuary fears not thy footsteps, and the shorn priest flies not the power of thy magic.—[Ossian.

KISSING TO SOME PURPOSE.—A story has reached our ears, of a singular scheme for raising funds, which was hit upon and put in practice at a donation party held not more than a thousand miles off. It appears that some of the kissable ladies present actually allowed their sweet lips to be tasted at the rate of fifty cents a kiss—this being considered a suitable price for the privilege! If we are not misinformed, one gentleman of the party took five dollars' worth!—[Sandwich Observer.

The Steam Guage.

We yesterday made known our intention to notice more at large, the invention of a Steam Guage, by A. S. Lyman, by which the pounds of steam to the squure inch, or the state of the water in the boiler, may be understood at all times, as accurately as we can tell the degree of heat or cold by a thermometer, in any day of the year. Their have been many inventions of modern times, to give notice to engineers, officers, and others, of the condition of the steam and the water in the boilers, but we have not met with any thing that so fully meets our expectation, and is so fair an index to the actual state of the steam and water, as this new guage. We are the better prepared to express an opinion of its utility, from the fact, that we have had it, for several weeks, attached to the steam boiler which drives our presses; and whilst its novelty has attracted attention to it, the importance of the design has given it additional consideration. We have watched it with care, and have at all times found it subject entirely to the state of the steam and water in the boiler.

So sensitive and so true to the laws of nature which govern it, is this guage, that although it is separated by a brick wall from the boiler room, yet, with the doors shut, and without any intimation or knowledge without, any one may understand when the five doors are open—when fresh fuel is added—when the pump is keeping up a supply of water, and every cut off of the steam made by each revolution of the engine. All this is shown upon a plate, like the plate of a thermometer, graduated and marked by degrees and figures, and reduced to a scale which shows the exact weight of steam carried, and the precise condition of the water in the boiler. The index mercury rises as the pressure of the steam increases, and the index mercury for the water rises as soon as the water falls too low in the boiler. In either case, the effect is the same on one or the other indexes. If either go to a point beyond that of safety, or to a point which is usually esteemed unsafe by men conversant with the subject, the guage is so constructed that, as soon as it reaches that point, whether from the high pressure of steam or the low state of the water in the boiler, it throws a connected piece of machinery into operation and gives instantaneous alarm to all in the vicinity.

The whole thing although so useful, is of the most simple construction, and suited to every steam boiler wherever used. On steamboats, the guage and index may be placed in the cabin, and whilst it will constitute an article of ornament, it will also inform every passenger of the precise state of the steam and water.

The principle is simple and yet in strict accordance, with the known laws of nature, to test the pressure of steam. An iron pipe curved in the shape of an inverted syphon, is inserted into the top of the boiler. In the second or the third bend, as the case may require from the location of the guage, water is inserted and then a column of mercury. On the top of this is fastened a glass tube, extending along the dial or index plate, like the tube on a thermometer or barometer, and graded according to the pressure of the steam. As the steam in the boilers is increased in pressure and heat, it operates on the water in the curve of the tube, and it, in turn, affects the mercury, and by its elevation on the index-plate shows the pressure of the steam. Water does not transmit heat downwards, and this is the principle upon which the guage is constructed.

The guage for the water is like that for the steam, with the exception of the end of the tube, indicating the state of the water, is inserted into a box, filled with water, and sealed, which rests upon the top of the flue. As the water diminishes in the boilers, the water becomes rarified, and operates on the column of mercury in the long leg of the tube, thus, indicating, by the rise of the mercury, the decrease of the water in the boiler.

If the steam gets too high, or the water too low, and the mercury is forced beyond the degrees marked for it, it then sets in operation a machine which gives a loud alarm, sufficient to warn all persons on the boat.

Connected with it, is the thermometer, which indicates the state of the atmosphere.

When air is heated it is less compressible than when cold. The data isken with the thermometer, standing at 72 deg., and every 8 deg. above or below, one pound is added to, or taken from the indication on the steam index.

These are our observations on the operations of this useful invention. Hereafter, we shall give the description of the invention.

We may add, that we have before us a letter from Mr. John Hall, U. S Inspector of boilers, for this port, and President of the Engineers' Association of St. Louis; from several millers, and others, in this city, all attesting, in the strongest terms, it value and utility.

It has, we learn, been partially introduced upon several boats, with the most decided success; and we feel very certain that any captain who will investigate the principle, will have it put up in his social hall.

A FEARFUL SCENE.—While hundreds of persons, male, female, women and children, were skating, sliding and sporting on the ice above the Schuylkill dam, an area of about two acres of the frozen element separated suddenly from the main body, and moved towards the fall. Instantly the utmost terror was created; large numbers leaped or tumbled into the water, and were dragged, half dead with cold and fright, to shore; others swooned, and were rescued senseless before they reached the dam, while still others, and fortunately a fewer number, took the frightful leap with the ice over the dam, and it is believed were all rescued with life, though severely injured by the ice falling upon them. Great gallantry and intrepidity was exhibited by the neighbors and ice cutters, without whose aid large numbers must have drowned.—[American Cour.

Correspondence of the St Louis Union.

HARBOR OF HAVANA, Jan. 20, 1849.

Twenty days in quarantine! Such has been the imprisonment inflicted on all persons criminal enough to embark from New Orleans for this port. The offence is visited with a severe penalty, which, thanks to an easy conscience, has been almost paid in my case, and with less suffering than could have been reasonably anticipated. We have been allowed fresh air, and a plenty of it, whist moored off the city, with ample means of counting the distant towers and arches, the ships in the harbor, and the forts around it, and of gazing at the fields beyond, now green with the young cane and trees of palm and cocoa-nut. The Spanish devotion to gambling has been clearly manifested on board; for the last twenty days have been passed by the Spaniards in playing monte, loteria, and treienta uno, each winning, Yankee fashion I suppose.

A dull sound from morning to night has afforded neither variety nor interest; although the passengers belong to different nations, and might, by comparing notes, give to each other some valuable information. Among them is a creole merchant from Yucatan, who is of opinion that that quondam Mexican province will never again renew its connexion with the Central Government, to become a prey to military banditti. With the Yucatecoes the desire is general for annexation to the United States, as the best and speediest remedy both for the ills they suffer in the present and fear for the future. The war of races with which they have been cursed, would not return, or not with such frightful dangers, if the Yankees were there. The Indians had long been in a servile condition, and kept unarmed, like our blacks, although far more intelligent than the latter. They belonged to the race which Cortez found in possession of Mexico on his arrival. One of the white aspirants to the chieftainship or presidency, took up arms to gain the office he coveted, and called in the aid of the Indians in whose hands he placed weapons. The necessary consequence was, that the Indians found a resolute leader in their own ranks, and set up for themselves. They waged an exterminating war against the whites, massacreing all who fell into their hands; and were almost masters of the country when a Commissioner was sent to the United States invoking the friendly intervention of our Government. We had previously acknowledged the quasi independence of that country, by treating it as a neutral during our war with Mexico, and if our policy had permitted, Yucatan would have gladly become then, as she desires to be now, a part of our Confederacy. It is supposed that Col. White, with the forces under his command, will speedily restore order, or "conquer peace," and be chosen President, for a reward for his services—all this, however, with the hope of the ultimate connexion of Yucatan with the United States. A glance at the map will show the military importance of that country, either for upholding our maritime supremacy in the Gulf, or for commanding both the isthmus of Tehuantepec and the usual route from New Orleans to Chagres, the first station on the way to California. It is fortunate for us that at any time we can gain Yucatan, with the consent of its inhabitants, and thus prevent that peninsula from falling into the hands of any Power which might seriously annoy our gulf commerce. Cuba, Yucatan, and Florida, command the Gulf.

A planter from Jamaica, who has suffered from the hypocritical philanthropy of the "home government," (Great Britain,) speaks of the estates on that island and the other British West Indies as ruined by emancipation. The compensation for their slave property, voted to the owners by the British Parliament, did not equal the full value of the blacks, nd left the estates without laborers on whom dependence could be placed; consequently depreciating the value of estates more than one-half. The blacks can obtain subsistence from the abundant fruits of the island, and an half acre of yams, requiring but little labor; and therefore will not work on the sugar plantations. On such islands it is absurd to expect the free negro to labor constantly. The experiment of importing Coolies has not succeeded. Most of them have become abject and worthless vagabonds, sleeping in the open air and trusting to chance for food. The few Coolies willing to work, complain of the cruel deception practiced by the British government, in inducing them to leave their native land with the hope of bettering their fate, it is true, they have higher wages than they obtained in the East Indies, but with their present pay they cannot procure more than one-fourth as much rice, (their principal food.) Every article they purchase is bought on the plantations, and at the owner's prices. Either as a measure of policy or philanthropy, the British emancipation act signally failed. Yet a class of fanatics in the United States recommend the adoption in our country of the same course of action.

We have just heard here of the result of the recent election in France. The remembrance of the past glory of the Empire seems, under the shrewd management of Thiers, to have overcome all newer partialities. It is somewhat remarkable that the same men (Thiers and Barrot) who wished to place the young Count of Paris on the throne one year ago, and who were then rejected by the people, have so soon conjured up in such a person as Louis Napoleon, a spirit to control France for their own advantage. It is evident Thiers continues the master manager, and that his ambition is not yet satiated. What effect this election may have on the peace of Europe, is about as problematical as that of the election of Taylor on the internal affairs of the United States. Both of these results may be ascribed to similar causes—the use made of military fame by cunning politicians, with various and conflicting views. In the French case, the President elect is merely the heir, however, of another's glory. The parallel, in most respects, might be traced to great advantage, as a valuable lesson for American freemen.

This harbor is large, safe, commodious, and well protected. Although a fresh breeze, either from the north or east, has been blowing for the last twenty days, the thermometer has stood for most of the time at from 60 to 70 deg. fahrenheit, here in the harbor. In the city, it has been nearly ten degrees warmer. Of the forty-five vessels in quarantine at the same time four-fifths bore at the mast-head "the stars and stripes." Most of the commerce of this city seems to be with the United States. The Charleston steamer has been regular in her trips, making two whilst we have been at anchor. The steamer Falcon on her return from Chagres, touched here on Wednesday. Whilst we have been "cabined, cribbed and confined" at this spot, one might have gone to Europe and nearly returned. But on Monday the gates of Havana will be opened to us "infected outsiders." S.

FATE OF THE APOSTLES.—St. Matthew, the apostle and evangelist, is supposed to have suffered martyrdom, or was slain with a sword at the city of Ethiophia.

St. Mark, the evangelist, was dragged through the streets of Alexandria, in Egypt, until he expired.

St. Luke, the evangelist, was hanged upon an olive tree in Greece.

St. John, the apostle and evangelest, was put into a cauldron of boiling oil, and escaped death! He afterwards died a natural death at Ephesus, in Asia. (Doubtful.)

St. James, the great, was beheaded at Jerusalem.

St. James, the less, the apostle was thrown from a pinnacle, or wing of the Temple, and then beaten to death with a fuller's club.

St. Phillip, the apostle, was hanged up against a pillar, at Hierapolis, a city of Phrygia.

St. Bartholomew, the apostle, was flayed alive by the command of a barbarous king.

St. Andrew, the apostle, was bound to a cross where he preached to the people until he expired.

St. Thomas, the apostle, was run through the body with a lance, at Coromandel in the East Indies.

St. Jude, the apostle, was shot to death with arrows.

St. Simon, (Zealot,) the apostle was crucified in Persia.

St. Matthias, the apostle, was first stoned and then beheaded.

St. Barnabas, the apostle, of the Gentiles was stoned to death by the Jews at Salania.

St. Paul was beheaded at Rome, by the tyrant Nero.

LATE FROM THE GOLD REGIONS—MORE EXTENSIVE DISCOVERIES.—We find the following late and important intelligence from the Gold Regions, in the New Orleans Times of the 30th ult.

Letters have been received in this city, from the capital of Mexico containing later advices from California than any which have yet been published. One of these letters, from an intelligent gentleman, and who is well informed on the subject, states that further discoveries have been made in the gold region, which yield even a more abundant supply of the article than the previous "diggins." The quantity gathered already amounted to at least $100,000 daily, and was constantly increasing, without apparently an exhaustion, or any limit to the supply. There was a great deal of distress among all the diggers, for want of the common necessaries of life, and attended with very extensive sickness and mortality.

Men loaded with gold, appear like haggard vagabonds, clothed in filthy and tattered garments of the meanest kind It is stated that one man, who had two barrels of brandy, sold them out at the mines, by the small wine-glass, at rates which realized him fourteen thousand dollars in gold. Every thing, and particularly articles of food and raiment, were at most unheard of prices, for gold was so plenty and in the possession of every one, that it seemed to have lost its value.

Daily additions were made to the number employed in digging, though as yet no portion of the vast flood of imigration from the United States, had arrived. The first arrivals of provisions, and other supplies, will no doubt realize larger profits than any previous instance that can be found in the annals of trade.

CHINA.—A letter from Macao, published in the Philadelphia North American gives an account of a difficulty between the American and British Consuls at that place. The British Consul ordered our flag to be hauled down from the consulate flagstaff, which order was of course disregarded. He then made a protest against the display of the American flag, on the ground that the soil had been ceded by the Chinese to the English, and therefore no flag but the British had a right to fly there. The interpreters, on the contrary, say that the characters used by the Chinese, in their treaty with the English, means, generally, Europeans and foreigners. The consulate belongs to the Americans, was built by them, and the land was rented from Chinese owners, and the ground-rent is paid to Chinese and not to Englishmen. The matter was referred by the British Consul to the British colonial government at Hong Kong.

PAYING FOR THE WHISTLE.—A striking illustration of the cost of "Bunkum" legislation, is seen in the discussion of the Pacheco slave claim, which amounts to about one thousand dollars, and the discussion on which has already cost over ten thousand dollars!

Henry Clay has been unanimously nominated by both branches of the Kentucky Legislature, for U. S Senator.

"Did You Curse the Whisky Seller!"

From a certain speech that we delivered the other day before the public in this place, some have drawn the inference that we cursed the whisky seller; and since that time, they have asked if we really meant to be understood so and so. In order not to be misapprehended, we now reduce to writing what we did say, which is our honest conviction and sentiment. We publish it that it may be before the eyes of both buyer and seller that our garments may be clear in the day when a righteous Judge shall determine the character of all our works. As men and citizens, we have no fault to find with our dealers in ardent spirits, only as their business tends to corrupt the morals of society—to prostrate the standard of virtue and religion, and open a door for every species of vice and crime. It is no less for the good of the seller than for the buyer that we express our sentiments. We would rejoice as much to see him saved as to see any one else. We indulge no hatred, no disposition to abuse or persecute them that do traffic in this article; still we raise our voice against the business. It may be profitable now, but it is a profit that brings death, and makes the seller responsible for the poverty, misery, crime and perhaps death of many others. But it is argued that a little kept in a neighborhood is necessary in cases of sickness—this may be; but the Apostle James, forgot it when he gave directions about the sick. See James' Epistle, 5 chap. 14 v., and onward; also, Mark 16 chap. 18 v. If, however, it is really necessary to have liquor in a neighborhood to be used in particular cases of sickness, it is very kind and benevolent certainly in our friends to keep the article; but if they would extend their kindness and benevolence a little further by keeping a little liquor to give away in particular cases and sell none at all, their kindness and benevolence would then be without the alloy of earthly mammon.

Some tell us that they have no means of going to the Valley only as they sell whisky to get the means to go. Such are in a fair way to get to the Valley, but not to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake; for it is hopeful that they will not go there without a reformation; but we have reason to fear that they are in the broad road that leads to the valley and shadow of death.

Others justify themselves by saying: "If we do not sell it, somebody else will, and we might as well have the profit of it as others." Let us look at a parallel case. A neighbor of yours, with a large sum of money, starts on a journey to some distant town or country, and you know of some four or five men that have agreed to lie in wait for him on the road to kill him and get his money. You reason with yourself thus. "The man will certainly be killed and lose his money, for if I should not kill him and get it, those other men will that are lying in wait, and I might as well have it as they, so I will kill him and take his money before he reaches those that are in wait." No one need tell you that this would be wrong. If others will bathe their hands in human blood for silver or gold, it is no reason why you should do it; and if others will sell whisky and cause men thereby to commit suicide, it is but an impotent reason why you should follow their example.

How many men are hurried off the stage of life by the use of ardent spirits, before they have completed their part in the drama? Men too, whose brilliant talents would have shed a light upon the path-way of many a dark and benighted soul! But they are gone! Gone into the world of spirits; and for aught we know, are pouring out their imprecations and bitter curses upon the heads of those who sold them the "fiery flood of ruin," by which they were swept down into the gulf of despair and woe. While these are passing under the lighter strokes of our Maker's chastening rod, the heavier ones are probably reserved for those who set the snare to entrap the unsuspecting. Be warned then, ye dealers in this article, lest there be a worse snare just before you in the path of life, and your blindness not allow you to see it until you feel its power. There is other business by which you can make an honorable living. The soil here is good and productive, and is faithful to reward all your labor that you bestow upon it.

Some will say that there is but little liquor sold in this country, in comparison to what there is in many other places; and there is no need of being so strenuous, for their is no likelihood of any serious evil arising out of the small quantity that is sold and used here: But reader, REFLECT! "Tall oaks from little acorns grow," and "great streams from little fountains flow." Vice of any kind does not sink to its lowest depths at the first plunge. There must be a beginning to effect anything, good or bad. If we can nip the bud in the beginning, and blast the evil flower before the bitter fruit makes its appearance to any extent, we shall feel that we have subserved the interests of humanity and religion, and that we are thereby paid for all our toil.

We did say that the gain of whisky sold here in opposition to the feelings and wishes of the great majority of the community, should be cursed. We did not say that the person should be cursed who sold the liquor, but we said his gain should be cursed. We will not curse the person that sells the liquor, but we do say and declare that the gain of liquor traffick in this country, will lead him who obtains it in that way, into a place where he shall say himself, "I am cursed!" If this does not turn out to be so, the truth is not in us. We said further, that there were those who sold whisky, and Mormons too, (but not Saints,) that would turn a deaf ear to the cry of the widow and orphan, and that would pinch a picayune till it would squeal murder! A pint of whisky, we said, would probably constitute the extent, the grandeur and the glory of the kingdom over which such would reign in the eternal world, with a little pile of fire and brimstone under their throne.

Salt Lake Emigrants.

Having recently heard from Santa Fe that the winter has been very severe there, and that they are losing many of their cattle in consequence of the deep snow; and this place being much south of the Salt Lake, and approximating near to the same Longitude west, we have reason to fear, that they have had a severer winter in the latter place than they anticipated when they wrote their last Epistle, saying to the emigrants to come with only provisions enough to last them through the journey. They will probably have to feed all their surplus grain to their stock to winter them through, and they may lose many of their cattle despite of all their exertions. If they should, it would greatly retard their farming operations for the coming season; and we therefore think it more safe and prudent for all emigrants to the above place to take at least two hundred pounds of good breadstuffs to every soul above two years old; and those under two years old need not be reckoned at all. All other provisions and niceties, according to the taste and ability of the respective families, in like proportion, if possible.

Milch cows should be taken by all means, as many of them as possible. For bread, milk, butter, and honey constitute the usual food of the Saints. Animal food costs cruelty and blood, and should be used sparingly by those who fear God and respect the works of his hands. Let the shedding of blood, be the result of actual need; for the Lord hath said unto us: "Woe unto him that sheddeth blood when he hath no need!"

Whenever God has had a people on the earth whom he thought well enough of to speak to from Heaven, he has suffered offences to come upon them; and has even said that they must needs come. Why must they needs come? Martyrs' blood must flow to sanctify the people; for "without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Offences are borne by an enemy's hand, and by it, dealt out to the Saints. Jehovah looks upon a sacrifice of this kind for his sake, and sends pardon and forgiveness to his people. From the days of Abel to the days of Joseph Smith, this has been the case. In view of this, Jesus Christ hath said: "Except a man lay down his life for my sake, he is not worthy of me, neither can he be my disciple. The souls of them who were beheaded for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus, are crying from beneath the altar, and waiting for their exaltation and for their blood to be avenged upon the earth.

The forgiveness of sins costs richer blood than that of beasts—therefore spare the brute as much as possible—but seek not to save your own life; for if you should effect it, you would stay the action of Jehovah in the forgiveness of sins, and consequently lose your life at last. Remember that the blood of your martyred brethren is a blessing in disguise. It is, indeed, "the seed of the church." It is the token of pardon and forgivenes to you; and the seal of condemnation and woe upon those by whom these offences come. "Rejoice ever more. Pray without ceasing, and in all things give thanks."

Salt Lake Postage.

Some have thought it very hard and extortionate to be obliged to pay 40 cents postage on a letter from the Salt Lake here. The last mail brought through was by Mr. EGAN. He brought many letters for poor people, widows and soldiers wives. We advised Mr. EGAN to give these out free of charge—he did so; and as he had had a hard time in coming through with the mail, lost many of his animals on the way, &c., we thought it no more than right that he should have forty cents a letter from such as could pay it. We have yet to learn that we were wrong in our counsel to him.

We sent a private mail to the Valley last fall at an expense of more than three hundred dollars. No man, or set of men, can carry a mail there or bring one back without sinking a good deal of money. One man cannot go through alone; he must have a strong guard. It is better that all bear a proportion of this expense, than to crush or oppress three or four men that endure the hardship of transporting the mail across the Plains in severely cold weather. Let those who find fault with this amount of postage on a letter, volunteer their services to take a mail through to the Valley with that reduction of postage which they require Mr. Egan to make, and we will employ them, if they are responsible men.

No Soul.

One very strong evidence of the absence of soul is this! A man that is "well to do" in life—has an abundance of every thing around him; but instead of subscribing for the paper himself, he borrows it of some poor neighbor—perhaps of some poor widow. How even must be the thread of such a man's life! He passes onward through time with all the stoick indifference of Zeno himself. He knows neither the pleasure of hope nor the torment of fear; for being conscious that he has no soul, neither hope of heaven nor fear of hell can be inspired in his bosom.

For the Guardian.

KEG CREEK, March 1, 1849.

Mr. EDITOR: having visited, of late, various sections in Pottawatamie county, I feel that a few items of my conviction which are the result of my inquiries, would not be unacceptable to the readers of your most valuable paper.

I am satisfied that there are men in your county that would do you a personal injury if they had the opportunity; and that too, because your exertions and praise-worthy efforts have frustrated their intentions to establish a branch mint in this region. Their discomfeiture and exposure have made them desperate. They have undertaken to establish a new church, and talk of settling in Jackson county, Mo. Or in some way, to join with the Indians below. They think that this will be the most effectual means in their power to raise a prejudice against you and your church, and to cause you trouble. But as you have been unflinching so far, I trust you will continue in the same track until you gain a complete victory. Though they should slander you with all the calumny which their forked tongues can utter, or their evil hearts invent; the public will know that the real cause of all their trouble and difficulty is, they could not be suffered to coin money here.

They must have more sense than to believe they can go to Jackson county. I have no idea that they will really attempt it; still, by such a rumor they hope to bring trouble on you. But I do think they intend establishing themselves in some Indian country below; and if their bogus press has already been conveyed below Fort Leavenworth, I should not be surprized. These men, it would seem, have some very pious streaks since their exposure. They cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, and even, at times, profess such holiness that it is enough to make one pity the weakness and wickedness of man. The people of the county generally, understand the causes of your action; the protestations of this guilty party to the contrary, notwithstanding.

The principle men of your church are gone, I believe, to the Great Salt Lake; and I should think that all true hearted Mormons, who wish to adhere to the church and be directed by her counsels, would go there if any where. But those among you that have followed you as a shark follows a vessel, who are not sincere, will operate against you in "undercurrents" and upper currents; and float down stream with their bogus god. But I trust that Uncle Sam will be after them with a sharper stick than you have got, and neither Peter James, John, nor any other ancient worthies will rescue them out of their fix.

Yours, most truly, S. D. G.

[We are somewhat acquainted with the writer of the above—though not particularly; but he has touched some things pretty correctly, according to our views, and we insert his letter, and can assure him that we do not intend to be weary in well doing. He has shown himself a good policeman, and we should be pleased to hear from him again.]

Conference.

On the 6th of April next, will be our Annual Conference in this place. As there will be much important business, concerning emigration, &c., our friends are requested to attend as far as it may be practicable. You, that have not had an earlier opportunity to subscribe for the Guardian, can then avail yourselves of a very convenient one.

A Word to the Church in St. Louis.

BELOVED FRIENDS AND BRETHREN: You, no doubt wish to know our advice and counsel to you with regard to your emigrating. First then: such of you as have the means to fit yourselves out for the Valley of the Mountains, would do well to go this spring. But such as have not the means of doing this, but are in good business in that place, had better remain there this coming season; or, at least, while your business is good.

Knowing the good will of those gentlemen and brethren towards us, whose names we have taken the liberty to insert as agents for the Guardian; and believing their zeal and fidelity in the cause to be unabated, we hope they will pardon us for taking this liberty, and lend us their aid and exertions in increasing our subscription list—in procuring advertisements for our paper, and in forwarding to subscribers all papers that may be sent to their care, with as little delay as possible.

We tender our particular compliments to Mr. EGAN and to Messrs. REESE & TOWNSEND, of St. Joseph, for the active and efficient services they have rendered us. It shall be our study and our aim, to merit the favorable attention of all good citizens that may come within the scope of our circulation. We are far away in a new country, and any favor that our friends may extend to us, will be greatfully received and highly appreciated.

Letter Writing.

There are many letters being written to us, asking information, advice and counsel upon various subjects; and each one looks for a reply. It is our intention to give such counsel and advice to our friends, through the columns of the Guardian as, in our judgment, their circumstances may require. If the Saints wish to know our particular views upon the great leading questions now before us, they would do well to take the Guardian. We shall endeavor to set up there the main landmarks of our course, and he whose eye is single can behold them while he fills up the many little vacancies upon his own responsibility. We shall try to remember the spirit and tenor of all enquiries made of us, or questions asked, and shape our communications so as to meet the desires of most. Time will not allow us to write to each one or to reply separately to all. To avoid this great amount of labor in writing, we have obtained a press, and if you will lend us your aid to sustain it, we will tell you all we know that we may think instructing and profitable to you. This paper only costs you one dollar for six months; and if you will have it, it may save you ten times that amount by the intelligence and aid it may afford you in arranging your affairs to go to the Valley. But do not stop writing letters to us. We wish you to continue; and you may look in the Guardian for your answer. If the answer be not direct, you will probably see something there that will fit your case.

Missouri Republican.

This very excellent paper is published at St. Louis by Messrs. CHAMBERS & KNAPP. It is one of the most valuable and interesting business papers in the United States. It deals largely in the best kind of politics, and its facilities for receiving the earliest news can hardly be equalled. The editors spare no pains or expense to make the Republican a fountain of intelligence to every buisiness man, to every community, and to every fire-side circle. Should any of our friends wish to subscribe for a distant paper, we feel confident that they cannot do better than to subscribe for the above.

"Can the Profane Man or the Thief Enjoy the Spirit of God!"

This question was asked us the other day by a certain gentleman; not that he was in doubt with regard to the criminality of such transactions; but he took this method to let us know that such things did exist. We replied, that it was a question that an honest and upright man might readily answer without much time to consider. After answering it in the negative, we asked him a question. "Can any man, professing to be a saint, enjoy the spirit of God if such conduct comes under his observation and notice, and he take no steps to bring them up before the church to answer for their doings?" "You have asked me a hard question," says he: "But," continued he, "I thought it belonged to the authorities of the church to complain of such matters." Ah! indeed!! All jobs, then, that are too dirty for you to touch, or that may involve you in a little trouble or difficulty, you are willing, nay, anxious to shirk out of, and let the authorities shoulder the task and responsibillity of every filthy, disgraceful affair, that may happen in the church. This will array every evil spirit in the country against us, and an evil will grow out of it. A regularly organized branch of the church is a competent tribunal to try a member for his fellowship,—the Bishop's court is another; and the High Council is another, and the general assembly of the church with their authorities, is the last and highest tribunal in the church and kingdom of God. The ears of these tribunals are open to hear the just complaints of any member of the body. It is the duty of every man to rebuke crime, to rebuke profanity: Not with a spirit to injure, to wickedly expose to the advantage of an enemy, or to destroy; for in that case, the crime of the criminal becomes your own, if you have not first labored with all due patience and care to rescue and save. Law, Rigdon, Strang and McLellin, are pittiful examples of the truth of this sentiment. Every man is jealous that his own name and character may be injured wrongfully in some way. It is right that he should have this care for himself, and equally right that he should have a care for the interests and honor of the church; and if he is a real friend to the church his own conduct will reflect honor upon it, and he will take a course to bring those to a proper account whose conduct dishonors it.

If certain offenders do not speedily come forward to the Bishop and make satisfaction for the wrongs they have done, the Guardian will be down upon them and tell things that they do not think we know. We would rather confess in private and restore four fold to the injured party than to be published to the world if we were guilty of taking those things.

Legal Opinion.

It is the opinion of JOSIAH MERRITT Esq., our Prosecuting Attorney, that no man can hold a preemption right, or claim, to more than half a section of land. He also states that no man belonging to the "Nation," or that received or participated in the funds sent by the General Government, for the removal of the Pottawattamie Nation, can hold preemption claim at all, by law, to one foot of ground on the tract; neither hold possession: for they have sold their right, title, claim and interest to the General Government, and got their pay.

The above opinion is probably correct. We do not understand law very extensively ourself; but in consequence of having been repeatedly interrogated upon the subject, we have obtained the opinion of a professional man, and publish it for the benefit of all concerned.

Let the law be what it may, touching those things; we hope that every Latter Day Saint will remember that the Pottawattamie Indians made us welcome here when we had no claim, no house, no home. We met them as friends; we lived with them as such, and they gave us the friendly hand when they left us and went to their new home. But if any of the remnants of their Nation stay here, for a time, out of choice, for various considerations, let them live as quietly and as undisturbed, when the law gives us claim, as they permitted us to, when the title of the soil was in them.

St. Joseph.

This flourishing town, the capital of Buchanan county, Mo., is one of the most important trading points on the river. It is situated on a beautiful plain, protected from any encroachments of the rapid current of the Missouri river by a high bluff on the upper side. Its landing is good, and its growth and prosperity are without an equal in the upper country. There is much capital already vested in merchandize, in the forwarding and commission business, mills of various kinds, good hotels; and in short, almost every thing to perfect it as the great western emporium of trade and business. For emigrants to California who design to take the route on the south side of the Great Platte river, this is the most natural and convenient point on the frontier to rendezvous at. But the "Bluffs" are the starting point for those who intend journeying on the route north of the Great Platte.

There are two well conducted papers published at St. Joseph, the Adventure and the Gazette. These journals, respectively, advocate the two principal political creeds of the country; and we hesitate not to say that emigrants can be supplied with all sorts of goods, wares and merchandize at this place, and even with politics served up in a style to please the most fastidious political appetitite.

Savannah, Missouri.

This town is the capital of Andrew county and is quite a business place. It is situated about fifteen miles North of St. Joseph. It is surrounded by a beautiful country, rich and productive; and has, as we believe it justly deserves, a liberal share of trade. Messrs. J. W. Tootle & Co., marchants at this place, speak for a share of the passing traffic. We would say to our friends, "give to him that asketh of thee."

Missionary Station.

As many of our citizens have friends in the East who belong to the Presbyterian Church, and to whom they frequently send our paper, we have obtained from Mr. Reed a description of the School and Missionary Post on the opposite side of the river; and we publish it for their benefit and information as well as for our own. It cannot fail to be interesting to every lover of improvement to hear of the steps that are being taken in favor of it, particularly in an Indian country.

Mr. Reed is connected with the establishment of which he has given a description. Conducted as, we believe, it is, by men of principle and ability, it cannot fail to be successful in the issue, though prospects should not be so flattering at first.

A Good Prospect.

From Mr. EGAN, direct, from St. Joseph, we learn that the ice is gone out of the river as high up as the Kanzas, twelve miles above Independence. We may hope that the ice here, now thick and strong, will soon loose its frozen grasp and float from its moorings and be lost in the distance.

For the Frontier Guardian.
To the Saints in Iowa.

GREETING:

We again think it wisdom to call your attention to a few items in relation to the Guardian. I am stirred up to this from the circumstance, that the two numbers of this valuable paper, which have been issued, and which I have received, have been lent to my neighbors, until they are near worn out; while I have scarcely an opportunity of giving them a perusal myself. I take this method of calling upon the Saints to become subscribers themselves, as in all new countries, it has ever been a difficult task to sustain a printing establishment; it becomes absolutely necessary for us to unite, and by taking the paper, and paying the subscription in money; enable its publisher to obtain the materials for its support and continuance, and give us the advantage of the valuable information it communicates; as well as the privilege of contributing our mite to the spread of light and truth throughout the world. Every Elder should have the Guardian by him; from it he can learn the principles, which it is his duty and calling to communicate to his fellow men. No emigrant should be without it; he should consult its columns for almost every variety of information, which is indispensably necessary he should obtain, in relation to his outfit, and preparation for his journey, whether to the Great Basin or the California mines, and thereby save himself from many inconveniences, and serious losses, which he will be liable to, if he undertakes so long and tedious a journey without the necessary information and preparations. He should also learn from it the condition of the country and of the people where he is going, that he may not be like a cat in a strange garret, or like a stranger in a strange land, when he arrives at the place of his destination:—for in fact, the Guardian is designed as a guide and an assistant to the emigrants. Let us then pay over our dollars and give it a wide circulation and invite our neighbors and friends to do so too. If we do not, I fear our papers will all be used up, and worn out by lending while in the travelling camps. Every farmer should take the Guardian. Its matter will instruct the young and inexperienced, in relation to their agricultural pursuits, while the memory of the older and more experienced husbandman would be refreshed, and his children gain intelligence. Every saint should be in possession of the knowledge communicated through the Guardian, and as it is impossible for us to visit the different branches and communicate all things by word, face to face, we are under the necessity of speaking through the press. Let every Branch, then, put too the helping hand and support it. Joseph Smith, the prophet of God, foretold the great revolutions and troublesome times that are now rolling upon the inhabitants of the earth. Every believer in his prophecies should read their fulfilment which is rapidly taking place among the nations; and instead of asking Elder Hyde to take corn, turnips or something that is not immediately available, pay him the CASH for his paper, if possible, saying to him, heartily, "may God bless you, and give you power to publish truth, diamond truth to all people." If we do this, we can have a paper of our own, until we can procure the necessary outfit and join our brethren in the mountains.

Elders Lyman Stoddard, Jerome M. Benson and Bishop Draper and the travelling Elders, and the Presidents of Branches, are requested to lay this matter before the brethren in Pottawatamie county, and encourage and instruct them on this subject. Every man abroad who feels an interest in the cause of Zion is advised to use his exertion to enlarge its circulation. Our sisters, every where, can also use an influence to procure subscribers. It will redound to their credit and to the good of the cause. May peace and the blessings of Heaven rest upon you for ever is the prayer of your friend and well wisher,

GEO. A. SMITH.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1849.

Tremendous Roar!

One Hundred and Sixty-three Guns at Kanesville, for Gen. Taylor on Monday, the day of his Inauguration !!

The hundred and sixty-three electoral votes given in favor of the guardian of the nation's honor, spoke as loudly in the ears of the American people, as the hundred and sixty-three guns did in the ears of the citizens of this town. They made the ground tremble, jarred out some of our "chinking and daubing," and disturbed the glass not a little. May a wise and merciful Providence guide the hand in which the political destinies of the nation are placed! May mercy, justice and equal rights, be the landmarks to which, shall be ever directed, the discerning eye of the nation's chosen. He whose wisdom, courage, and power, failed not on the gory battle-field in an enemy's land, will hardly fail him in the Presidential Chair. Heaven grant that they may not!

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, or to Pisga, Garden Grove, or to the Valley of the Missippi by way of any of the above places, will do us a great favor by calling on us before they leave. If they could let us know a day or two before they leave, they would give us a little time to prepare a mail.

Bro. TRUMAN GILLET, of Savannah, Mo., is disfellowshipped from our church. We are not so anxious for our members to oppose the religion of other people, as we are to have them honor our own. Let others be cautioned by this individual example; and if they wish their religion honored, let them honor it themselves. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your father which is in heaven."

No mail here for the last two weeks. The passage must be stopped up below. We don't know but that we may be so "hard up," that we shall be obliged to fill up with "Jew David's, Hebrew Plaster," or some other medicine that possesses virtue enough to make a young man out of an old one, and have enough left to make a little dog.

Not Gone Yet.

We are sorry to learn that the St. Louis mail is still at St. Joseph. The regular mail or rather, irregular mail, could not be depended upon in consequence of the deep snow; and for some reason, unaccountable to us, the mail is very irregular, even when the roads are good.

The first and second numbers of the Guardian, designed for St. Louis, may be found at SMITH & BEDFORDS in St. Joseph. We attempted to get them through by private conveyance, but have been unsuccessful. We attach blame to no one; but the "fates" seem to be against our subscribers in St. Louis, getting their papers. Will Mr. TOWNSEND, our agent at St. Joseph, take the two bundles of the Guardian at SMITH & BEDFORDS, and forward them the first safe opportunity to St. Louis?

The Mail.

According to present arrangements, the mail from this place to St. Joseph, and consequently to St. Louis is detained one week at High Creek, a little north of Linden; and we think our inward mail is detained there also one week. This is a great detriment to our business, and throws us one week behind the time. We have, in consequence of this detention, been under the necessity of sending a private mail to St. Joseph several times, to get our matter off in season.

We are glad, however, to see some measures on foot to remedy this evil. We heartily wish them success. The interests of this upper country require a speedy and direct communication to St. Joseph and to St. Louis, and we trust the Postmaster General will make the necessary alterations.

Soap. Making.

Is there not some person in this county who can go into the above business, supply the market, and convert into silver and gold, the materials that are now thrown away. This is a good business in places where the stock costs double to what it would here; and it is imported from Boston, St. Louis and from other parts. It is not good to buy the manufactures of other places, and throw away our own materials for manufacturing equally as good an article. Save your ashes, and save your grease; and let the soap boilers lead out!

Fire.

The dwelling house of Mr. Hiram Bennett, residing in Springville Branch was entirely, with its contents, consumed by fire on the night of the 2nd inst. Mr. Bennett having gone to a debating school, and his wife having gone to a neighbor's to spend the evening, there were none at home to arrest the progress of the fire.

Mr. Bennett, we learn, is a poor man, but industrious;—had just returned from Missouri with the avails of his winter's labor in various articles of provision &c. which were all consumed. His loss is supposed to be about $200. This was his all. We hope our citizens will contribute to aid the sufferer, and make up to him his loss, at least so far as can be. Let this be a warning to other families not to leave their dwellings alone, particularly in the night. Watch with care the fire in your cabins!

Information Wanted.

Our Eastern Mail is due here on Friday, and why is it detained until the following Sunday or Monday? Is not the carrier, or his surety, responsible for this delay? It will not do, particularly when the weather is comparatively mild.

Error Corrected.

Mr. Rich, the owner of the team that hauled the pork from the Mission House at Bellevue, has, with Mr. Grimhall, been to see us. We believe Mr. Grimhall strictly honest in his conclusions; but from the good character that Mr. Rich has heretofore sustained, through thick and thin, (and we have taken no little pains to find it out) we cannot believe that he participated in the pork transaction at all.

Mr. Woolsey had a wagon, and Mr. Rich, his neighbor, owned a team, and they exchanged to accomodate one another. In this way Woolsey obtained Mr. Rich's team, when he (Rich) was gone from home. We therefore think, on close examination, that friend Rich is not guilty, in any way; but his team happened to be caught in bad company. He has passed a rigid examination before the Magistrate, and was acquitted, and we think justly and honorably.

Snow! Snow!! Snow!!!

March came in with a bitter cold snow storm, and has kept it up, at intervals, until the 6th inst. which was a very pleasant day. Sleighing begins to fail a little in town.

Lady Byron, the wife of the poet, has made a donation to Frederick Douglass, formerly a runaway slave, of ten pounds.

To Emigrants.

Emigrants to this place, by the Missouri River, should land at Council Point, some three miles above Trading Point or Bellevue. CHARLES BIRD resides there—and to him should our friends make application for information immediately on landing. This is the most eligible point on the river for the accommodation of emigrants to get removed to their friends in the various settlements in this region, and also the nearest point to this place.

SPRINGVILLE BRANCH, Feb. 25, 1849.

MR. EDITOR: In compliance with your request in your most valuable paper to obtain a few more subscribers to keep you afloat, I have cleared my garments and that too, without the most distant hope of getting one new subscriber. I admit that I am no orator, but naturally slow of speech. I have tried to read your "Roadside Confab" to some, but it meets with little else than a hearty laugh. I would here remark that I did not read the above in my own paper, but was under the painful necessity of borrowing my neighbors. I am aware that some think it is wrong to lend a paper, and I think so too, in a general way. But Saints that would cheat the editor of his dues, and borrow of thee, "turn thou not away." I should be very much gratified to read your papers, but understanding that my neighbors who take the paper do not like to lend, while those who do not take them like very well to borrow, I therefore cannot read my paper without denying my good neighbors the loan of it, and that I will not do. But I subscribe for a second paper on purpose to loan to my good neighbors and friends. If all your suscribers will do this, I think, in all probability, you will be able to keep from sinking. You will receive in this, pay for six months, and think by this means the general news of the times will be pretty well circulated among our poor brethren, and friends who are not able to take the paper.

INDIAN TERRITORY, Feb. 21, 1849.

The past winter has been unusually protracted and severe in this part of the country. Everything much exposed to its influence, has had its capacity to endure its blighting sway, severely tested.

Several Indians have been heard from on the Plains, who have fallen victims to the severity of its grasp. The Omahas have lost nearly, if not quite all their horses. A part of the tribe is now encamped somewhere on the Horn; they are in a state of great privation and suffering, and have been obliged to kill their dogs for food.

Inhumanity.

INDIAN TERRITORY, Feb. 20, 1849.

It is a common practice among traders in the Indian country, to send men to Indian encampments while on their hunting excursions, for the purpose of buying furs and skins, when there is no competition to operate against their sordid interests.

An expedition of four Indian men was fitted out a short time since by Mr. PAPPAN and sent out to the Omaha encampment, on the Horn. They were sent on without even an extra blanket to shield themselves from the piercing cold and searching blast. One froze to death on the way—the other three, although badly frozen, have made out to return. One was so severely frozen that doubts are entertained of his recovery.

To whose account is this suffering and death chargeable? Surely, to the one who set on foot an enterprize attended with such iminent hazard—to the one that sent out these men to buffet the winter's blast, without making the needful provision for their comfort and safety. He must answer for the lives of those who perish in consequence of exposure incurred to gratify his lust for gain. No man has a right to hazard the lives of his fellow-men by unnecessary exposure for the sake of gold! When life is at stake then it may be put to hazard in efforts to save it—but not for the sake of gain.

The issue of this attempt to get the advantage of other traders in the market, has proved to be unprofitable as well as unrighteous. If I am rightly informed, the damage claimed by the Ottoes for the loss of this man, is a hundred dollars, which, will have to be paid, in addition to the expense of sending out five or six men to find and bury the corpse.

Extra Pay.

By the following from the St. Joseph Gazette, our Mormon boys will discover that "Uncle Sam" has not forgotten them; but will cash over at this place sometime during this month. Good!

Notice to the Mormon Battalion of Volunteers.

The undersigned is now prepared to pay the Volunteers of the Mormon Battalion, their Extra pay, at this place, and for that purpose will remain at this post, until the close of the present month—where claimants can apply.

Powers of Attorney must in all cases be sworn to before a Magistrate, in Duplicate—and the official character of the Magistrate must be certified to, by the Clerk of the County or Circuit Court, with his seal attached.

The testimony of two credible witnessess, before a Magistrate, that the individual claiming, is the identical person who served, and that he was honorably discharged, will be required—they must further swear that they are disinterested—the official character of the Magistrate must also be certified to, by the Clerk of the Court with the seal of his Office.

The oath of identity must accompany the power of Attorney in each case. Administrator's cannot receive. This gratuity goes, first to the widow, second to the children, third to the father and mother, and fourth to the brothers and sisters. Duly qualified Guardians can draw for Minors.

No payments can be made at Council Bluffs, until some time in March next—so that all who desire payment now, can receive it at this Office, by attending to the above requirements.

EARTHQUAKE IN THE AZORES.—The Boston Times publishes an extract from a letter dated St. Michael's, December 3d, from which we learn that a series of earthquakes had occured among the Azore Islands, during the previous month. Seven shocks were felt in St. Michael's in one night. One shock, on the night of the 4th of November, was very violent. At the west end of the Island many houses and part of a church were thrown down. The city of Angiers, in Terceira, was nearly destroyed; and such of the inhabitants as were able to do so were leaving the Island.

Catch not too soon at an offence, nor give too easy way to anger. The one shows a weak judgment, the other a perverse nature.

Otoe and Omaha Mission.

February 26, 1849.

MR. EDITOR: This mission was established by the "Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, of the U. S.," in the fall of the year 1846. The Rev. Edmund McKinney and wife were appointed to take charge of the station. When they arrived at the scene of their future labors, they found no habitation to shelter themselves from the cold night wind, or the drenching storm. The best shelter that they were able to procure for a temporary residence, was an open porch, attached to the dwelling house occupied by the Indian agent, Maj. John Miller; which, being temporarily enclosed, by means of blankets, &c., served as a shelter, while a small log house was being erected, to afford a more comfortable habitation for the winter. The winter proved to be severe, and not having made sufficient provision for it, much inconvenience and suffering was necessarily endured. The inconveniences under which the Mission family found it necessary to commence their labors were such as to put their faith and courage to a severe test.

In the spring of 1827, Walter Lowrie, Esq., Corresponding Secretary of the Board, while on a visit to the Indian Missions established among the different tribes by the Prysbyterian Board, visited this place, and, in company with the Rev. Mr. McKinney and his assistant, went to see the Ottoe and Omaha Indians, at their villages, for the purpose of viewing their situation; and, conferring with them upon the subject of their condition and wants. They were received kindly by the chiefs, and allowed to communicate freely with the people. They found them poor, wretched and despairing—the miserable heirs of want and sorrow—with no cheering hopes for the future. Game had become scarce, and was every year becoming more difficult to procure. The lean figure of famine frequently visited them in their idle reveries, and threw its gloomy shadow over the future. The white men seemed to inspire their confidence, and to awaken a hope that they could flee to him, as a refuge from want and despair. Their beautiful children were more cheerful; the future seemed to throw no gloomy hue over their minds. They were amusing themselves with the trifles of the passing moment—living in ignorance of the great purpose of their being—making no provisions for the wants of the soul—laying up no treasure in heaven. The situation of these poor children, awakened the sympathies of the Secretary, and opened the fountain of pitty in his heart, and his soul ascended to the great Father of spirits in behalf of these poor, naked, ignorant and perishing children. He felt as though he could willingly endure poverty and toil, in bringing them within the sheltering branches of the tree of knowledge; that they might become acquainted with their origin and destiny, and to learn that they, in common with the children of the white man, were the children of the infinite Father, who loves them, and longs to see them assimilated to Himself in thought and affection, and to manifest the divine spirit in their lives. He felt as though something must be done; and, though without authority to commit the Board to the expence of erecting buildings for a boarding school, his faith lead him to decide upon taking that important step. It was decided to erect buildings sufficiently spacious for a boarding school consisting of fifty scholars, with all the necessary assistance to keep it in perfect operation.

The building is a massive structure of logs, and is probably the largest and best specimen of log house architecture to be found in the western world. It is sixty-four feet long and twenty-seven feet wide, with two wings about twenty by thirty feet, and two stories throughout. It contains two rooms about eighteen by fourteen feet each, for the use of the heads of the Institution; two spacious rooms adjoining the children's sleeping rooms, for the use of the male and female assistants. The children's sleeping rooms, occupy the whole of the upper story of the main building. There are two large sleeping rooms for the use of persons in the employ of the mission. One spare room, for the accommodation of visitors. A sewing room for girls eighteen by seventeen feet. The dining room is situated in the middle of the lower part of the main building, and is twenty-seven feet square. The school room is twenty-seven by eighteen feet. With one or two exceptions, the rooms are well lighted, and can be easily ventilated. The kitchen and buttery are spacious and convenient. It is intended to erect a wash house and bakery, in the spring, which plan will greatly facilitate those important branches of labor. The Mission buildings, garden and play ground, are all enclosed by a massive picket fence of logs nine feet high. The yard includes an area of about three acres.

The Mission has a beautiful farm of twenty seven acres broken and enclosed by an excellent fence. This, when properly cultivated, will afford a large amount of provisions for the use of the family. When the spring opens, it is intended to extend the boundaries of the farm, so as to afford room for a pasture.

The school was opened the 27th of June 1848, with only one Indian boy. Since that time we have received forty children; eleven, for reasons which I cannot now state, have left since the opening of the school, which now numbers only thirty: twenty-six boys and four girls. The school is taught by Miss Martha E. Higley, a member of the Mission. The children are taught from the English spelling book, according to the method usually pursued in schools of white children. They have made good progress in the spelling book, and some of the older ones are making progress in writing, and numbers. They make excellent progress in music, which is taught them by the Principle of the Institution. Moral and religious instruction is communicated orally by the aid of an interpreter.

The management of an Institution like this, in the midst of a heathen people, is attended with no small difficulty and trial; but when performed in obedience to the dictates of God's spirit, it is a labor which brings with it great reward.

D. E. R.

A magnificent dinner was given to Gen. TAYLOR, at the Louisville Hotel, on the 12th. Many distinguished persons were present from Kentucky and other States—among them Senator Shields. The Mayor of the city presided. After dinner, toasts were given. The fifth in regular order was:—

Gen. Zachary Taylor—In his birth a Virginian—in his boyhood and early manhood a Kentuckian—his glorious achievements upon his country's battle fields have made him the common property of the nation, and his wisdom and virtue will render him as Chief Magistrate of a great republic, the benefactor of the world.

This sentiment was received with great enthusiasm. The General responded to it in the following speech:—

Mr. President and Gentlemen—I am sincerely obliged to you for the complimentary toast which has just been read, and for the reception it has met with from the company here assembled. I have not deserved the praises lavished upon my past services; and the suggestions made in relation to the future are more flattering than any hope I have found myself enabled to indulge.

I am indeed a Virginian by birth; but I removed to this country when it was still a part of that ancient Commonwealth. Whilst I venerate the State of my nativity, it is here that I spent the days of my youth, and all the associations of boyhood and early manhood are connected with the scenes which surround me.

I have always disclaimed a large share of the merit of the achievements upon the battle field you so kindly noticed, as justly due to the gallant soldiers (volunteers and regulars) whom I had the good fortune to command.

In regard to the new line of duties to which I have been assigned, it may be allowed me, who have spent more than forty years in a different service, to distrust my ability to meet the expectations of the public. The intelligent freemen of the Union have signified their desire to see the administration of public affairs brought nearer to the principles and practices of our first Presidents. It will be my aim to do their will. Whatever errors I shall commit in the discharge of this high trust will be attributed to the head and not to the heart; for I rely upon the partiality which conferred the highest station on earth upon me, to construe, in a spirit of forbearance, my acts whilst filling an office for which I had no aspirations. I declined being a candidate for Presidency till a sense of duty constrained me to yield to the wishes of the people. May I not hope that those who conferred this great honor upon me without solicitation on my part, will do me the justice to believe that I shall serve them with an eye single to the best interests of the whole country. If I shall be able in any degree, to equal the expectations of my countrymen, it will amply compensate me for my labor or inquietude I may have to undergo.

I again thank you for this generous and enthusiastic demonstration, and in conclusion permit me to offer the following sentiment;

The People of Kentucky.—Unsurpassed by any other in intelligence, virtue, or valor.

The seventh toast was as follows.

Henry Clay.—We hail with high hope his return to the old theatre of his glory. His fame, like the burning bush of Moses, has remained unconsumed amid the flames that have encircled it.

This sentiment called forth a tremendous and long continued burst of enthusiasm.

Among the volunteers, was one by C. M. Thurston:

Gen. James Shields.—A brilliant jewel from the Emerald Isle—a gentleman and a soldier. His adopted country delight to honor him.

Gen. Shields responded to this sentiment, and at the close of his speech gave the following toast:

Your Distinguished Guest, Gen. Zachary Taylor.—May his administration redound as much to the glory and good of his country as his victories have to her honor and renown.

DIFFICULTY AT TAMPICO.—Our contemporaries, the Delta and Crescent, of yesterday, speak of a difficulty that has occurred between Captain Carr, of the Quartermaster's Department, and Gen. Garay, Commandant at Tampico. The latter peremptorily ordered Capt Carr to quit the Mexican territory in twenty-four hours. Our countryman indignantly refused, alledging his being subject to no commands except those of his Government; on which General Garay made a display of military force. At this juncture, the United States steamer Saratoga appeared off the port, when Mr. Chase, the American Consul, and Captain Carr, went on board, to confer with her commander. The result of their deliberation was, that the Saratoga started immediately for Sacrificios, the rendezvous of the Gulf squadron. Thus the affair stands, but out of it something unpleasant may arise, if cool heads do not interfere to moderate Mexican impetuosity.—N. O. Com. Times, 3d.

CALIFORNIA.—Late intelligence from California represents the supply of gold to be still undiminished. But miners were suffering from sickness and want of provisions.

Fish Story.

One day as Zachariah Hodgen was going to his daily avocation, after breakfast, he purchased a fine large codfish, and sent it home, with directions to his wife, to have it cooked for dinner. As no particular mode of cooking was prescribed, the good woman well knew that, whether she boiled it, or made it into a chowder, her husband would scold her when he come home. But she resolved to please him once, if possible, and therefore cooked portions of it in different ways. She, also, with some difficulty, procured an amphibious animal from a brook, back of the house, and plumped it into the pot. In due time her husband came home; some covered dishes were placed upon the table, and with a frowning, fault-finding look, the moody man commenced the conversation:

"Well, wife, did you get the fish I bought?"

"Yes, my dear."

"I should like to know how you have cooked it. I will bet any thing you have spoiled it for my eating. (Taking off the cover) I thought so. What in creation possessed you to fry it? I had as lief eat a boiled frog."

"Why, my dear, I thought you loved it best fried."

"You didn't think any such thing. You knew better—I never loved fried fish—why didn't you boil it?"

"My dear, the last time we had fish, you know I boiled it, and you said you liked it best fried. But I have boiled some also."

So saying, she lifted a cover, and lo! the shoulders of a cod nicely boiled, were deposited in a dish, a sight of which would have made an epicure rejoice, but which only added to the ill nature of the husband.

"A pretty dish, this!" exclaimed he, "Boiled fish! chips and porridge! If you had not been one of the most stupid of woman-kind, you would have made it into a chowder."

His patient wife, with a smile, immediately placed a turreen before him containing excellent chowder.

"My dear," said she, "I was resolved to please you with a favorite dish."

"Favorite dish, indeed," grumbled the discomfited husband, "I dare say it is an unpalatable wishy-washy mess. I would rather have a boiled frog than the whole of it."

That was a favorite expression of his, and had been anticipated by his wife, who, as soon as his preference was expressed, uncovered a large dish near her husband, and there was a BULL-FROG, of portentious dimensions, and pugnacious aspect, stretched out at his full length. Zachariah sprung from his chair, not a little frightened at the unexpected apparition.

"My dear, said his wife, in a kind entreating tone, "I hope you will at length be able to make a dinner."

Zachariah could not stand this. His surley mood was finally overcome, and he burst into a hearty laugh. He acknowledged that his wife was right, and that he was wrong, and declared that she should never again have occasion to read him another lecture, and he kept his word.

A TOUGH CUSTOMER.—A Canadian having bought a patriarch of a turkey that had frightened every other purchaser from the idea of making a JAW-ful feast of him, thus speaks of his bargain: "I took him home—my wife bile him tree hours, and den he gobble. My wife put him in de pot wid de taters, and he kick 'em all out; but after two, three sixteen hour bile, den we gobble him!"

The United States mint has issued a specimen of gold dollars, some of which have been exhibited in Washington. They are about the size of a six-pence.

THE SOUTHERN PLATFORM.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Bulletin gives the following as the substance of certain resolutions said to be agreed to by the meeting of Southern members of Congress.

Resolved, That the South, having an equal interest in the territories of New Mexico and California, is willing, as a principle of equity, to accept the terms of the Compromise Act of 36 deg. 30 min.

Resolved, That the South is willing that said territories shall be admitted into the Union as States, upon the presentation of constitutions, in which the subject of slavery is referred, upan appeal, to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, such question to be omitted in said constitution, until the decision, as aforesaid, is awarded.

Resolved, That the South will accept of a bill for territorial governments upon the principles of the act of last session, introduced by Senator John M. Clayton.

Resolved, That the South will accept of the act introduced the present session by Senator Douglas, with certain modifications, relative to appeals, as in the second resolution.

Resolved, That the South prefers a separation of the Union to that of accepting the Wilmot Proviso, and the faith of each State is pledged to protect her interests in said territories at the point of the bayonet.

Resolved, That this is the unanimons sense of this meeting, representing the South.

Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, O., March 16, 1848.

Sir:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours,
O. B. BEEBE.

TROY, Ia., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

R. BATES, P. M.

JEFFERSON co., Ky., Aug. 4, 1848.

This is to certify that I was afflicted last Summer with ague and fever, and had then had it for three years, and during that time I despaired of ever getting well. I was induced to get Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, and by using two bottles I was entirely restored to my usual good health, and have continued so up to this time; I therefore do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and the public, as the most effectual and innocent remedy that has ever came to my knowledge.

For the Guardian.

Acrostic.

Engage in virtue while in youth,
Learn all her maxims to obey;
Never forsake the paths of truth,
Or deviate from wisdoms' way.
Refrain from every secret sin,
Avoid its path with cautious care,
Lest by its wiles you're taken in,
Unconscious of its baneful snare.
Cause not, on Heaven, for aid to call,
Regard its voice with holy fear,
Evincing while on earth to all—
Triumphant faith and conscience clear—
In vain may troubles them assail,
And malice point her vengeful dart;
Wisdom will guide you without fail,
Above the reach of all their art—
Religion will your course approve,
No earthly cause your peace destroy,
Extatic joy and peace and love,
Reign in your bresat without alloy.

Light from the Stars.

BY HENRY LESTAR HARRISON.

"Like a star unhasting, unresting."—GOETHE.

Stars! bright stars! Oh wither tend ye,
In your glad unresting course?
Whence your energy unhoary,
And your tadeless light its source?

Thus to me your voices answer,
With a harmony sublime—
"In thy Spirit read the reflex,
Of Eternity in Time.

There thou hast the flame undying,
And the energy divine;
There the power, the love, the beauty,
With a holier light to shine.

We are tending, upward wending,
In a grand unceasing flight;
Through the deep abyss of Being,
Rolling in a sea of light.

By the Law pervading nature;
Lowly flower, or star-world high,
Life's perpetual progression;
Truly if we rest.—we die!

Human Soul! let outward action
Shadow forth the inmate will,
Ever pressing calmly onward,
Onward and aspiring still."

MISCELLANY.

A STORY OF THE UPPER TEN.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

Jeremiah Crouk considered himself one of the "upper ten thousand." And so he was, as far as a brown stone palace in Fifth Avenue, and the reputation of being worth half a million, were concerned. Everybody who wrote to him put Esquire after his name, but that did not make him a gentleman by a great deal.

Jeremiah Crouk started in life as a soap and candle manufacturer, in which business he continued even after his elevation into "good society." At first, the dipping and moulding processes were conducted on a small scale, while a single cart for the collection of ashes and oleaginous matter, proved quite sufficient to supply the demand for these indispensable articles either in the production of hard or soft soap. But honest industry, prudence, and economy, met, in his case, their reward. Jeremiah prospered in his business, and continued to prosper until he became a rich man.

Industry, prudence and economy are very commendable virtues, though by no means cardinal virtues. By this remark, do not understand us to disparage industry, prudence and economy; they are virtues that all men should practice; but while these are practised, weightier things should not be, as, alas! they are at present, almost entirely neglected. We grow rich in this world's goods, but poor in the heart's better riches. Their bodies they lift above their fellows, while their minds sink, too often, below instead of maintaining the level with which they set out in life. This is a melancholy but undeniable fact.

In the case of Jeremiah, as his coffers began to fill up, he began to think himself a better man. He had always maintained that he was as good as any nabob in the land, but now he bagan to think himself something better than men who stood at the level upon which he stood a few years before. And as money kept pouring in, his self estimation kept rising.

The wife of Jeremiah Crouk was a plain, sensible woman. She loved her children well enough to find in the care of them, sufficient to do to keep her mind healthily employed; she was not, therefore, much troubled with newly acquired ideas of self-importance. The growing consequence of her husband had some trouble, at times, to carry such an appendage as a sensible wife with it. The two oldest daughters, Amanda and Margaret, were only a little way in their "teens" when their father's ideas in regard to things of a personal and family nature began to grow somewhat expansive. He became all at once concerned about the best schools, and had them removed from a seminary at which they were most carefully instructed in all the useful and ornamental branches of a young lady's education, and sent to a "better" institution—that is, one at which were congregated the children of fashionable people. Neither Amanda nor Margaret liked the change; nor were they benefitted by it. Amanda, especially, soon began to acquire notions a little different from what she had been in the habit of maintaining, and to consider the fact of her father's being rich as giving her consequence. Margaret who was younger, was more like her mother, and, therefore less apt to have her head turned with what she had saw and heard in the new world, into which this change had introduced her; but even she took an unnatural growth in this sickly atmosphere—not so much, however, as to produce a very apparent moral distortion. Even after she had completed her education, she remained a very sensible girl—vulgarly so, in some respects, according to the judgment of her more fashionable acquaintances.

About the time these young ladies were ready to come out, their father had finished his splendid residence in Fifth Avenue, and was ready to take his place among the upper ten thousand. He had built a large manufactory away up on the island, so that the odor of his soap works might not taint the city atmosphere or remind the people that he was but a soap and candle maker after all. He had several times thought of giving up his extensive works and engaging in some new business, but something of the prudence of old times remained, and kept him back from committing this folly.

As soon as Mr. Crouk had taken possession of his new home at the Court End of the town, he issued invitations for a large party, and went to a thousand dollars' expense to have it all upon the most grand and fashionable scale. For old acquaintance sake, and to let them see how large and fashionable he had grown, Mr. Crouk invited sundry individuals not fairly entitled to associate with the upper ten. On the night of the grand affair, much to his mortification, he found himself with but few representatives of the "ten thousand" in his magnificent drawing rooms, and a full attendance, to the man, woman and daughter, of the plebian herd, who were invited more out of compliment than anything else. And what added to his chagrin, was the fact that only a small number of those who had not come, deigned to send their "regrets;" and also the fact that two or three of the families, after arriving and seeing the wives and daughters of vulgar people there, withdrew without feeling called upon to offer a word of apology.

But Mr Crouk, who felt himself as good as the best and better than many hundreds of thousands around him, was not to be killed off in this way. He was one of the "upper ten" and no mistake, and they were bound to acknowledge him—and so they did, in the end. Money and style were the passports, and he soon made his peers feel that his claims were not to be lightly esteemed.

In this struggle of Jeremiah Crouk for a place in the ranks of the exclusive few, his wife and daughters did not as warmly second him as he could wish, although there was no opposition. The mother's good sense impressed itself, as a natural consequence, upon the minds of Amanda and Margaret, and her right views, uttered on all fitting occasions, found an echo in their minds. They saw deeper, even as young girls, than the glittering surface, and understood that true happiness was rather quiet and unobtrusive than brilliant and imposing in its mien. With the full liberty of dressing in the most costly and stylish manner, they rather suffered their taste to be guided by that of their mother, and were, on most occasions, attractive rather from their want of elaborate ornament than on account of its opposite. The consequence was, that even among the "upper ten," Amanda and Margaret were general favorites. Their title to the place they held being undisputed, no one, of course, could question, for any want of the usual insignia, the fact that they were of the exclusives; and, therefore, that which in others would have been thought exceedingly vulgar, was spontaneously acknowledged to be charmingly simple and attractive in them.

But these two strong indications of a low origin seriously disturbed the father, who was forever complaining about the want of style in the dress of his daughters, and the want of dignity in their manners. What he could do, was always done. He never permitted them to go to the opera without a private box could be obtained; and when he could have a word to say about the toilet arrangements, insisted upon a proper use of ornament, especially of rich jewelry. The private box at the opera, was not objected to very strongly by the girls; it was pleasant and comfortable to be separated from the crowd, to be exempt from really vulgar contact and sundry annoyances that all must suffer in the most fashionable audiences. Still it was setting them apart in a manner not altogether agreeable to their feelings, and it would have been less so if they had been aware that they were pretty generally known by the theatre-going public and remarked upon as "two of the upper ten." So much for the position and pretensions of Jeremiah Crouk and family.

The two sisters were not without their admirers among the young men of her own circle, as well as some who stood on the outside yet dared to cast upon them ambitious eyes. Spite of their want of ostentation in dress and the entire absence of aristocratic airs let them appear in company when they would, they soon had a group of admirers about them. This fact greatly surprised young ladies who were conscious of being far more brilliant, and, as they imagined, more highly attractive. But young men have a greater fancy for looking a little deeper than the outside when they feel at all inclined to pay serious attention to young ladies.

Amanda had many wooers, and it was not very long before her heart was won, and by a lover against whom her father could bring no manner of objection. As a man, it is pleasant to be able to say that he was worthy of her hand. But the heart of Margaret, to all appearances, remained unimpressed, although many, attracted by her fortune, her native excellences, or both, sought an alliance. The addresses of one young man, in particular were encouraged by her father but Margaret maintained towards him a cold but polite reserve, He was never able to approach her near enough to ask the all-important question.

All at once, and without any apparent cause for so doing, Margaret assumed a still more simple style of dress. At home or abroad, in public places or in private assemblies, she appeared with scarcely an ornament on her person. Every article of jewelry was laid aside, and all rich or attractive colors avoided. Her father remonstrated, but in vain; he sternly ordered a compliance with his wishes, but with no better effect, and he was finally constrained to let the "wilful girl" have her own way. To the eyes of most of her friends, Margaret appeared none the less attractive on account of this change, her extreme neatness and good taste making up for all deficiencies. Instead of the number of her lovers being diminished, they were increased—but her heart remained untouched.

This singular freak, as it was considered by her family, was continued by Margaret for more than a year, during which she withdrew herself from company as much as it was possible for her to do, and appeared to take more delight in domestic employment than in fashionable pleasure-taking.

Mr. Crouk was troubled; he saw in this evidences of a vulgar mind, indications of a perverted and groveling taste.

Thus the time passed on, and Amanda's wedding-day approached. But Margaret repulsed all suitors—actually refusing to see young men who had at any time made even the smallest advances.

Mr. Crouk had a clerk in his establishment named Judkin, whom he had raised from a boy, and in whom he reposed the utmost confidence. Judkin possessed good abilities, a fine person, easy manners, and that air of confidence about him which we sometime see in young men who feel their own force of character, and mean to make use of the ability they possess to force their way in the world against all opposition.

One day, Judkin, with a sober face, came up to where Mr. Crouk was sitting at his desk, and asked the privilege of a few words with him.

"Certainly Henry. Sit down. I hope you have not been getting yourself into any trouble!" said Mr. Crouk.

"No, sir, not yet; but I don't know how soon I may be in trouble." And the young man's face became still more serious.

"What's the matter, Henry, what's the matter?"

"I am about—or, rather, was about taking a very important step," said Judkin, in reply, "but thought it would be better, perhaps, to consult you before doing so."

"That's right—that's right, Henry. What is it?"

Judkin blushed, and looked interesting and confused.

"Ah, ha! I see how it is," said the old gentleman. "An affair of the heart—you are thinking about getting married!"

The young man blushed still deeper, and did not deny the allegation.

"Very well; now I understand. I hope she's worthy of you, Henry, that's all I have to say."

"She's worthy the hand of a prince," said the young man, with enthusiasm.

"So far, then, all is right. And now what do you want me to do for you?" inquired Mr. Crouk.

"I want mainly your advice, sir," returned the young man. "The parents of the young lady will not consent to the union."

"Why?"

"Because I am nothing but a poor young clerk."

"Indeed! And, pray, who are her parents?"

"People once no better off than I am, who have got a little up in the world."

"And therefore think you not good enough for their daughter?"

"Yes, sir, that's the feeling."

"What's her father's name? Do I know him?"

"You have some little acquaintance with him. But I think it best not to mention to you his name, because, if you advise me in the matter, it will be best for you to be able to say, if any appeal is made to you, that you had not the most remote suspicion that I was paying attention to the young lady."

"That is a good suggestion. Very well, you needn't tell me her father's name. And so you want my advice, do you?"

"Yes, sir."

"As to what?"

"In the first place, then, I will mention that the young lady is deeply attached to me, and says, come what will, she will marry no one else. Already she has refused two or three offers from persons whose circumstances are far better than mine."

"She's a true hearted girl I should say."

"Indeed, she is, sir; and my happiness depends upon her becoming my wife."

"And her parents will not consent?"

"It is hopeless to endeavor to remove their objections. They set an imaginary value upon their consequence because they have a little more of this world's good's than I possess—not more, however, than I will have one of these days, if spared—and would think themselves disgraced by an alliance with me."

"What can you do?"

"Run away with the daughter," said the young man, boldly.

"Not always a safe proceeding," remarked Mr. Crouk, "and the last to be adopted."

"There is no other chance in my case."

"Is the daughter willing to go off with you?"

"Perfectly. This being so, ought I not to take the only step left me for obtaining her hand."

"I hardly like to advise you to this course, Henry."

"If I do it, will you consider it a cause for being offended with me?"

"Certainly not."

"Her father, I know, will be dreadfully offended, said Judkin, "and may seek to punish us both by trying to excite your anger against me, in order that I may lose my place and means of supporting my wife."

"Don't give yourself any trouble about that, Henry. But does the young lady understand that you have only the income of a clerk?"

"Perfectly. I have concealed nothing from her. Still, I cannot but feel a little anxious on the point I have just mentioned. Her father, I am satisfied, will immediately seek to prejudice you against me, and I am aware that he has influence with you."

"He has! Well, let him try; I am forewarned, and, therefore, forearmed. As to marrying the young lady, that, Harry, is your own matter. I will not advise you to do it, nor will I advise you against it. I am perfectly well satisfied that you know what you are about. But to make you easy on the subject of any prejudice likely to be created on my mind, I will give you my check for a year's salary in advance, with all confidence that you will render as faithful service as ever."

Mr. Crouk turned to his desk and filled up a check.

"Here," he said, as he handed it to the young man, "is a check for fifteen hundred dollars. A married man's expenses are greater than a single man's. Your salary, instead of being a thousand dollars, will be fifteen hundred from to-day."

Judkin warmly expressed his thanks, and Mr. Crouk as warmly wished him a favorable issue to his contemplated runaway adventure.

That evening, Margaret not appearing at the tea-table, her father inquired if she were not well. Amanda said that she had gone out.

"To spend the evening anywhere?" inquired Mr. Crouk.

"No, I think not. If she had intended doing so, she would have mentioned it to me," replied Amanda.

"She's out late; it's been dark for an hour," remarked the father.

The mother also expressed concern on account of her daughter's absence.

The tea hour went by, and yet Margaret did not return. Mr. Crouk began to feel uneasy. The singular interview he had held with his clerk suggested the fear that some one, hopeless of gaining his consent, might run off with Margaret, as Judkin was about running off with the daughter of some one unknown to him. This fear caused him to think of Margaret's inexplicable conduct in some things, and thoughts of this gave a new life to his fears. As soon as he was alone with his wife, he suggested to her what was in his mind, but she treated it lightly. Still Mr. Crouk felt troubled, and he walked about uneasily, listening for the ringing of the street-door bell; but no bell rung, and no daughter returned. Ten o clock came, and she was yet absent. Hark! there is a ring. The waiter goes to the door. The parents listen—the father with almost breathless interest. The door is opened—they hear the sound of a man's voice—it is immediately closed again. The waiter returns along the hall alone, opens the parlor door, and hands in two letters, one for Mr. Crouk and one for his wife. We will only give the contents of the former. It was as follows:

"DEAR SIR: Although you did not advise me in so many words to run away with the young lady of whom I spoke to you to-day, yet the measure met your approval, and in doing what I have since done I have acted with a consciousness that I had your entire sanction, without which I should have hardly felt at liberty to take so important a step. The sweet girl I have loved so long is mine. I am the happiest of men. I may now tell you the lady's name—it is Margaret Crouk. In a week I will be at my post again. In the meantime, let me beg of you not to let the father of the young lady prejudice your mind against one who loves her so truly, and who is ready to make every sacrifice in his power to secure her happiness. We do not expect soon, if ever, to be forgiven by him; but even that great cost we have calculated. Margaret has long accustomed herself to do without the costly luxuries of ornament and dress, in view of this change in her circumstances. She knows my ability, and becomes my wife, prepared to let all her wants and wishes conform thereto. She has written to her mother her own thoughts and feelings on the occasion. She will forgive her, I am sure, and I can hope but that, through her loving influence, the father's heart may be softened towards his child.

"Dutifully, I subscribe myself,

"HENRY JUDKIN."

Never was a man more completely knocked down than was Mr. Jeremiah Crouk, by the receipt of this cool but not insulting letter. That he stormed and even swore for a time no one will be surprised to hear; but there was no help for him. Margaret was the wife of his clerk—yes, of his clerk—of the clerk of Jeremiah Crouk, Esq., one of the upper ten thousand. Was there no atonement for this disgrace—no means of wiping it out? There seemed none! Henry Judkin, the unknown; Henry Judkin, his clerk, was now his son-in-law. Poor man! he paced the floor half of the night, and then went to bed and went to sleep. What else could he do?

On the third day after the elopement, Judkin and his young bride were sitting in their private parlor at one of the hotels in Philadelphia. The husband was looking over a New York paper which he had just obtained.

"Hurrah!" he suddenly exclaimed, jumping up and fairly dancing about the room. "Only just listen to this," and he read:

"COPARTNERSHIP NOTICE: I have this day associated with me as a partner, Mr. Henry Judkin. Hereafter the firm will be conducted under the name of Crouk & Jndkin.

"JEREMIAH CROUK."

The young man then threw the paper on the floor, and in the delight and surprise of the moment, caught his young bride, who was already weeping tears of joy, in his arms, and hugged and kissed her in a most unromantic way.

At the end of the week they returned to New York. On the wharf they found the father's carriage waiting for them, and were driven by the strong, fleet horses, in a very short space of time, to the elegant mansion in Fifth Avenue, where Judkin's senior partner was waiting to receive him. From a poor clerk he snddenly found himself one of the "upper ten thousand." He bears his honors bravely.

All must admire the ingenious manner in which Mr. Crouk staved off the disgrace that was about to visit his family. The happy suggestion came while he paced the floor of his parlor even until past the hour of midnight, and he acted upon it with the least possible delay. The announcement of the marriage and copartnership were a most simultaneous, and there were few who were aware of the fact that Judkin was only his clerk, and had married his daughter without his consent. Strange things happen sometimes among the "upper ten thousand."

A DUEL.—A duel lately came off in Fountain county, Ia. The combatants were Lorenzo D. Orvis and James Durby. It appears that the seconds aimed to make the affair as fanciful as possible, loading their rifles with "something fresh and softer than lead." The ground being measured off and word given, bang went their instruments of death. The reader may readily guess that no bones were broken. To render the affair more ridiculous, the surgeon in attendance promptly proceeded to the discarge of his duty by stepping up to the murdered two with his implements, comprising an old meat-axe, tobacco cutter, taphorer and jack knife, but finding neither of the "brothers of honor" hurt, he gave orders that they should be cleaned and sent home.

The Fate of France Prophecied.

The following article, on the subject of the above heading, we copy from the New York True Sun. If it is true that such prophecies exist, or have existed, then, indeed, is truth stranger than fiction:

It is now some six months or more since, (says the Sun) on the occasion of the tumult and massacres in France, we stated them as the continued fulfillment of most remakable prophecies, that have long been known to exist in Europe, and which have fixed public attention as direct and unmistakeable evidence of the existence of the gift of at least "second sight" in these latter days. The work in question, or at least the copy we have seen, is of ancient date, and of French phraseology, and unquestionably of a time long anterior to the remarkable events of which it most accurately foreshadowed the details. The same work has now attracted the attention of Blackwood's Magazine, and a writer therein testifies to have seen a translation in print in 1839. The work itself is entitled "Les Previsions d'Orval." Certain Provisions revealed by God to a Solitary, for the consolation of the children of God.

The "Solitary" was the inmate of a religious institution in the diocese of Treves, on the frontiers of Luxembourg, and the work was there printed in 1544. On the approach of the French revolutionary army at the close of the last century, the monks gave copies of the book to Marshal Bender, by whom they were circulated. The portion of the prophecies prior to the advent of Napoleon does not appear, as yet, to have been preserved. We have not room for extended extracts, but that portion in relation to Napoleon commences as follows:

"At that time a young man, came from the country beyond the sea, shows himself strong in counsel. But the mighty to whom he gives umbrage shall send him to combat in the land of captivity. Victory will bring him back. The sons of Brutus will be confounded at his approach, for he will overpower them, and take the name of Emperor. Many high and mighty kings will be sorely afraid, for the eagle will carry off many sceptres and crowns Men on foot and horse, carrying blood-stained eagles, and as numerous as gnats in air, will run with him throughout Europe, which will be filled with consternation and carnage," &c., &c.

In this strain the career of Napoleon is accurately marked out to his overthrow, the return of the "Lily," and the elder Bourbons described. Their overthrow, and installation of the younger branch, "The coek shall efface the white flower," and the overthrow of Louis Philippe, is given as follows:

"The king of the people shall be seen very weak; many of the wicked will be against him; but he was ill-seated, (mal assis;) and behold! God hurls him down. Howl, ye sons of Brutus! Call unto you the beasts that are about to devour you. Great God! what a noise of arms! A full number of moons are not yet completed, and behold many warriors are coming. It is done. The Mountain of the Lord hath cried in its affliction unto God. The sons of Judah have cried unto God from the land of the foreigner, and behold! God is no longer deaf. What fire accompanies his arrows! Ten times six moons, and yet again six times ten moon have fed his wrath. Woe to the great city! Behold the kings armed by the Lord! But already hath fire leveled three with the earth; yet the faithful shall not perish; God hath heard their prayer. The place of crime is purified by fire. The waters of the great stream have rolled on towards the sea, all crimsoned with blood. Gaul, as it were dismembered, is about to re-unite. God loves peace. Come, young prince, quit the isle of captivity. Listen! from the Lion to the white flower! come!"

The facts are well substantiated that these most remarkable predictions have been in print for years, long anterior to the events predicted, and the events of the year 1848, after a prophecy of three hundred years standing, have been fulfilled to the month, with an accuracy that may startle the most skepticle as to those of the year 1849. The computation by "moons," allowing thirteen to the year, fixes the time for each occurrence with marvelous accuracy. The "cock" supplanted the "lily" in 1830, at the expiration of the "eighteen times twelve moons" fixed for the duration of the restored Bourbon, and the date of the overthrow of the "cock" was completed with equal punctuality, in February last. "A full number of moons," within which many warriors are to arrive in Paris, or the "great city," evidently mean a year, and the fearful events of June last, and the concentration of troops by Cavaignac, may be hoped to be the fulfilment of the portion; but three months yet remain of the year, in which the most fearful results may be looked for. We would again impress upon our readers that we ourselves have seen in print these remarkable prophecies before their fulfillment, and when such events were highly improbable.

A writer in Blackwood refers to still other prophecies, of which he was cognizant many years since. One of the most remarkable prophecies was in German, running thus: I would not be a king in 1848. I would not be a soldier in 1849. I would not be a grave digger in 1850. I would be anything you will in 1851.

The fulfillment of these forebodings has been fearful in the first year, and the remainder may not be less accurate in the result.

It is mentioned that the Solitary of Treves prophecies the restoration of the French Monarchy under the "lily" which is represented by Henry V., or the Duke of Bordeaux. The pre-existence of these extraordinary writings is not to be questioned. We have given only short extracts from a mass of highly interesting matter, well worthy the serious attention, whether as matter of curious historical interest, or as really evidences of the continued exercise of that power of prophecy supposed long since to have ceased upon earth. We shall, on another occasion, extend the extracts.

"I loved my wife at first," said a wag, and for the first two months I felt as if I could eat her up. Ever since I have been sorry I didn't.

CLIPPINGS.

MONEY AND THE LADIES.—Jim W——, a cunning wag of New York, visited a fashionable watering place in the Old Dominion, last September, and caused the friend who interduced him to whisper that he was worth $500.000. It worked wonders in Jim's favor.

Although his sojourn was but seven days, and his personal appearance by no means prepossessing, he "won the hearts" of 14 girls; three quivered on the brink; he kissed 11; and got nine rings, and left. The last time we saw him, he had wickedly traded off five of his rings for mint juleps.

GOING OFF WELL.—A person who had been listening to a very dull address, remarked that every thing went of well, especially the audience!

The Editor of the Journal of Commerce saw an Irishman the other day light his pipe at a pile of lime he was slacking with water.

Louis Philippe has taken up his residence in the Isle of wight. Poor Wight!

A SHORT SERMON FOR PARENTS.—It is said that when the mother of Washington was asked how she had formed the character of her son, she replied that she had endeavored early to teach him three things, obedience, diligence and truth. No better advice can be given by any parent.

THE GRAVE—Says Irving—buries every error—covers every defect—extinguishes every resentment. From its peaceful bosom spring none but fond regrets and tender recollections. Who can look down upon the grave of an enemy and not feel a compunctious throb that he should have warred with the poor handful of earth that lies mouldering before him?

MORE GOLD—CHILI.—Recent accounts from Chili give information of the discovery of a gold mine near Copiapo, on the coast, and north of Valparaiso, which for richness, if the account be true, fling into the shade even the Sacramento "diggings," which we thought were rather ahead of all the auriferous regions discovered or discoverable. The gold ore at Copiapo is said to yield seven pouuds of gold out of seven arrobas, which is equal to about one twenty-sixth part. This we hold to be incredible, or at least utterly improbable; and one of two things must be true, we think: either that the supply of ore is very limited, or that its richness is greatly exaggerated.

The Russian gold mines in Siberia are worked to advantage when the auriferous sand yields only one seventy-eight-thousandth part, and, under some circumstances, make remunerating returns when yielding the two-millionth part only. If, then, the supply of ore at Copiapo be large or inexhaustible, and yields a twenty-sixth part of gold, that metal will be in danger of losing its monetary preeminence; but of this there is no probability, we apprehend.—[Washington Globe.

ELDER ORSON PRATT,

ON THE

KINGDOM OF GOD.

First.—The nature and character of the King. God is the King. In him exists all legal authority. He alone has the right of originating a system of government on the earth. He claims this right by virtue of his having made man and the earth he inhabits. Man, therefore, is indebted to God for his own formation and for the formation of the planet on which he dwells. He also claims the right of establishing his government among men, by virtue of his superior wisdom and power. If God had sufficient wisdom and power to construct such a beautiful world as this, with all the infinite varieties of vegetables and animals appended to it; if he could form such an intricate and complicated piece of machinery as the human tabernacle as a dwelling place for the human spirit, then we must admit that his wisdom and power are immeasurably greater than that of man, and hence he is qualified to reign as king. An order of government, established by such an all-wise, powerful being, must be good and perfect, and must be calculated to promote the permanent peace, happiness, and well-being of all his subjects. The Great King is a very amiable being, full of benevolence and goodness, and never turns any person away empty, that comes requesting a favor which he sees would be for his benefit.

The King occasionally visited his subjects in ancient times, and once tarried with them for several years; but he received such cruel abuse from many of the people that he left them, and went to some other part of his dominions. Where the King is gone the people cannot tell. They have not heard one word from him for upwards of seventeen hundred years. He has been absent so long that some of the people have doubted even his existence. They have argued that if he did exist, that some one would very likely have heard something from him in the course of so many centuries. Many millions however have some idea that he exists, and are constantly sending all kinds of petitions to him; but for some reason he sends no word back. No messengers are despatched to the petitioners to give them any counsel upon any subject. It has become a very popular thing to send daily petitions to the king, and to appropriate one day out of seven for the especial purpose of sending in their petitions. The same petitions are frequently sent a great number of times. It is very unpopular however for any one to expect the King to make any reply to any petition sent in. Any one pretending to have received a reply would be counted a base impostor; for, say they, the King has spoken to no one for the last seventeen hundred years; no one has heard from him since he conversed with his servant John on the Isle of Patmos. The King conversed very freely with his subjects in the early and middle ages; and some think it very strange that he has been silent so long. They have expended millions in building many costly and magnificent churches in honor of his name; but yet he has not deigned to grace one of them with a visit, neither has he condescended to send any tidings to them by messenger or otherwise. He has not informed them whether he was pleased or displeased with their splendid edifices. His profound silence for so many centuries has caused many to think that he was, for some reason, very angry with the people; yet they could not see why he should be angry when the people were doing so much to honor him—when they were expending millions to hire learned men to preach and write in such an eloquent manner about him.

Reader, can you tell why the King should be so distant? Why he holds no communication with any of the people? Why he has not sent one sentence of consolation or counsel to them? Why he has suffered some fifteen thousand millions of the human race to fall into their graves, in the latter ages, without condescending to speak one word to any of them? There must be some cause for all this. There must be something wrong. The King never formerly served his people in this manner; and when he went away, he left word that if any of his people lacked wisdom or knowledge on any subject, they should send in their petitions unto him and he would liberally send them the requisite information. I will now tell you the reason why the King has kept silence so long. It is because he has had no subjects to converse with; all have turned away from him and advocated other governments as being the rightful and legal authority. They killed off and utterly destroyed every true subject of his kingdom, and left not a vestige of it upon the earth; and, to add to their guilt and wickedness, they have introduced idolatry in its worst forms, and utterly turned away from the true and living God. They have introduced a "God without BODY, PARTS or PASSIONS." They have had the audacity to call this newly-invented god by the same name as the God of the ancient Saints, although there is not the least resemblance between them. Indeed there could be no resemblance between them; for a bodiless god, without "parts or passions," could resemble nothing in heaven, on earth, or in hell. This imaginary modern god has become exceedingly popular. It is to him that a vast number of churches have been erected. It is not to the true and living God that they send forth petitions, but it is to this imaginary being. No wonder that they have received no communication from him! no wonder that he has not honored them with a visit. As he has no "PARTS," he could neither be felt nor seen if he should visit them. Such a being could not speak, for he has no "parts" to speak with.

There have been various species of idolatry in different ages of the world. The sun, moon, stars, beasts, crocodiles, frightful serpents, images of wood, of stone, and of brass, have been erected into gods and worshipped by innumerable multitudes. But the system of idolatry invented by modern christianity far surpasses in absurdity any thing that we have ever heard of. One of the celebrated worshippers of this newly-discovered god, in his "Physical Theory of Another Life," says, "A disembodied spirit, or, we should rather say, an unembodied spirit, or, sheer mind, is no WHERE. Place is a relation belonging to extension; and extension is a property of matter: but that which is wholly abstracted from matter, and in speaking of which we deny that it has any property in common therewith, can in itself be subject to none of its conditions; and we might as well say of a pure spirit that it is hard, heavy, or red, or that it is a cubic foot in dimensions, as say that it is here or there. It is only in a popular and improper sense that any such affirmation is made concerning the Infinite Spirit, or that we speak of God as every where present. God is in every place in a sense altogether incomprehensible by finite minds, inasmuch as his relation to space and extension is peculiar to infinitude. Using the terms as we use them of ourselves, God is not here or there, any more than he exists now and then." This species of idolatry, according to the foregoing quotations, approaches so near to Atheism, that no one can tell the difference. Reader, can you see the difference! A god "without a body!" A god "without parts!" A god that cannot be "here or there! A god that is "NO WHERE!" A god that cannot exist "NOW and THEN!" A god that exists in NO TIME! A god that has no extension—no "parts"—no conceivable relation to time or space! O, blush for modern christianity!—a pious name for Atheism! Some perhaps may think that I have not sufficient charity. But why should I have charity for a god that has no "parts"—no relation to space! Let him first have charity for himself, but this would be impossible; for he is a god "without passions." He can have no charity nor love for himself nor any one else. There is no danger of offending him; for a passionless god is not capable of anger. One of the persons of this imaginary god is said to have been crucified. But this must be a sad mistake; for it would be impossible to crucify a portion of something that had no "parts." The reason, then, why the people have not received any word from the Great King, is because they have petitioned the wrong god. Would you expect her majesty, the queen of England, to answer your petition if it was directed to some African prince? Would you expect the God of heaven to answer a petition that was addressed to a Hindoo god? If, then, your petitions are addressed to the bodiless, passionless god of modern christianity, you must not be surprized if the true God does not pay any attention to it. You need not expect that the true God will make any reply to petitions offered to any other being.

The true God exists both in time and in space, and has as much relation to them as man or any other being. He has extension, and form, and dimensions, as well as man. He occupies space; has a body, parts, and passions; can go from place to place—can eat, drink, and talk, as well as man. Man resembles him in the features and form of his body, and he does not differ materially in size. When he has been seen among men, he has been pronounced, even by the wicked, as one of their own species. So much did he look like man, that some supposed him to be the carpenter's son. Like man, he had a Father; and he was the "express image of the person of the Father." The two persons were as much alike in form, in size, and in every other respect as fathers and sons are of the human race; indeed the human race are "his offspring," made in his likeness and image, not after his moral image, but after the image of his person. There is no such thing as moral image. Such an image cannot exist. Morality is a property of some being or substance; A property without a substance or being to which it appertains is inconceivable. A property can never have figure, shape, or image of any kind. Hence, a moral image never had an existence except in the brains of modern idolators.

The Godhead consists of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. The Father is a material being. The substance of which he is composed is wholly material. It is a substance widely different in some respects from the various substances with which we are more immediately acquainted. In other respects it is precisely like all other materials. The substance of his person occupies space the same as other matter. It has solidity, length, breadth, and thickness, like all other matter. The elementary materials of his body are not susceptible of occupying, at the same time, the same identical space with other matter. The substance of his person, like other matter, cannot be in two places at the same instant. It also requires time for him to transport himself from place to place. It matters not how great the velocity of his movements, time is an essential ingredient to all motion, whether rapid or slow. It differs from other matter in the superiority of its powers, being intelligent, all-wise, and possessing the power of self-motion to a far greater extent than the coarser materials of nature. "God is a spirit." But that does not make him an immaterial being—a being that has no properties in common with matter. The expression, "an immaterial being, is a contradiction in terms. Immateriality is only another name for nothing. It is the negative of all existence. A "spirit" is as much matter as oxygen or hydrogen. It has many properties in common with all other matter. Chemists have discovered between fifty and sixty different kinds of matter; and each kind has some properties in common with all other matter, and some properties peculiar to itself which the others do not inherit. Now, no chemist in classifying his substances would presume to say, this substance is material, but that one is immaterial, because it differs in some respects from the first. He would call them all material, though they in some respects differed widely. So the substance called spirit is material, though it differs in a remarkable degree from other substances. It is only the addition of another element of a more powerful nature than any yet discovered. He is not a being "without parts," as modern idolators teach; for every whole is made up of parts. The whole person of the Father consists of innumerable parts; and each part is so situated as to bear certain relations of distance to every other part. There must also be, to a certain degree, a freedom of motion among these parts, which is an essential condition to the movement of his limbs, without which he could only move as a whole.

All the foregoing reasonings in relation to the person of the Father, are equally applicable to the person of the Son.

The Holy Spirit being one part of the Godhead, is also a material substance, of the same nature and properties in many respects, as the spirits of the Father and Son. It exists in vast immeasurable quantities in connexion with all material worlds. This is called God in the scriptures, as well as the Father and Son. God the Father and God the Son cannot be everywhere present; indeed they cannot be even in two places at the same instant: but God the Holy Spirit is omnipresent—it extends through all space, intermingling with all other matter, yet no one atom of the Holy Spirit can be in two places at the same instant, which in all cases is an absolute impossibility. It must exist in inexhaustible quantities, which is the only possible way for any substance to be omnipresent. All the innumerable phenomena of universal nature are produced in their origin by the actual presence of this intelligent, all-wise, and all-powerful material substance called the Holy Spirit. It is the most active matter in the universe, producing all its operations according to fixed and definite laws enacted by itself, in conjunction with the Father and the Son. What are called the laws of nature are nothing more nor less than the fixed method by which this spiritual matter operates. Each atom of the Holy Spirit is intelligent, and like all other matter has solidity, form, and size, and occupies space. Two atoms of this spirit cannot occupy the same place at the same time, neither can one atom, as before stated, occupy two separate spaces at the sams time. In all these respects it does not differ in the least from all other matter. Its distinguishing characteristics from other matter are its almighty powers and infinite wisdom, and many other glorious attributes which other materials do not possess. If several of the atoms of this Spirit should unite themselves together into the form of a person, then this person of the Holy Spirit would be subject to the same necessity as the other two persons of the Godhead, that is, it could not be every where present. No finite number of atoms can be omnipresent. An infinite number of atoms is requisite to be everywhere in infinite space. Two persons receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit, do not each receive at the same time the same identical particles, though they each receive a substance exactly similar in kind. It would be as impossible for each to receive the same identical atoms at the same instant, as it would be for two men to drink the same identical pint of water. It is these three all-powerful substances that stand at the head of all legal government. They hold the supreme authority and power in heaven, and in the heaven of heavens, and throughout the wide expanse of universal nature. All principalities, powers, and kingdoms, whether in heaven or on earth, must yield to be instructed and controlled by the supreme power, or they cannot stand.

Second.—The character and requisite qualifications of the subordinate officers in the kingdom of God are now to be considered. As the persons of the Father and Son cannot be every where present, it is therefore impossible for them to attend in person to all the multiplied affairs of government among intelligent beings; therefore, God in establishing a government among such beings, has always called persons of their own number to officiate in his name. The character of these persons, previously to their calling and appointment, has generally been that of honesty and sincerity; otherwise they have not differed materially from other men.

The various officers, called of God to administer the affairs of his government, are apostles, prophets, bishops, evangelists, elders, pastors, teachers, and deacons. God has only one way of calling these different officers, and that is by new revelation. No person was ever authorized to act in the name of the Lord unless called by new revelation. Paul says, (Heb. v. 4), "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." Among the vast number of national governments now upon the earth, where is there one that even professes to be the kingdom of God or that its officers were called of God as was Aaron? Human authority and human calling are the only powers which any nation professes to have. But there are certain petty governments, called churches, organized within these national governments, which claim divine authority, and consider their officers authorized to act in the name of the Lord. But the great question is, Have any of them been called as Aaron was? By new revelation Aaron was called. By new revelation the duties of his calling were made known. Have any of the Roman Catholic or Protestant officers been called by new revelation? Has God said one word to any of them? Do they not, with very few exceptions, declare, that "There is no later revelation than the New Testament?" If the revelations contained in the New Testament are the last ones given, then the persons to whom they were given, were the last ones called of God. When new revelation ceases to be given, officers cease to be called of God. When the calling of officers ceases, the kingdom of God ceases to be perpetuated upon the earth. Nothing is more certain than that the church of God ceased to exist on the earth when new revelation ceased to be given. All the modern christian churches, who deny new revelation, have no more authority to preach, baptize, or administer any other ordinance of the gospel than the idolatrous Hindoos have; indeed, all their administrations are worse than in vain—they are a solemn mockery in the sight of God. It is a grievous sin in the sight of God for any man to presume to baptize, unless God has authorized him by new revelation to baptize in his name. Saul, the king of Israel, lost his kingdom because he assumed the authority that did not belong to him. (1 Sam. xiii. 8—15.) Another king of Israel was smote with leprosy until the day of his death, because he attempted to administer an ordinance without being called and authorized. (2 Chron. xxvi. 16—22.) So all the baptisms and sacraments administered by modern christian churches who have done away new revelation, are an abomination in the sight of God. All persons who shall suffer themselves to be baptized, or partake of these ordinances through the administration of these illegal unauthorized persons, after having been duly warned of the evil thereof, will bring themselves under great condemnation before God, and unless they repent of that sin they can in no wise be saved. The twelve apostles were called by new revelation, but that did not authorize Paul, Barnabas, Timothy, nor any other person. Each one had to receive a sparate call by new revelation for himself. No one could lawfully act under a commission given to some other person. All the commissions recorded in the New Testament were given to individuals then living, and not to any individuals who should live in some future age. If any person would have authority, let them obtain a new commission from God as his servants always did in ancient times, and if they officiate without such new commission, then know assuredly that they are impostors.

The subordinate officers in the kingdom of God must not only be called of God, but qualified to act in their respective offices. The first qualification absolutely necessary for every officer in the kingdom is, the gift of the Holy Spirit, This is the most important qualification of all other. No man, without this qualification, can attain to an office in the kingdom of God; it matters not how great his other attainments are; though he has studied the scriptures from a child, and committed them all to memory—though he has carefully learned the original languages in which they were written—though he has made himself master of all sciences—grasped with a comprehensive mind all the arguments set forth in theological works, yet none of these attainments will qualify him for even the least office in the kingdom of God. The unlearned youth, who had not the knowledge of the English alphabet, if he were called of God, and qualified by the gift of the Holy Spirit, would have more power and authority, and could do more towards saving men, than all the theologians and doctors of divinity that the world affords, unless they were called of God, and endowed with the gift of the Holy Ghost. No other qualifications whatsoever can be substituted in the stead of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is the great distinguishing characteristic between the officers of the Kingdom of God and impostors. Every officer sent of God has a qualification that no impostor ever had or even can have.

The first officers placed in the kingdom of God are apostles. Let us enquire how in ancient times this office was conferred on man. Jesus said to his ancient apostles (John xv. 16.) "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit." Paul informs us (Heb. iii. 1.) that Jesus himself was an apostle. Holding the office himself, he had the most perfect right to confer the same calling upon others; hence he first chose them, and then "ordained" them; after this he sent them forth to preach (Matthew x.) "and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans, enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." Although these apostles were chosen, ordained, and sent forth on a particular mission to the cities of Israel, with power to work mighty miracles, yet there was an essential qualification which they had not yet received. They had received power sufficient to qualify them to preach that the "kingdom of heaven was at hand." But they had not yet received power sufficient to fully organize and build up that kingdom on the earth. They lacked one very important qualification, without which they could never establish the kingdom which they had already predicted "was at hand." What was this further qualification which these apostles had not yet received? It was the gift of the Holy Ghost, or the other Comforter which Jesus promised them. It is very remarkable that these apostles should have such great power, and yet not have the Holy Ghost But bear what the scripture saith, (John vii. 37, 38, 39) "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood, and cried, saying, If any man thrist, let him come unto me, and drink. He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. (But this spake he of the spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified)." Mark the expression, "the Holy Ghost was not yet given." This agrees with anohter saying of Jesus to his apostles (John xvi. 7), "Nevertheless; I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send him unto you." Jesus calls this Comforter the Holy Ghost (John xiv. 26). After the resurrection of Jesus, and as he was about to be taken up into heaven, he said to his apostles (Luke xxiv. 49), "Behold I send the promise of my father upon you" (alluding to the Comforter or the Holy Ghost which he promised several days before should be sent unto them from the Father after his glorification); "but," said he, "tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Thus you see, dear reader, that these apostles had power to "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, and cast out devils," although the Holy Ghost was not yet given to them. A certain power was yet lacking. Jesus had commanded them saying, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." But he would not suffer them to commence this mission until the promise of the Father—the Holy Ghost—was given them. They already had power to work mighty miracles, but had not the power to build up the kingdom of God. This power they were to tarry for in Jerusalem, and when they should receive it, they were then to commence the duties of their mission, first, in the city of Jerusalem, and afterwards extend their labors to all nations. The power to work miracles is entirely a different thing from the power to build up the kingdom of God; the latter power, however, always includes the former, but the former power does not always include the latter.

PRAYER.

BY V. H. BRUCE.

Father in heav'n enthroned on high;
In Jesus' name we now draw nigh,
In prayer and praise before thy face,
As humble suppliants of thy grace.
Forgive our sins, Father, we pray;
Each wrong in us from day to day;
And let thy spirit now inspire
Our minds, and lead our hearts desire.

We thank thee Lord, for all we have;
For life and health this side the grave;
For food and raiment as we need,
And stores on which our cattle feed;
For flocks that gather to our hand,
Prepared by thee for creature man;
That make our lives more pleasant here,
And fill our hearts with grateful fear.

For dwellings too, we thank thy name,
And for the peace that with us reigns;
For blessings of thy priesthood true,
For prophets standing in our view;
And for thy word, through men inspired,
And for all saving gifts required;
That we thy people ah may prove,
Together bound by faith and love.

And, while we thank thee for thy grace,
And every blessing in its place;
We still implore thy blessing free;
In Jesus' name, we ask of thee;
When ere temptation shall betide,
And evils urge our steps aside;
Oh fill us with thy spirit true,
That we thy mandates may pursue.

Let health, and strength, spring up around;
And in our borders peace abound;
Our fields, in rich abundance, pour
Their fruits into our present store;
Our flock increase, each in their kind;
And, all things for our good combine;
That we may serve thee, Lord, each hour,
With liberal hand, in priestly power.

Make us, O Lord, while here we stand,
Instruments in thy mighty hand,
To wield the sword of truth below;
To brave the contest faithful through;
And bless thy faithful heralds, Lord;
Who meekly carry forth thy word
From land to land, from sea to sea;
Bless them where ere their lot may be.

That thousands may be led, to share
The honors of thy kingdom here;
That Zion's borders may spread forth,
From east to west, from south to north,
That soon, upon her favor'd hills,
We may our missions there fulfil,
As Saviors, to bring up our dead
To reign with Christ, our living head.

Name of the Church.

Extract of a revelation given at "Far West," Mo., in April, 1838, through Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer.

"Verily thus saith the Lord unto you my servant Joseph Smith jr., and also, my servant Sidney Rigdon, and also, my servant Hyrum Smith and your counsellors who are, and who shall be hereafter appointed; and also unto my servant Edward Partridge and his counsellors, and also, unto my faithful servants who are of the High Council of my church in Zion, (for thus it shall be called) and unto all the elders and people of my church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, scattered abroad in all the world: FOR THUS SHALL MY CHURCH BE CALLED IN THE LAST DAYS, EVEN THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS."

He who is not growing wiser every day has never yet been wise at all.

From the Times and Seasons.

Paracletes.

MR. EDITOR: If you think the following sketch of the "Paracletes" worthy of a place, in the Times and Seasons, use it.

Once upon a time, the most honorable men of the creations or universes, met together to promote the best interest of the great whole. The "head" said to his oldest son, you are the rightful heir to all, but you know I have many kingdoms and many mansions, and of course it will need many kings and many priests, to govern them. Come you with me in solemn council, and let us send some of the "best" men we have had born in the regions of light, to rule in those kingdoms and set them in order by exhibiting good that evil may be manifest.

It was said and done, for every thing there, was adopted from the "head" by common consent. As free agency gave the sons of the "head" a fair chance, to choose for themselves, the most noble of the hosts, came forward and selected a world or kingdom, and a time or a season, when he would take his chance, at winning the hearts of the multitude, a kingdom, crown, and never ending glory.

The innumerable multiplicity of kingdoms, or spheres for action, with beings and animals in proportion, and time, times, eternity and eternities, for a full developement of the qualities and powers of each, would so far exceed the common comprehension of mortals, that I can only say eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, nor hath a natural heart yet been able to calculate either. I then shall content myself, for this time to sketch but one. Idumia is the one as interesting as any, and being situated at an immense distance from the centre or "head's" residence, and many eternities from the birth of the "Son of the morning;" or even the great holy day when the "morning stars sang together," because so many worlds had been wrought out and left "empty and desolate," as places for "all the sons" of God to multiply and replenish the earth, I select that.

Time being divided into seven parts, the following men agreed to leave the mansions of bliss, and spiritually help organize every thing necessary to fill a kingdom for the space of many of the Lord's days, viz: Milauleph, Milbeth, Milgimal, Mildauleth, Milhah, Milvah and Milzah. Now after they had organized the kingdom of Idumia spiritually, then one at a time, was to come temporally and open the door of communication with the spiritual kingdom, that all that would, might return to their former estate; for, for this reason, all the regions created and to be created, were filled with a variety of beings: agents to themselves but accountable to the "head" for promises, made, when they agreed "to go" and be born of the flesh as they had been of the spirit; that they might know the evil, and choose the good: and then be born again of the "spirit and the water," and enter into the mansions prepared for them before the foundations of the worlds.

Milauleph being the eldest and first chosen for Idumia, came on when "there was not a man to till the ground," that is, there was not a "man of flesh" to labor temporally; and his elder brethren who had wrought out their salvation, upon worlds or realms, or kingdoms, ages, yea even eternities before, formed him a temporal body like unto their spiritual bodies, and put the life of his spiritual body into it, and gave him the power of endless lives.

Now the acts of his spiritual body, while he was a child with his father and mother in heaven; and his acts while he was in the spiritual councils of the Gods for millions of years; —and his acts upon Idumia, while he named, arranged and prepared every thing upon it to fulfil the end and aim of their creation, behold they are written in "the books" of the "head,"—which are to be opened when the judgment comes for just men to enter into the joys of a "third existence" which is spiritual Milauleph had one thousand years to account for, as well as to be "arch angel" of Idumia, after he laid down his temporal body. Behold here is wisdom, he that hath ears to hear let him hear, for Milauleph, as yet had not been tempted with evil that he might know the good. He had not exercised the power of endless lives, that he might do the works that his father had done: and he had not "fell that man might be." Although he had seen his eldest brother create worlds, and people them; and had witnessed the course and conduct of that world and people, as free agents, "sinning and being sinned against," while "death" who held a commission from the "Son of the morning," to end the first partnership between the spirit and the body, yet, with all this knowledge, and a liberal education in the great college of the nobles of heaven, wherein all perfection was taught, all science explained from first to last, and all that was, is, or will be, was exhibited on the great map of perpetual systems, and eternal lives, Milauleph had to take his wife or one of the "Queens of heaven," and come upon Idumia, and be tempted, ovecome, and driven from the presence of his father, because it had been agreed by the Gods and grand council of heaven, that all the family of the "head" that would do as he or his eldest son did, should be exalted to the same glory.

This was to be accomplished by the power of "perpetual succession" in eternal lives, wherein there was no "remission of sin without the shedding of blood;" no forgiveness, without repentance; and no glory without perfect submission to the "head." The foundation was truth: and the continuations perpetual succession by revelation. Milauleph, then, knew that he and his wife would sin, and be troubled; but as the eternal spirit in him was the candle of the Lord, he knew also that the light thereof upon the eyes of his understanding, would show some of the way marks to the original "truth," whereby he might work out his salvation with fear and trembling. That none of the work of the hands of the "Son" might be lost or any souls which his father had given him, might be left in prison, angels were commissioned to watch over Idumia, and act as spiritual guides to every soul, "lest they should fall and dash their feet against a stone." They were denominated "the angels of our presence."

But I must stop, Mr. Editor: my story of the whole seven who managed the seven dispensations of Idumia, will be too long for one communication. And let me say that I have begun this story of the "Paracletes," or Holy Ones to counterbalance the foolish novel reading of the present generation. My story is not revelation, but the innuendoes relate to holy transactions, which may lead good people to search after truth and find it. If this meets the approbation of virtuous minds, I shall write more.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

☞ Help the Cause.—If every subscriber for the GUARDIAN will make it his business to procure, at least, one more subscriber, he will confer a favor on us, and contribute to the advancement of the cause. If he can procure five, ten, or more new subscribers, the favor to us and the cause we advocate will be increased in like ratio. Will you undertake it? New subscribers can be furnished with back numbers if they wish.

☞ Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. These nicely enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and on receipt will be responded to forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

Indians.

There are two small tribes of Indians directly opposite Pottawatamie county, on the west side of the river. They are the Ottoes and Omahas. These tribes are miserably poor and wretched. They are not disposed to do much evil, only as they are forced by hunger and want to rob and steal. It is true, they have stolen many horses and mules from us in times when they were going out upon their hunts. They have stolen and killed a great number of our cattle at various times, but not so many of late. They have carried off in the night season, from one to two hundred bushels of corn from Mr. JESSE LOUDER, this winter, as we are informed,—taken off also, and killed several fat hogs from the same neighborhood. Some depredations are frequently committed by them. No mans' corn escapes taxation by them if they can get at it.

These Indians are a singular race. If you feed them, or show them favor, or trade with them, they are more likely to steal from you, than as though you treated them with severity and rigor. This is true of the Indians on the opposite side of the river from us, but it is not true of the Pottawatamie Nation.

The winter has pinched them with cold and hunger, and the ice has afforded them a very convenient bridge to cross the river upon; and they have ranged up and down—back and forth, through various parts of our county, begging, and picking up whatever they could find to subsist upon.

Poor creatures! They have had a hard time indeed! But first and last, they have taxed our cattle, horses, mules, hogs, corn, potatoes, squashes, &c., &c., about as much as we think they should. Being very poor and destitute ourselves when we first came here, we were unable to endure their rapacious dispositions. The last winter having been so much more severe than any one anticipated in the fall, all our surplus produce has been consumed by our stock; and there will be hardly enough left in the country after our emigration is fitted out, to last ourselves till harvest comes again. We would like to relieve the wants of the Indians, notwithstanding their thievish disposition, if we could do it: but we cannot in justice to ourselves. We have many poor among our own people. Indeed, all that it is in our power to take care of. We thought we had twice as much as we should need: but the severity of the winter has swept it off. The General Government, we should think, ought to afford some relief to these poor creatures.

What shall be our treatment towards them, when they pass through among us? Many of them will steal whenever they can get a chance, and the honest ones, (if any) we do not know. We do not wish to harm them in any way. Still, we cannot endure their repeated thefts. Again, we ask: What shall we do? They will come to St. Francis, or Trading Point, to do their trafficking, &c., as several Indian traders do business there. With the exception of this place, suffer not the Indians to roam on this side of the river. If they attempt it, apply the hickory to them; mildly at first; but more and more severely if they do not keep away from us. Some may say, this looks hard and unchristian. It is rather hard, it is true: and if circumstances would suggest a better plan we should be heartily glad: but to us, they do not. Whenever we have anything to spare to them, we will deliver it on their side, or on the bank of the river; but suffer them not to pass about among us. Let every man provide himself with the "oil of hickory," and a few applications of it may make them believe that we are in earnest.

Mr. Hatch had five head of horses stolen by them in one night last summer. Mr. Lytle had two splendid mules taken at the same time. They even went into a field where a man was ploughing corn with a horse, unsuspecting, and consequently unarmed, and took the horse from him, their guns being presented to his breast. More than a dozen more of our immediate neigobors have lost horses and mules by these characters. Thirty to forty head were taken by them when going on their hunt last summer. Some have lost all their ox team by them. A number of men have lost two and three yoke of good oxen by them, so that they had not team enough to haul up a load of wood. We are confident that no other people would have endured as long as we have.

When we are favored with plenty, we may feed them, notwithstanding these depredations; but they must not wander into our settlements after food; for experience has proven that they cannot be trusted: but when we have anything to spare, and are disposed to give it, we will take it to them.

We would therefore say, apply the "oil of hickory" to them hereafter, when they wander among you, and send them back on their own side. Do not feed them on this side at all. If this course does not effect the object—"if good words and gentle means," such as the oil of hickory, will not restrain the wicked, "they must be dealt with in a more severe manner."

They stole two good axes from men in our employ the other day, after they had been fed, and provisions given them to carry away. The axes were at the wood-pile. They carried them about four miles and sold them for flour. We would say to our friends, buy nothing of them, neither suffer them to come about you. If they offer to sell you an article that white people use, you may be pretty certain that they stole it from your neighbor. Let every man on the borders have his hickory by him, in or near his house; and keep his hollow-ware in perfect readiness also.

Profanity.

Nothing appears more disgusting to the feelings of virtue and refinement than the use of profane language. Aside from religion and from the sacred obligation we are under to revere the name of the SUPREME BEING, and never to use it in vain; profane language is almost invariably a proof of low breeding. It shows the absence of those finer sensibilities, of those manly and dignified virtues, of those elevated notions of propriety and wisdom, and of those moral obligations we are under to set an example, worthy to be copied by all, which every candidate for the circles of good society must possess to insure a successful entrance there.

There are many persons bred in high life,—have wealthy parents and relations; and they may carry a fictitious claim to honor, to rectitude, and to refinement, though they are very profane. Should their claim to propriety and refinement be impeached in consequence of their profanity, they would feel themselves highly insulted. There is many a worm-eaten and blasted apple produced by a thrifty and valuable tree. There are many persons also, reared in, what is called, high life—in good society and that are considered well-bred; when in fact, on examination, they are found to be low bred, profane and sensual in their feelings, and destitute of any soil upon which the seeds of life eternal can germinate and take root.

As odious as this criminal habit is, in the eyes of all good men, it is comparatively harmless when restricted to those who profess not religion: but when the man who bears the natural image of his God, and has professed a conscientious regard for the precepts and laws of religion, and then indulges in profanity, he stamps his profession with the seal of hypocrisy and makes his religion a burlesque on good sense. It is disgusting to an enlightened mind, to hear profanity from an acknowledged wicked man; to hear it from a professed Saint, is shameful in the extreme; but to hear it from an ordained minister of God, is most outrageous. It gives humanity the blush, and causes true religion to lisle, with shame and confusion, its humbled and dishonored head.

From this very hour, let every species of profanity cease among those who are called Saints. The blush of shame tinges our cheek while a sense of duty urges us thus to write. No man in whom the spirit of truth abides, will, for a moment, indulge in this disgracefully criminal language. We call to our aid the talents and pure example of every good man and woman to suppress this growing evil; and if it is not done, and that speedily, a scourge lies near our doors.

Sale of Claims.

Our friends throughout this county need not consider that there is any counsel or advice from the authorities of the church, preventing them from selling their claims to any man who will give for them their full value in money or good property that will answer to make an outfit for the Valley. Our counsel has often been asked upon this subject; and we say: sell your farms if you can get what they are worth in money, or in such pay as will answer your purpose just as well. But rather than sell them at an under price, stay on them and work them to the best advantage: but if you can make your outfit without selling your claims, suppose you leave them in the hands of the church for the benefit of the poor. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in the day of trouble."—(David.) But before you leave them, make the fences as good as possible, and put in a good crop of spring wheat, corn, potatoes, &c., &c. The poor will need it.

One thing must be well considered by those who go to the Valley. If they have raised grain enough there to meet your wants when you get there, remember that they cannot give it to you. Their clothes and shoes are worn out, and they must have pay for their provisions in order to clothe themselves. If you have only means just to get there, and have nothing left to buy with in that country, you had better not go there to be a burthen to them: but all such as can go and live within themselves until they can produce their living from the soil had better improve this opportunity. What you may lack of provisions to last you until your own labor will produce it, you can purchase there with such useful goods as are in every day use: iron, steel, glass, nails, sugar, coffee, domestics, prints, satinetts, boots and shoes, for men and women: and all such like articles will be better than money to take there to buy provisions with. A good supply of leather also.

By the severity of the winter, the Indians opposite us have lost nearly or quite all their horses,—those which they stole from us, and their own also. They will be very apt to attempt to recruit or replenish their stock from this side when the leaves put out. Our citizens will remember to keep a good eye upon their horses and mules, and upon every struggling Indian, also.

Why do some men so studiously avoid the Council of the church, and keep hid among the trees of the forest? Ans. For the same reason that Adam hid himself among the trees of the Garden.

Young Men, Beware! The Tempter is at your door.

How must the heart of a feeling man be pained to see young men just coming upon the stage to act for themselves, frequenting the grocery or the dram shop! Do you know that this is the path that leads to ruin? In it you are robbed of your good name, of your credit, and of your reputation. The means to sustain you and a wife, and perhaps children, are filched from your pockets at these powerful auxiliaries of the empire of darkness—at these houses of refreshment and entertainment so often established on the high-way that leads to the capital of his fallen majesty's kingdom. Remember the dishonor that you are earning for your parents. They have carefully watched over your infant days—over the years of your childhood, and according to their ability, have given you education to enable you to act for yourselves: but in return for all this, you mottify and humble their pride and honor in the very dust by your intemperate acts—by exhibiting yourself to them standing on the verge of dissipation, swinging your hat, preparatory to the fearful plunge into chasm below. The words of "Holy Writ," spoken directly upon this subject, are like peals of thunder in every ear that can hear: "He that dishonoreth father or mother, let him die the death."

Some of our young men are not the only ones that frequent these places of dissipation and folly where the spirit of alcohol suggests games of chance, and entices men to take a hand. But even men on whose locks the hand of time has sprinkled, pretty freely of the frost of age, are seen bending their steps towards the temples of bacchus. How fearful the responsibility of men of riper years! Any bad examples in them are readily copied by the rising generation; and even the young, when reproved, will often say: Why, Mr. A. takes his dram at this place, and Mr. B. likewise; and why should it be thought so very criminal in us? Thus are the older people not only sinning against themselves and the community, but are entailing upon society their bad examples by which the sins of the fathers are answered on the heads of the children, perhaps, unto the third and fourth generations. What your good examples might prevent, your bad ones must in a great measure, be responsible for. Be warned and be careful therefore, lest your sins call upon your heads the sins of the rising generation, and of generations yet unborn. The influence of example extends a great distance, and infinite wisdom can only tell where it will end. As you regard the voice of a friend—as you revere the admonitions of truth—as you hope to avoid the many fearful responsibilities and gain an inheritance in the mansions of our God: awake! awake! to the realities that are before you, and let your course of life prove, in the face of Heaven and earth, that your eye is single, and your whole body full of light.

Mr. Springer's Speech.

We have just read from the Burlington "Hawk Eye," the speech of the above named Honorable Senator, delivered in the Senate at Iowa city upon the bill to disorganize our county. Our boys who volunteered at our country's call to go to Santa Fe and from thence to California, leaving their fathers, mothers, wives and children in tents and in wagons in this frontier country, where the yell of the savage and the howl of the wolf were the notes of comfort that greeted them, after looking through affections purest tears upon the departure of their friends under the solemn strains of martial music, "To the Girl I left behind me," thought it very hard that members of a Democratic Legislature should consider it a crime worthy of disorganization, extermination and death, to vote after their return, for the Master Spirit that conducted the war —struck terror into our enemies, and led our army to sure and certain victory and conquest.

But to the speech: It is clear, plain, liberal, patriotic and just. It walks into the affections of the "disorganizers" on this side, its keen points pierce them on that side, it knocks them into a "cocked hat" on the right, and into an amperasand on the left. A Samson among the Philistines was not more brave or efficient. It breathes a spirit of toleration and liberality that will fire every Mormon's breast throughout the country with a zeal and an energy to excel in loyalty to our country's cause whenever a similar spirit direct its course and movements. The spirit that flows through that speech is not only destined to govern a free people, but to govern the world. It is like the oil and the wine of the good Samaritan upon the wounds of him that fell among thieves. We have received it at too late an hour for this number. It will appear in our next.

We may be thought extravagant in our expressions, but we cannot help it. The feeling which that speech inspires we cannot suppress. In fact, we shall not try.

Who, for love, money, or papers, will bring us immediately from three to five bushels good lime?

We are often asked. "Have they found gold in the Valley?" We answer: We have no information that they have.

Why do some men pretend to so much greatness, consequence, and power? Ans. Because they must make up in pretence what they lack in reality.

Be it remembered that every other Wednesday is our publication day, and not Tuesday.

Elder Orson Pratt.

The reasonings of this worthy and excellent man are forcible and strong. They are calculated to arrest the attention of every logical mind, and yet they are simplified to meet almost the lowest capacity. While we admire the strength and weight of his valuable procuctions, we cannot withhold a caution that he reason not so closely as to cut off the mercy of God from any creature. To incourage men to do well, we must give them credit for all the good they do possess and a little more. In earthly governments, State offenders are frequently pardoned for high crimes. This is sometimes policy and greatly contributes to the strength and harmony of the nation; and not unfrequently converts these great offenders to be the warmest friends, the most firm supporters and loyal subjects of the Government. "He that has much forgiven, the same can love much." The law, if enforced, would probably have hung, banished, or imprisoned those offenders; but an act of Royal or Executive clemency is so high that no law can reach it. It dishonors not the nation, it violates no law neither weakens nor impairs its force; but it is the ever-green of a nations' pride, the laurel that should ever adorn a ruler's head. So, also, in the Kingdom of our God. The law we will try to honor, obey and enforce; but enforce it not to an extent that will cut short the unbounded mercy and Royal clemency of an Allwise and Merciful Creator; for after all, upon the horns of that very alter we, ourselves, may yet be forced to hang, and don't knock them off. we are not our own keepers in all respects: So Br. Pratt, leave the door of mercy open as wide as possible.

For the Frontier Guardian.

CARBONCA, March 3d, 1849.

To the Saints in Iowa.

DEAR BRETHREN: As the time is nigh at hand when every man who is making calculations to remove to the place of gathering this season must be up and doing, and as a great many enquiries or questions are daily asked us; we take this method of making some suggestions and offering advice to you on this highly important subject. To the oft repeated question, "shall I go to the Valley?" We answer, we advise every person to go, who is able to take with him the amount of provisions requisite, and means to purchase a supply for the remaining part of the year—which had better be taken in dry goods and other necessaries instead of money. Good wagons and good teams are indispensable on such a journey. We believe that the blessing of Heaven will attend every man in leaving this place as soon as he is able; and that whoever delays after that time will be the loser by it. We should advise those who are not able to go themselves, to help their neighbors; for it is our duty in remembrance and fulfilment of the covenant, made at the General Conference in the Temple, and in obedience to the word and will of the Lord that we use all our influence and property with unceasing diligence until every honest Saint, who desires it, is removed to a place of safety. While we are acting in good faith upon these promises and requirements, the smiles and the blessings of our Heavenly Father, will be upon our path, and our way will be prospered. His bountiful hand will be spread over us, and the way open for our deliverance. We are all acting our part in the great work of the last days, and it becomes us all to be diligent, for the time cometh and now is, when the words of the prophet shall be fulfilled, which saith: "But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the Mountain of the House of the Lord, shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and people shall flow to it. And many nations shall come, and say; come, and let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. For the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." (Malichi, iv. 2, 3.) Therefore, let every man be on the move, and while we are all doing the best we can, to accomplish this grand object, like a band of brothers, clinging to the promise of the Lord, (who softened Pharaoh's heart that he might let Israel go for deliverance.) It is wisdom to assist such brethren on first as are most needed there. This measure would serve to preserve those who remain from many difficulties.

To those who have made any improvement in Pottawatamie county, we would say, sell your farms if you can get their value for them; and if you cannot, give them into the hands of the Church to be disposed of, for the benefit of the poor after you are gone; for if you have to sacrifice your property you had better do it for the benefit of your friends. If you cannot get what your property is really worth; choose the honor and the blessing of giving it to the poor. Let the Saints take this course, and they will either receive a compensation for their labor her, or lay up a treasure in heaven to be enjoyed hereafter.

We would also advise every Brother, who has not got the means on hand of going West this spring, to put in spring crops; or sufficient at least to feed his family in case of disappointment. The want of attention to this item of instruction, for the past two years, has caused many families to be left destitute in time of harvest. They would wait about Winter Quarters until the last company was gone; and then being unable to proceed on their journey, and as it was too late to put in their crops, they then had to depend on their Brethren, or dispose of what little property they had, to supply the want of a full crop.

Experience, is said to be the best school-master; and if it has not taught us a lesson on this subject in times past, we may yet learn the lesson in the future, if we are not careful, to our sorrow. We advise every man who is dependent on the sale of his farm, to make an outfit, to put in a crop of Spring Wheat, which will probably enhance the value of his property if he should find a customer; and if not, feed his children another winter.

We should also advise every man who is going West, to use all his surplus time in putting in Spring Crops, as many emigrants will arrive here who will be glad to purchase small crops on the ground; by this means the emigrant will get his pay for his labor. The severity of the past winter assures us we are in a cold northern climate, and as a warning for every man to make the best possible use of the season for sowing the seed and raising the grain necessary for subsistence; every farmer should put his fences in repair to secure his crop; nothing is more ornamental, or so well calculated to produce a ready sale of his property as a good substantial fence, which secures the crop the year round. We shall give our time and attention to counselling and assisting the emigrants; those who arrive, as well as those who emigrate West. As soon as necessary, we shall give notice for a suitable place for the companies to gather to organize; where they will be organized in companies of fifty before crossing the river. The difficulties with the Indians at the Horn last season, as well as the instructions of the First Presidency; admonish us of the impropriety of going into the Indian Country, without a complete organizaion.

In consequence of Elder Orson Hyde, being crowded with business as Editor of the Guardian, &c., he has requested us to attend to these affairs. We shall hold ourselves ready to give the Saints arriving here, or departing for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, any counsel or information that they need that may be within our reach. For further particulars we refer you to the General Epistle of the Twelve dated at Winter Quarters of 1847; also the Epistle of the First Presidency which appears in the first No. of the Guardian.

May the blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon the Saints; that they may fulfil all the commands of God; do justly; walk humbly; that they may gather up their means: and go, in peace to our new location, to assist in building up Zion; and spread the Gospel to the nations of the earth; that Zion may become very beautiful, and the glory of the whole earth. These blessings, we ask, to rest upon you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

GEO. A. SMITH,
EZRA T. BENSON,

For the Guardian.

KANE POSTOFFICE, IOWA, March 18, 1849.

Mr. EDITOR: Sir—I received by yesterday's mail, intelligence that the postage on English letters hereafter, will be twenty-four cents, which pays for their delivery at the office where they are addressed.

Yours, respectfully,
E. M. GREENE, P. M.

Much valuable matter is necessarily deferred till our next.

Taxation.

Some few of our citizens object to giving in their property to be assessed, and are opposed to paying any taxes whatever, upon the ground that we are only organized in part. The judiciary is withheld from us, and the right of representation also. This inspires a disposition in some to pay no taxes. But our decided opinion is, that the requisition of the Auditor of State should be regarded, and the taxes paid. Not that we disbelieve the measure an oppressive one; but it will cost more trouble and expense by refusing to pay the taxes, than it will to pay them. As a matter of policy then, we would recommend the payment of the taxes. If the legislature have been ungenerous towards us, and have cut us short of our constitutional rights and privileges in a great measure, the public know it; and they also know the reason way they left us in this situation. If we had voted for Gen. Cass, we should probably have had the judiciary and the privilege of representation.

But it is all right as it is. It is an example of the generosity of some men in power. This will not strengthen them nor weaken us, if we do not waste our strength by resisting their requirements. Things will not always be in this situation. A little time will bring about greater good to us if we will be patient, than all our efforts to resist.

Our rulers require us to pay taxes, and it is hoped that every good citizen will not only give in his property to be assessed, but pay the taxes when the proper officer calls for them. This will show a generosity superior to that of the Legislature. They think that we are a very bad people. Well, we are bad enough, it is true—wish we were better; and we do intend to be,—for we can see much room for improvement all the time. But if we cannot show more generosity than they have in our affairs, we should have some reason to to think ourselves as bad as many of them say we are.

We would give our advice as an humble citizen that all persons taxable in the county, pay their taxes, and show themselves men who not only regard law, but even the "color or shadow of law." 'Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." So long as we can wield an influence in society, that influence, whatever it may be, will go in favor of voting for whom we please, and for obeying the rulers that may be placed in power over us.

According to the best information that we can get, our county is organized—our officers duly empowed to act; and it is our decided opinion that any resistance of these men when in the faithful discharge of their official duties, is folly and madness the extreme.

Council Bluffs.

The country in this region is well adapted to agriculture, and is very productive and healthy. There is a great scarcity of timber; but with prudence and economy, it will last for many years. With little pains it can be made to grow as fast as it will be used.

All our friends abroad who wish to gather with us, and who feel as though they could plow and dig their living out of the earth—where it will afford from fifty to seventy-five bushels of corn to the acre—from twenty to thirty bushels of wheat—potatoes and turnips, any quantity to the acre you please, are advised to come from every quarter. They can make their outfit here as well as in other places unless they have a better business than farming. While thousands and tens of thousands are going to dig in California mines for gold, let us go to and fill the frontier region with provisions of every kind—supply the emigrants and gold diggers, and have plenty of means to buy their gold when they come back. We say to our friends then, if you cannot go to the Valley this year; come as far as this place, and dig for corn and potatoes.

Caution.

Three letters arrived at the Post-office here on Saturday: saying, "Enclosed, I send you a certain amount of money:" but no cash was found in the letters. We hope our New Administration will appoint honest men for Postmasters, if among the possibilities. Several circumstances of the kind, have occurred before. We can only be responsible for the money that reaches us. Our friends abroad would do well to send their funds for the Guardian, when convenient, by confidential private conveyance. The river is now clear of ice, and opportunities to forward by private conveyance will be frequent. Money placed in the hands of any of our agents abroad for the Guardian, we will be responsible for. They may forward us the names by mail and send the funds by confidential private conveyance, or hold them subject to our order. If money is sent, however, by mail, the letters should be firmly sealed, so that they cannot be stemmed open.

Gold and Blood.

By an article in this paper, it will be seen that no man is safe in his person or property in the Gold Regions of California; and before these golden mountains are exhausted of their treasure, it is our opinion that battles more sanguine and bloody will be fought there than were fought at Monterey or Buena Vista, and by equally as great a number of men. If ever the strong arm of the General Government is to interpose there, about now is the time, we think; and we do not know that it can effect anything. Gold will be very apt to disband all the soldiers that may be sent there, or cause them to desert. Men will form combinations, and these combinations will increase according to the danger anticipated. Separate parties will have separate interests, and each party will try to strengthen itself, and we think it will be clearly shown there that the love of money is the root of much evil, if not of all before twelve months pass away.

Weather.

Spring has really come in earnest. It is thrice welcome to both man and beast. The thoughts of fences, ploughs, oxen, yokes, chains, spades, hoes and drags, should occupy the mind of every farmer so intently that he cannot sleep after the sun rises. The song of the birds should admonish you that prayer is usual directly after the sweet strains of music. The birds may sing for you, and your lips may pronounce the prayer of your heart, while your hands may follow up in the early commencement of your daily task; and cheerful will be your heart, and light the burden of your labor when under the influence of that Being whose province it is to "give the increase." Try it, and you shall not lack for bread, neither your seed after you.

The man who stands aside and reproaches you and magnifies your faults with a spirit to injure and not to save, possesses not the spirit of the Savior—but the spirit of the destroyer, and like the destroyer will be destroyed if he reform not.

STAGGER WEED.—Farmers, look out for your cattle and keep them away from low ground; for there, some kind of early growth is eaten by them, which gives them the staggers, with which they become weak and die.

My Father in Heaven.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

O my Father, thou that dwellest
In the high and glorious place;
When shall I regain thy presence,
And again behold thy face?
In thy holy habitation
Did my spirit once reside?
In my first primeval childhood
Was I nurtur'd near thy side?

For a wise and glorious purpose
Thou hast plac'd me here on earth,
And withheld the recollection
Of my former friends and birth;
Yet oft times a secret something
Whispered you're a stranger here;
And I felt that I had wandered
From a more exalted sphere.

I had learn'd to call thee Father
Through thy spirit from on high;
But until the key of knowledge
Was restor'd, I knew not why.
In the heav'ns are parents single?
No, the thought makes reason stare;
Truth is reason—truth eternal
Tells me I've a mother there.

When I leave this frail existence—
When I lay this mortal by,
Father, mother, may I meet you
In your royal court on high?
Then, at length, when I've completed
All you sent me forth to do,
With your mutual approbation
Let me come and dwell with you.

STOLEN.—On the night of the 19th, inst. from the pockets of an overcoat hanging up in the Union Hotel, one revolving pistol and one single barrel pistol. They are the property of Messrs. Livingston & Kinkead of St. Louis, who were here on business. If he or they who stole them will return them to this office well and good; but if not, he, she, or they who took them shall test the strength of a Mormon prophecy. They shall be shot and killed by a pistol ball. We will give TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS REWARD for any information that may lead to the detection and arrest of the thief. Cursed be that person who knows or has good reason to believe who has got the pistols, and with-holds that information or knowledge or belief from us, and let all Israel say. Amen!

MARRIED,

In this town on the 11th inst., by the Editor, Mr. ARTEMUS MILLET, of Council Point to Mrs. NANCY LEEMASTER, of Silver Creek.

At Carterville, on Sunday, the 11th inst., by the Editor, Mr. WILLIAM H. LEE to Miss HARRIET A. CARTER, both of that place.

The beautiful bride presented us with a fine loaf, and like herself, it was adorned with white, composed of the best material. In short, the genuine article. Long life to the happy pair!

In this town, by the Editor, on the 13th inst., Mr. GILBERT BICKMORE to Miss KATHARINE J. HUNTSMAN.

In this town on Sunday evening last by the Editor Mr. LEONARD RICE to Miss ELIZABETH BABBITT, both of this place.

DIED,

In this town, on the night of the 11th inst., MATILDA MOWER, daughter of Henry and Lucretia Mower. Aged, 11 months and 17 days.

A RARE CHANCE.

I WANT to employ men and teams to take from 60 to 70,000 pounds of freight from this place to the Great Salt Lake. It will require from 30 to 35 wagons, carrying 2000 pounds each. The freight will consist of a general stock of goods. Persons that call soon will have the best chance. I am disposed to pay a fair price to get the goods there, and hope those wishing to make engagements will apply soon, as I want the company to start by the 1st of May. I also want to buy 6 good mules and one light wagon. SAMUEL GULLY.

MILL FOR SALE.

THE well known GRIST MILL belonging to JEROME M. BENSON, situated on "Big Pigeon," about eight miles north of this place, is offered for sale on the most reasonable terms. There are two run of burrs and a bolt for manufacturing flour of the best kind, now in successful operation. This mill has all the grinding it can do by day and by night, and there is also a fine chance for erecting a Saw Mill on the same dam—part of the timber is now on the bank. Connected with the mill, is a fine little farm of about thirty acres under good fence. If any one wishes a great bargain, please call upon the subscriber on the premises.

Flour nicely put up in sacks of from 50 to 100 pounds each will be received in exchange fo the Guardian, at the rate of $2 per hundred pounds—a good. Good corn will be received at 20 cents per bushel. 5000 good sized, hard wood rails, ten feet long received at this office in exchange for the paper at $1 per hundred. Three dollars a thousand allowed for good eighteen inch shingles. Two dollars a hundred for good lumber, hard wood, inch thick.

The Presidents Message.

Gen. TAYLOR, we learn, gives his sanction to River and Harbor improvements, and to the system of internal improvements generally. We have not seen his Inaugural address, but learn from those who have seen it, that it is short and to the point. In the selection of men to fill important stations, he will pay more regard to their qualifications than to their political creed. The California Railroad will probably find a friend and firm supporter in the person of our Honorable President. He whose sword unbroken brought a golden Territoty under the plumed wing of the American Eagle, will hardly fail to open to its golden bowels, a channel through which will flow to the craving millions in the East, the treasures of the snow capped mountains of our Western Ophir.

LATE FROM CALIFORNIA.—We learn that General Persifer F. Smith, Governor of California, has issued a proclamation prohibiting foreigners from digging gold on the public domain.

From the St. Louis Republican.

Gen. Taylor's Cabinet.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1849.

General TAYLOR'S Cabinet will be composed of the following named gentlemen, viz:

JOHN M. CLAYTON, of Delaware, Secretary of State.

WILLIAM M. MEREDITH, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of Treasury.

GEORGE W. CRAWFORD, of Georgia, Secretary of War.

ABBOTT LAWRENCE, of Massachusetts Secretary of Navy.

THOMAS EWING, of Ohio, Postmaster General.

WILLIAM C. PRESTON, of South Carolina, Attorney General.

The Telegraph advises us, in the above dispatch of the composition of Gen. TAYLOR'S Cabinet. We suppose it to be as reliable as any report which is likely to reach us before the official announciation is made, if indeed it be not altogether authentic. We are perfectly willing to receive it as unquestionable, for a stronger Cabinet—a better selection of constitutional advisers—has never been made by any President. Above all things else, it pleases us most, that the gentlemen who are thus called to office are Whigs—legitimate, genuine, frequently-tried—in, never failing Whigs. Our amiable friends, the Locofocos, were exceedingly troubled lest Gen. Taylor should disappoint the expectations of the Whigs, in selecting doubtful Whigs, or even Locofocos, as his constitutional advisers. They must be convinced, by this time, that the President is not the man they took him to be, and that he is not likely to be controled by any "malign influence" which they may have hoped to bring to bear upon him.

Mr. William Thompson presented the following resolution in the House on the 11th of December:

Resolved, That the committee on the Territories be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of so dividing the Territory of Upper California, as to organize and extend a distinct territorial government over that portion of said Territory which includes the white settlements in the vicinity of Salt Lake; and that they report at an early day, by bill or otherwise.

For California.

The New York Journal of Commerce publishes the following extract of a letter, which, though no later, presents several new features, especially as to the demand for physicians, and the sad want of a government; it is dated

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 25, 1848.

I am still in service, but expect daily to be mustered out. Troops have arrived by the way of Santa Fe, and if they have their complement of medical officers, I shall obtain my discharge. My practice in town is very valuable. This, I believe, is the only place in the world where a physician is well employed and well paid. I am anxious to know whether the courts out here have probate jurisdiction. I have had several hundred soldiers' claims offered me, and I would have bought them, but the law states that the claimants must make affidavit as to their identity before a court with probate jurisdiction.

Let me give you a specimen of yesterday's work with me; and it is a fair average—probably I was a little more busy than usual; in the morning I visited the Fort, and afterwards my patients in town; dined at 3 P. M.; loaned out $4 480, payable in June next, and entered into arrangements with Capt. Taylor to open a trading establishment with the Indians, at a place called Stanislaus; in the evening, visited some other patients; came home at 9 P. M., and went to bed; was awakened three times during the night to dress wounded men, in the general row that took place in the hotel where I am living. I have just returned from an inquest that was being held on a body found dead on the road to the Fort. This is a common occurrence; scarcely a day passes that some are not killed. A whole family, ten in number, were murdered near here last week.

The people here are taking steps to organize a government. They are neglected. There are no regular custom house officers, and the receipts from customs are $20,000 a day. There are no post office arrangements. More letters are carried from the Sacramento to this place and Monterey, than there are on one-third the mail routes in the United States. There are no courts, no laws, no protection to citizens, and there are thousands of citizens requiring protection. There is no mint, and our gold goes to Valparaiso and Mazatlan for coinage, and is sold for $14 per ounce, and 8 per cent. is paid to the Mexicans and Chillenos for the privilege of coinage, &c., &c. It is a fact as certain as any thing can be, that if our wise-acres at Washington delay furnishing us with a government and allow sectional prejudices and such things as Wilmot proviso to interfere with their duty and our rights, that the prediction so often made in the United States, of a separation from the Union, will be realize l.

The mining operations are not on as large a scale as in the early part of the season. The ground is becoming frozen and the waters of the rivers are exceedingly cold, nevertheless, those that propose wintering in the mining district, manage to make it profitable still. Nearly all of the volunteers that were stationed in Lower California are living on the Stanislaus and McCumaly river. Col. Stevenson is there.

I may as well give you a word or two on the state of society among the miners. Murder and highway robbery are every day occurrences. Many and many a poor fellow is waylaid, and his life taken without its ever being known to the world. It is a common thing to hear a party of miners say, "we have lost such a one; we do not know what has become of him;" and bodies are frequently found in the mountains half devoured by the wolves, and not recognizable.

Legal.

We publish in this number, the law of Iowa regulating the subject of Marriage. It is plain and easily complied with. Our present organization brings us under the jurisdiction of this law, and the parties acting without first complying with its stipulations and requirements, will, respectively, incur the penalties therein named.

The idea, or practice of crossing the river to the Indian Territory to get married, in order to avoid either the expense or the penalty of any violated law, is all nonsense. You may get married beyond the limits of the State upon Indian land, and avoid expense and penalty; but you may see the time when you would give thousands of dollars if you could prove a legal marriage, and thereby become heirs, perhaps, to large estates, dowers and legacies, in England, as well as in this country. A number of very poor people in our church in this country, who came from England but were married here, have become heirs to large fortunes by being able to prove legal marriages.

As this law is but reasonable, and calculated to promote order and good regulation, and as the means of complying with it are made available by the defeat, in the Senate, of the bill to throw us from order back into chaos, and from the jurisdiction of law into a state of anarchy, we publish it at length for the benefit of the citizens of our county, and would recommend its strict observance:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Iowa, That male persons of the age of eighteen years, female persons of the age of fourteen years, not nearer of kin than first cousins, and not having a husband or wife living, may be joined in marriage: Provided always, That male persons under twenty-one years, female persons under the age of eighteen years, shall first obtain the consent of their fathers respectively, or in case of the death or incapacity of their fathers, then of their mothers or guardians.

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for any ordained minister of the gospel of a religious society or congregation within this Territory, who has or may hereafter obtain a license for that purpose, as hereinafter provided, or for any justice of the peace in his county, or for the several religious societies agreeably to the rules and regulations of their respective churches, to join together all persons as husband and wife not prohibited by this act.

SEC. 3. That any minister of the gospel upon producing to the clerk of the district court of any county in this Territory in which he officiates, credentials of his being a regular ordained minister of any religious society or congregation, shall be entitled to receive from said clerk a license authorizing him to solemnize marriages within this Territory, so long as he shall continue a regular minister in such society or congregation.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every minister who is now or shall hereafter be licensed to solemnize marriages as aforesaid, to produce to the clerk of the district court, in every county in which he shall solemnize any marriages, his license so obtained, and the said clerk shall thereupon enter the name of such minister upon record, as a minister of the gospel, duly authorized to solemnize marriages within this Territory, and shall note the county from which said license issued, for which services no charge shall be made by such clerk.

SEC. 5. That when the name of any such minister is so entered upon the record by the clerk aforesaid, such record or the certificate thereof by the said clerk, under the seal of his office, shall be good evidence that the said minister was duly authorized to solemnize marriages.

SEC. 6. That previous to persons being joined in marriage, a license for the purpose shall be obtained from the clerk of the district court, an the county where such female resides, agreeably to the provisions of thie act: Provided, That the society called Friends or Quakers, may solemnize marriages in their public meetings without the production of such license.

SEC. 7. That the clerk of the district court as aforesaid, may inquire of the party applying for marriage license as aforesaid, upon oath or affirmation relative to the legality of such contemplated marriage, and if the clerk shall be satisfied that there is no legal impediment thereto, then he shall grant such marriage license, and if any of the persons intending to marry shall be under age, the consent of the parents or guardian shall be personally given before the clerk, or certified under the hand of such parent or guardians, attested by two witnesses, one of which shall appear before the clerk and make oath or affirmation that he saw the parent or guardian whose name is annexed to such certificate subscribe, or heard him or her acknowledge the same; and the clerk is hereby authorized to issue and sign such license, and affix thereto his seal of office. The clerk shall be entitled to receive, as his fee for administering the oaths or affirmation aforesaid, and granting license, recording the certificate of marriage, and filing all the necessary papers, the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents; and if any clerk shall, in any other manner, issue or sign any marriage license, he shall forfiet and pay a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, to and for the use of the party aggrieved.

SEC. 8. That a certificate of every marriage hereafter solemnized, under the hand of the justice, minister, or the clerk or keeper of the records of the societies mentioned in this act, specifying,

FIRST. The christian names and surnames, ages, and places of residence of the parties married;

SECOND. The time and place of such marriage shall be transmitted to the clerk of the district court of the county where such marriage was solemnized, within three months thereafter, and be recorded by such clerk in a book to be kept by him for that purpose.

SEC. 9. Every justice, minister, or clerk, or keeper of records, in section eight mentioned, failing to transmit such certificate to the clerk of the district court of the county, in due time, shall forfeit and pay fifty dollars, to and for the use of the county; and if such clerk shall neglect to record the same, he shall forfeit and pay fifty dollars, to and for the use of the county.

SEC. 10. That the record of a marriage made and kept as before prescribed by the clerk of the district court, or a copy thereof duly certified, shall be received in all courts and places as presumptive evidence of the fact of such marriage.

SEC. 11. That if any justice or minister by this act authorized to join persons in marriage, shall solemnize the same contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, the person so offending shall, upon conviction thereof, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, to and for the use of the county where such offence was commited; and if any person not legally authorized shall attempt to solemnize the marriage contract, such person shall, upon conviction thereof, forfeit and pay five hundred dollars, to and for the use of the county where such offence was committed.

SEC. 12. That any fine or forfeiture arising under the provisions of this act to the county, in consequence of any breach of this act, shall be recovered by action of debt, or by indictment with costs of suit, in any court of record having cognizance of the same.

SEC. 13. All marriages of white persons with negroes or mulattoes are declared to be illegal and void.

SEC. 14. That all laws now in force in this Territory, not embraced in the statutes of Iowa, on the subject of marriages, be and the same are hereby repealed. This act to take effect, and be in force, from and after the first day of March next.

APPROVED, January 6, 1840.

Conference is at hand,—come with wagons, food and lodging if consistent, as though you were encamping on a journey.

From the St. Louis Republican.

The Great Railroad from St. Louis, on the Mississippi, to San Francisco, on the Pacific.

Colonel BENTON has taken upon himself the responsibility of recommending this project. It is a magnificent one—worthy of the enterprising spirit of the age, and of the distinguished reputation of the statesman who introduces it to public attention.

The doubters, the croakers, the timid, the faint-hearted, may all stand back. This is not the longitude, nor this the era for taking one step forward and two steps back, nor for looking fearfully into the past, for lessons to guide us in the future.

The character of Mr. BENTON is public property, and he is so perfectly known that any one may speculate upon it with impunity. He is decidedly great on some subjects, and decidedly a humbug on others; and a political aspirant who should take him as a guide, would find himself, in the end, as effectually used up, as a farmer might be who should plow and sow, and harvest by the twelve signs of the zodiac.

But his railroad project is a good one, and there is nothing unstatesmanlike in the bill he has offered to sustain it. Now is the time for these important inceptive measures, and it is greatly to be desired that the wisdom and foresight of Congress may be found equal to the occasion, and that the bill may pass. A portion of the road, commencing at St. Louis, may be constructed at a very early day, and its progress and ultimate completion would of course be favored by circumstances which still lie hidden in the womb of time. Yet to a reflecting mind, there can be no doubt of the expediency of entering, without any delay, upon the preliminary measures recommended by Mr. BENTON.

Many of the views presented in his speech upon the subject are admirable. Some, however, might have been profitably omitted. He exaggerates the importance of the trade with Eastern Asia excessively. Let us give him credit, however, for his candid avowal, that when he approached that subject, he was "dazzled and bewildered."

The importance of the trade to the Indies, since the days of Tyre, Sidon, Palmyra, and Balbec, or the later commercial glory of Portugal and the United Provinces, has dwindled into comparative insignificance. What proportion does it now bear to the foreign commerce of the United States, or to the hundreds of millions that annually change hands within our own mighty empire?

No disposition whatever is felt to detract from the talents and merit of a statesman of whom the nation may well be proud; but while approving most heartily of his admirable wisdom and forecast in projecting this great work, so worthy of the age and of the nation, it is not necessary that a general endorsement should be given to every suggestion of his well developed, it is true, yet somewhat erratic brain.

If prophets receive any credit in these latter days, the prediction might be hazarded, that this enterprise cannot fail to be speedily and eminently successful; and that the name of THOMAS H. BENTON will be immortalized as the projector of this great chain of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

INDIAN TERRITORY, March 12, 1849.

INDIAN CUSTOMS.—No. 1.

MARRIAGE.

Mr. EDITOR: When a young Omaha beau comes to pay his closing visit to the girl upon whom his affections have become fastened, he puts on his best robe, leggins and moccasins; paints himself according to the rude dictates of his untutored fancy, and adds such ornaments as he is able to procure. With these he bedecks his person and dress, according to his rude conceptions of taste and beauty. His ornaments usually consist of beads, rings, thimbles, small tinkling bells, tin trinkets, shells, ribbons, feathers, &c.

After the process of dressing, painting and ornamenting is completed, the young man starts off in pursuit of his object—carrying a mirror with him to enable him to detect any disarrangement of his dress or ornaments.

When he arrives within a certain distance of the wigwam where the girl lives, he retires behind some tree, or other object—to shield himself from observation—and there waits quietly until she makes her appearance. When she does so, the loving couple suddenly disappear, and are not heard from for two or three days. Immediately after this private interview has been enjoyed the young woman is taken to the wigwam of the young man's father, or friends, who make out a present of some horses, and perhaps a few goods, or choice provisions for the lovers to present to the girls father; who, in token of approbation receives the presents; and makes out others of about the same value, which he sends back to the young man's father.

The ceremonies are concluded by two feasts, given respectively by the parents or friends of the married couple. The first is given by the friends of the girl, upon the day of the marriage—the other by the young man's friends on the succeeding day. A general invitation is extended on these occasions, and all who feel disposed, come to enjoy the festivities which such a time is calculated to afford. The guests come laden with presents—consisting of almost every kind of article made use of in Indian life: Such as guns, ammunition, bows and arrows, kettles, provisions, blankets, leggins, moccasins, paint, ornaments, &c. These are bestowed upon the married couple, who keep such of them as their new relation may make needful, and give the remainder to their friends.

These marriage feasts are enlivened by wit and song; sadness is banished to the dreary habitations of want and affliction,—all are cheerful and happy—the appetite is satisfied with the provisions of the feast—and so is the mind with the scene in which it is engaged.

When the feasting is over, the young man is required to procure the service of several hunters, and send them out for the benefit of the girls friends.

This completes the round of ceremonies that passes for a marriage—a thing in reality unknown among heathen people, as is shown by the way that a woman is treated. She is not sought as a partner with whom, the toils and cares of life are divided—but as a slave whose back bends beneath the weight of burdens, which, the want of sympathy, makes doubly oppressive.

The method of conducting marriages described above, is the most common one. There is another however, which I shall describe in a few words, for the want of time to be more particular.

When a young man wishes to marry a girl, he goes to see the girl's father, in order to obtain his consent; which, if he is so fortunate as to gain, nothing need be said to the girl. The father has her dressed and ornamented in the best style, and furnished with presents which are sent with the girl to the lodge where the young man lives,—who stays at home, waiting for her. The young man's friends now make out a new set of presents with which the girl and her friends are sent home to her father's lodge. The young man remains at home with his father, or friends, while a feast is being prepared at her father's lodge. When every thing is ready the young man comes to join the company and share the pleasures of the feast.

The Omahas have a very extraordinary superstition in regard to the social intercourse of a son-in-law. After marriage has taken place, he is not allowed to speak to his wifes' parents on any occasion. If he wishes to communicate with them, his wife must serve as a medium. She is required to act the part of an interpreter. D. E. R.

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.

More proof that
SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP
Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, O., March 16, 1848.

Sir:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours,
O. B. BEEBE.

TROY, Ja., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

R. BATES, P. M.

JEFFERSON co., Ky., Aug. 4, 1848.

This is to certify that I was afflicted last Summer with ague and fever, and had then had it for three years, and during that time I despaired of ever getting well. I was induced to get Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, and by using two bottles I was entirely restored to my usual good health, and have continued so up to this time; I therefore do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and the public, as the most effectual and innocent remedy that has ever came to my knowledge.

POETRY.

"HOPE ON."

BY SOPHIA A. LAKE.

"Hope on, hope ever!"—let it be
The watchword of my inmost heart;
A talisman, 'twill guard it well
From sorrow's swift, unerring dart.

Why should the stricken spirit flag
When hope is in the casket found?
Most precious of the jewels there,
On the heart's altar safely bound:

I stood beside the hallowed bier,
Whereon an angel sister lay;
The smile of hope was left e'en there,
Imprinted on that face of clay.

The pale pink hyacinth they brought
At friendship's shrine, an offering;
'Twas laid against her snowy cheek
Ere yet her spirit plumed its wing:

That flower in all its loveliness,
That cheek in its own purity,
Were naught when placed beside the gem
That bought that soul's security.

'Twas hope, that brightly beaming star,
Hope in a dying Saviour's love—
The hope that He would safely bear
The spirit to its home above.

I knelt in anguish at the couch
Where my heart's treasures gasped for breath,
And saw them withering 'neath the touch
Of the relentless tyrant death—

Then, when I bowed beneath the weight
Of the Almighty's chastening hand,
And all within seemed desolate,
Hope pointed to a better land.

"Hope on!" Yes, ever will I hope
'Gainst all the cares and ills of life;
The jeweled circlet will I wear,
To shield me from earth's bitter strife.

And, oh! may I, when death shall come,
On that blest "anchor" safely rest;
And may it be my spirit's guide
Unto a kind Redeemer's breast!

MISCELLANY.

From Godey's Lady's Book.

PRINCE SIGISMUND.

A Tradition of Polish History.

BY MRS. E. F. ELLET.

Calderon's fiction, so full of meaning, is founded upon this legend. The following rifacimento may give the reader some idea of it. E. F. E.

"Das Leben, ist ein Traum!
Und Nichts bleibt uns von allem, was wir hatten,
Als —— die Erinnerung an uns're Thaten."

A light was burning dimly in the lofty turret of the royal palace in the Polish capital—many hundred years ago. The night was fiercely tempestuous; black brooding masses of clouds were rent continually by gleams of lightning, and the sullen thunders burst forth ever and anon while the rain drove in furious dashes against the casements, and the wind caused the solid walls to tremble. The streets of the city were silent and deserted. Few would venture out in so wild a storm—and not many in those days were shelterless, for the number of inhabitants were not yet disproportioned to the dwellings.

Within the turret a middle-aged man was busily at work. The apartment was low and narrow, and littered with astronomical instruments. Several manuscript volumes, with worm-eaten bindings were scattered about; and a parchment, covered with hieroglyphics, lay on the table on which the lamp stood. The man was dressed in a loose robe of serge, with head uncovered; but a certain dignity of mien bespoke him no ordinary person. Such, indeed, he was not; it was Basilius, one of the early monarchs of Poland. His renown as a warrior was spread over all the countries of the north, and his reputation for wisdom and science was yet more widely extended. It was currently believed that he was deeply skilled in knowledge of occult things, and many who would not have feared to stand before his prowess in battle, dreaded a conflict with one whose powers were supposed to transcend the limits of human sagacity.

The astrologer monarch, as we have said, was busily occupied. Now he adjusted the globes, and consulted the hieroglyphics and one of the worm-eaten volumes; now he would ascend into a sort of observatory and remain there some moments, although the raging of the elements without allowed no favorable opportunity for contemplating the heavens. The result of his calculations seemed to be anything but satisfactory. A deep gloom sat upon his noble features, and he moved about his task mechanically, like one impelled by some irresistable power, yet saddened by every new discovery. When was it otherwise with the sage since Adam tasted the fruit of a knowledge forbidden?

A heavy step was heard ascending the stairs. Basilius suddenly ceased from his work, and stood still, every feature expressive of the most intense expectation. The narrow door opened, and a man entered.

"Well, Clotald, what tidings? Speak quickly."

"You have a son, my lord."

"The moment of its birth—thou hast it written down exactly?"

"It is here, my lord; and the attendant handed a piece of writing to the king.

"Thou hast done well, Clotald. Descend now, and bring me word of the queen's health."

The man obeyed in silence. Basilius resumed his labors. After a few moments, an expression of profound anguish passed over his face; his lips worked convulsively; he let fall the parchment he held, staggered backward, and with a low groan, sank into a seat.

Half an hour might have elapsed after this, when the door was again opened, and Clotald once more appeared. This time his face was pale, and he was breathless with haste.

"Thou needst not speak now!" exclaimed the king, wildly, and starting to his feet. "I know it all—I know the queen is dying——"

Clotald placed his hand upon his heart, and bent his head with a gesture of grief. Basilius passed him, and descended the stairs with trembling steps.

In an apartment furnished with the utmost magnificence of those days, surrounded by attendants, lay the feeble queen, who, having just become a mother, was about to leave this world. Her husband leaned over her with looks of despair; her hand was closely locked in his, and her glassy eyes were fixed on his face. There was a deep silence for all knew that the queen's last moment was approaching, and none dared even by lamentation, disturb the solemnity of the scene.

At length the dying mother, in a voice scarcely articulate, made known her desire to see her infant. The helpless child was brought to the bedside. She signed that it should be placed in the father's arms; then smiled, and pointed upward, as if commending the helpless one to paternal care, and, with that trusting smile upon her lips, expired.

Many days passed ere the bereaved monarch would admit even his most favored servant to his presence. At last the Baron Clotald was summoned to the royal closet. He found his master calm, though pale and changed in aspect. It seemed as if all the joy of life were gone, and but its sorrow, the bitter fruit of knowledge, remained.

"Clotald," he began, abruptly, as the baron entered, "thou hast grown gray in my service; but I have to ask of thee a stronger proof of loyalty and fidelity than has ever yet been required. Thou art at liberty to decline it."

"I am your faithful slave unto death, my lord."

"To thy death—or—another's" asked the king, in a low tone.

"Either or both," was the unhesitating reply.

"Thou dost not falter?"

The baron knelt at his master's feet, and took a solemn oath to devote himself body and soul to his service.

"Listen, then," resumed Basilius: "the boy mine only son, whom his lost mother prayed me, with her latest breath, to protect, I cannot cast him off—I cannot slay him!"

Clotald gazed in bewildered astonishment, as if he doubted the evidence o his senses. The king appeared not to notice his emotion.

"Yet that infant, now so feeble and helpless, is destined—I have read it in the stars—to prove in after years a monster of ingratitude, a scourge to his people, a curse to the earth!"

The baron started and grew pale, but ventured no answer.

"All my observations and calculations before his birth, pointed to the same result. My labors on that fatal night, and the indications of the time of his birth but confirmed my worst fears. He will grow up a wild beast rather than a man! He will trample on my subjects—he will rebel against his father—he will set his foot upon my neck!"

Clotald listened in appalled silence. At length he said—"Is it your pleasure, my liege, that he be removed?"

"Slay him not," answered the deep voice of the king. "He is yet innocent; there is no stain yet upon his soul. Let us keep him thus till he is fitted to reign. Many leagues from hence I have a castle where thou and he may dwell in security. Some trusty followers shall go with thee. Depart to-night—but first have the prince baptized. It shall be announced to all that he is dead, that thus he may grow up in ignorance of his birth, and no murmuring be caused among the people."

The commands of Basilius were obeyed. The baron departed secretly with the prince and a few soldiers, and the whole court and capital were called upon to mourn the death of the heir to the crown. The body, as it was pretended, was laid in the same tomb with the queen. In those days of imperfect civilization there was little communication between one part of the kingdom and another, so that a fraud which would now be impossible was then easily accomplished.

Seven days' journey from the capital, in a wild valley enclosed by rocky mountains stood an ancient castle, so rudely built that it seemed rather a pile of rocks thrown together from the steep mountains than a building shaped by the hand of man. The interior was somewhat more seemly, and not deficient in convenience, though it was no abode for luxury. In this secluded and solitary dwelling the young Prince Sigismund (that was the name he received at his babtism) spent the years of his childhood, with his faithful guardian the Baron Clotald, and the military men appointed for the security of the royal captive. The secret of his birth was not entrusted to them, they knew only that it was their business to guard an important state prisoner, and that death would be the penalty of any neglect or violation of their trust.

The education of the young prince devolved entirely upon Clotald, who instructed him not only in all manly exercises and the science of arms, but in branches of knowledge—then little cultivated—in which it behoved a monarch to be skilled—for the possibility of his inheriting the throne was never lost sight of by his father or tutor. Every month the baron dispatched a trusty messenger to Basilius with news of his son, and to report the advancement in his studies.

From these regular accounts the king learned that his son's improvement in personal strength and mental accomplishments was truly remarkable—that his quickness of understanding and love of knowledge, with his courage and independence, justified the fairest hopes in his preceptor. At the same time, he learned that the temper of the young man was wild and headstrong; and his passions outstriped the wind; that in obstinacy and ferocity, when provoked, he was an object of terror to all who knew not how to control him. It was but too evident, in short, that they had reason to dread the fulfillment of the destiny predicted by his horoscope.

Prince Sigismund, on his part, had no other amusement when his tasks were over than to watch the driving clouds or follow the eagle's flight, or stand by the stream that rushed through the deep hollows of the valley. Sometimes he would leave his chamber at night and go forth into the open air to gaze at the glittering stars, every one of which was a world peopled by his ardent imagination. Sometimes he would murmur at his fate. "The fish," he would say, "glide unrestrained through the waters; the birds are not chained as they soar through the air; the stream, the winds are free; the lightning has no master. Am I not nobler than these? Why then should I be fettered? What have I done that I alone must be deprived of liberty?"

The king's heart bled when these words were repeated to him. But the long suspense was to be ended. Sigismund was of an age suitable for trial. Basilius called together the members of his council, disclosed to them all that he had done, and announced that his son yet lived.

The information was received with enthusiasm. "Give us our prince!" was the general cry. "He only shall be our sovereign when you, our liege lord, are gathered to the tomb!"

Basilius answered gravely—"If my son prove worthy to reign over you, the crown shall be his; if he be unworthy, then my sister's son, Iwan, Duke of Moskau, and Fanisky, Princess of Poland, shall share the throne between them."

But the Princess Fanisky replied, in her gentle though impressive voice—"You are but a cruel parent to condemn your son anew to banishment and solitude after he shall have tasted of the joys of life and freedom if he stand not the severe trial. Thus will he be more unfortunate and wretched than before."

And the Duke of Moskau said—"I will never wear a crown so long as the rightful heir is living!"

"Be content," answered Basilius, "and reproach me not if in my duty as a monarch I have merged the feelings of a father. This night, by my command, will the Baron Clotald give to my son a drink I myself prepared, which will hold him in a profound slumber long enough to be removed by rapid stages hither. At his awakening he shall find himself king. If he demean himself wisely and well, I will place him on the throne at once, for years and sorrow have so wearied me that I need repose. But if Sigismund show himself unjust and tyrannical—in short, unworthy to reign, he shall again be thrown into sleep and conveyed back to his lonely castle, so that when he awakes he shall imagine his brief royalty but a dream. So shall the recollection prove to him no source of bitterness."

All were satisfied with this, and the king gave the orders necessary to provide for the waking of the prince.

The scheme was immediately put in execution. Clotald himself drugged the wine, which was drunk by the unsuspecting Sigismund.

A strain of heavenly music awakened the sleeper! He opened his eyes and looked about him in amazement. Instead of the gray walls of his chamber in the castle, he found himself in a spacious and splendid apartment, the walls covered with rich silken tapestry, and golden censers emitting perfumes that floated in light clouds through the air. Instead of the rude couch on which he usually reposed, and the coarse garments he had thrown off at night, he was reclining on luxurious cushions of silk, and a suit of linen and velvet richly adorned with jewels, gold and pearls, was awaiting his use.

The prince sprang up, rubbed his eyes, and looked around him. There was no end to wonders. "Am I not Sigismund?" he asked aloud, as if doubting the sound of his own voice, "or what is the meaning of this?"

As he spoke, several attendants came into the chamber bearing costly garments and articles of luxury, wine and other refreshments. They saluted him as King of Poland, helped to array him in the royal apparel, and waited upon him assiduously. Sigismund heard and observed all in utter astonishment. "I King of Poland?" he asked, when he recovered himself a little.

A courtier here advanced, and with a low obeisance, asked if it would please his highness to go into the hall of audience to receive the homage of the nobles of the kingdom. Sigismund assented, and assumed an air of real dignity as he entered the hall, where he took his seat on the throne, and with a majesty truly royal received the submission of the grandees.

"I am, then, a king!" he said to himself; "though how it happens is to me a mystery. Since it is so, I will reign as becomes a king." Then looking round the circle of grave and dignified men, he espied at a little distance a youth dressed in a variety of colors with a cap and bells on his head. Sigismund asked who this was. The figure came instantly forward, and with a grotesque bow announced himself as the king's most trusty counsellor. His speech was delivered in a manner so comical, that the prince laughed immoderately.

"Come nearer, my prime fellow," he cried, "and seat thyself on the steps of my throne. I am better pleased with thee than any I see here, and will have thee always with me."

One of the nobles here ventured to remark that it was unkingly and unwise to prefer the society of a fool to that of sensible men. Sigismund reddened, for his conscience smote him; but he answered angrily—"It is far more unwise for a courtier to dare reprove his sovereign unasked, even were the king in fault. Wherefore have I my fool if my learned men demean themselves thus foolishly?"

The noble retired disconcerted, and the whole council wondered at the keen and ready wit of the prince, thus prompt to defend himself even in error.

The Duke of Moskau here entered the hall and courteously saluted the prince, congratulating him on his accession to the throne, while he announced himself as his cousin.

"That may be!" answered Sigismund, gruffly, for he was vexed that the duke had not uncovered his head like all the rest.

The duke replied—"I expected a kinder answer, cousin, to my greeting."

"If my answer does not please you," retorted the prince, "the next time you shall have it."

"King," whispered the jester, "be not severe with him; it is the Duke of Moskau, a powerful prince."

"I am a king, and greater than he," answered Sigismund, proudly; "and he dares to salute me without uncovering his head."

"My liege," again interposed the courtier who had before spoken; "this right belongs to him as the prince of an independent country, and therefore your equal."

"Thunder!" exclaimed Sigismund; "he who contradicts me again shall be thrust out of the window! Sir fool, what is your name?"

"Clarin, my lord," answered the jester.

The beautiful Faniska here entered to pay her respects to the new sovereign. Sigismund, who had never before seen a woman, exclaimed—"Oh, Clarin, tell me, what is that heavenly creature."

"That is your cousin Faniska, gracious king," replied the jester.

Sigismund leaped from his throne and attempted to embrace the princess. Faniska, frightened and blushing, took refuge behind the Duke of Moskau, who, repelling the prince, said, gravely—"Cousin, it does not beseem you to behave in such a forward manner. You offend the princess."

"You—you offend me!" cried Sigismund, in a rage. "Out of my way this instant, and never appear in my presence again, or you may lose your head, hat and all!"

"My lord, you must moderate your passion," said the nobleman aforementioned. "Lord Iwan is a free prince and your equal, as I observed already."

"You again!" exclaimed Sigismund, stamping his foot. "Said I not I would have him who dared withstand me thrust out of the window?

"My lord," replied the chamberlain, "you cannot, dare not use a free man thus!"

"Say'st thou! Then I will begin with thee!" cried the prince, furiously.

He seized the speaker and dragged him across the hall and out upon the balcony. Before those present could interpose or rush after him, he came back laughing and muttering—"I have thrown him down into the river, and will do the same to any other meddler."

The nobles and courtiers hastened out, some to the chamberlain's assistance, some to inform King Basilius of what had happened. Sigismund and the jester were left alone.

Clarin observed—"The saucy courtier has his deserts, and I am glad of it; but my liege, the thing will make a noise, and your royal father will take it ill."

"Thou art licensed to speak freely, being the court fool," answered the prince. "But have I a father? I thought the Baron Clotald——"

Here he stopped and looked around bewildered, for his thoughts were confused.

"The Baron Clotald," replied Clarin "is here himself, and will give you full information on the subject."

Sigismund looked up quickly. To his astonishment he saw his preceptor advancing towards him, not as usual with a mien of command and severity, but with the respectful air of a subject. He saluted the prince submissively, and solicited his grace and favor. Sigismund replied courteously, and asked an explanation of the strange things that had occurred. Clotald informed him why his father had kept him so long in seclusion, and that his parental affection had at length induced him to bring him forth from captivity and invest him with his rights—adding that he hoped Sigismund would show himself worthy such love and confidence.

Scarcely had the baron finished his statement, when the prince burst into ungovernable rage.

"Traitor!" he exclaimed, "what evil had I done thee that thou shouldst league with my unnatural father thus cruelly to rob me of all human rights—my tyrant, and for so many years! Thou shalt die for this!"

He sprang on the old man, and would have torn him to pieces on the spot had not Duke Iwan, who at that moment entered with the king and courtiers, interfered and separated them. The prince, baffled in his revenge, was like a raging wild beast, but became more composed as he met the stern, fixed gaze of his father. Basilius approached and addressed him with grave dignity.

"I have come to meet you," said he, "and fain would I embrace you as my son; but my heart sinks within me, and I shudder at your looks. The first traits shown by you have been wild passion and ferocity."

"What otherwise could you expect?" interrupted Sigismund. "You have tutored me not like a prince—nay, not like a man—but like a wild beast! It was fear, not love, that caused you to bring me from my prison. The people demand their lawful prince. Love have I never received from you. How can you expect love from me? Have you dealt cruelly with me out of foolish superstition—you reap now the harvest of that you sowed! Look to it—that all your visions be not fulfilled—that I trample not literally upon you!"

"Monster!" exclaimed Basilius; "and speak'st thou thus to me? Thou reckonest on a power of which thou art not certain. Thou seest armed soldiers ready to fight at thy bidding, and deem'st thyself unassailable. But how if all is a dream? How if to-morrow find thee again in thy prison, the subject of another's will?"

So saying, the king turned and departed, accompanied by all the nobles. Sigismund was again left alone with the jester. The prince looked not a little confused. But the fool soon persuaded him to go into the banqueting room, where they feasted so long that Sigismund fell at his length on the ground, wholly overcome with intoxication.

Sigismund awoke from troubled dreams of tyranny, and wrangling, and bloodshed. It was quite dark. He called aloud—"What, ho! servants—guards—bring lights!" There was the faint glimmer of a lamp in a room adjoining, and presently Clotald appeared at the side of his bed. The prince started up and looked around him bewildered. He saw nothing of the sumptuous luxury of his late apartment, but only the sullen walls of his cell. He looked long and doubtfully on the baron; then his head sank upon his breast, and he sighed deeply.

"You have slept long," observed Clotald; "from one evening to another. The wine must have been too strong. You have talked strangely, too, in your sleep. Of what have you been dreaming?"

"Dreaming?" repeated the youth, thoughtfully, and was silent for several minutes.

"Yes—dreaming," he resumed; "but, Heavens! no, it is impossible! And yet—yes, I have been dreaming."

"Of what?"

Sigismund related all without reserve.

"And you would have murdered me, your preceptor?"

"I held you for my tormentor, and hated you," answered the youth.

"That was unworthy," said the baron. "A king should never hate, but judge righteously; and when he can, forgive. Generosity, next to justice, is the first virtue of a monarch. As you were in your dream, so would you be waking—ungenerous, cruel, the sport of your passions! The dream has shown you that you are not worthy to reign, since you cannot govern your own wild impulses nor control your anger. Lay to your heart the lesson, and bear in patience your gloomy lot."

When he had thus spoken, Clotald retired.

"He is right," said Sigismund to himself; "I was unjust, ungenerous and cruel in my dream. I would do better were I to dream again or were it reality." His meditations, having taken this course, were not long before he fell asleep again, for it was yet night.

This time the slumbers of the prince were not of long duration. Just as the day dawned, he was awakened by a loud uproar. He sprang from the bed and hastened out into the balcony. A large number of soldiers and a mixed multitude were without the gates of the castle. They shouted, as they saw the young man—"Long live Sigismund, our king! We will have no stranger to reign over us!"

The leaders called to the prince to come forth and place himself at the head of the army. "We will venture our blood, our lives for you!" they cried. "We will march to the palace of Basilius, overcome his guards, and compel him to yield the throne to you! All the people when they see our prince, will be on his side!"

Sigismund stood still in astonishment, and thought—"It is all a dream!" But the tumult and uproar increased, and the chiefs pressed him to join them "I will," he exclaimed at length; "the vision is too bright if only a dream!"

As he descended to the gates, several soldiers came across the court, leading as prisoners the Baron Clotald and the guards of the castle. Pale and trembling, the captives implored mercy. Sigismund's heart swelled as he saw the tyrants of his childhood and youth, but by a strong effort he mastered his feelings, and said kindly to them—"Fear nothing; I seek my rights only, not revenge. You were only the tools of a tyrant's will. Depart in peace wherever you please."

The prisoners were instantly released, and having thanked the prince for his clemency, made the best of their way to the court of King Basilius. The old monarch made immediate preparation to meet the insurgents. It was not many days before the rival armies encountered each other in battle. The force of Basilius was by far the most numerous, but the prince fought bravely, and so well had he profited by the lessons of Clotald in military science, that he knew how to avail himself of every advantage as well as the most experienced general. The old king was driven back and pressed so vigorously by the enemy, that he was near being taken prisoner.

"It is in vain," cried the despairing monarch, "to struggle with destiny. The fate I madly sought to avert has overtaken me through my very precautions. Let me bow, then, to what is inevitable."

In haste he called together a few of his chief nobles and went with them to meet his victorious son. When within hearing, Basilius threw himself prostrate on the earth.

"Sigismund," he exclaimed aloud, "what the stars foretold has come to pass! Thy father lies in the dust, humbled at thy feet. Come, then, and set thy foot upon his neck!"

Sigismund hastened forward, raised his father from the ground, and knelt himself at his feet. "My father and my sovereign," he cried, "behold your son prostrate before you! He fought only for his liberty. You have sufficiently atoned for the madness of too implicit faith in the stars. Well shall it be for both of us if you will learn to trust the heart of your son rather than ambiguous oracles!"

Basilius made no reply, but fell upon his son's neck, weeping tears of joy, while shouts of exultation arose form the rival armies.

Sigismund succeeded to the throne, and married his beautiful cousin Faniska. The Baron Clotald, as well as the guards of the castle where his childhood had been passed were provided for royally by his bounty. But the leader of the rebels was dismissed from his service. "When treason is accomplished," said he, "there is no further need of the traitor."

Long and happily reigned King Sigismund. When men praised his justice, wisdom and goodness, he would answer with a smile—"Wherefore do you laud my wisdom? I only make use of what a dream taught me!" He had learned the lesson—

"Life is itself a dream!
And naught remains to us of all we had,
Save only the remembrance of our deeds."

"WHAT YOU TAKE?"—The following though not new, should not be lost, particularly at this time, when every thing tending to the "development" of people of color, is so much in vogue.

Two interesting negro lads were standing in the streets of Charleston, gazing into the market, which every body knows is proverbial for its supply of all manner of luxuries.

"Jim," said one, "'spose you had you choice now of all de good tings in that market—what you take, nigger?"

"What I take! why I'd take all de possum fat and all de hominy—of course I would—now what you take? Hey!"

"Hum! how you 'spect me to choose, when you's took every ting as nice? Come along nigger."

The popular adage tells us to stuff a cold and starve a cough. How rare ought coughs to be in the workhouse; how scarce colds among Aldermen!

Coming to the West, with Old Zack's Jug.

We were highly amused yesterday. On the bridge that crosses the tumbling waters of Grand Rapids, we met a hale old man, with eleven sons, seven daughters, thirty-seven grand children, and his own wife—the only one he ever had—with numerous horses, carts, wagons, oxen, cows, calves, sheep, and furniture of very antiquated appearance, among which were to be seen cradles for babies, cradles for grain, spinning-wheels, pots, kettles, and almost every thing requisite for a settlement such as fifty-seven blood relations will make in the Grand River country. After stopping the train, and making many inquiries we asked the old gentleman what use there could be made of a bottomless old jug, which was carefully laid in a safe place, among his domestic equiptments, and received the following reply:

"Why, sir, I am a man of many years, and lots of children, and more a comin'—and have worked on other people's land all my days—paid from four to nine bushels of grain per acre rent every year for doing it—have all that time used a jug with a bottom in it and I got sick of feedin' other people with my old hands, either landlord or rumseller—so I sent seven of my boys down to Mexico to fight for some land—and they all got back safe, after fightin' with General Taylor, time enough to vote for him—and they brought seven quarter-sections of land that, please God, will be our own without rent. And, now, this old jug you see there, (pointing at the bottomless thing,) shall hold all the whisky or rum that will be used in my hul family while I control 'em; because old General Taylor told my son John that a jug without a bottom was the best kind of a jug to hold liquor in, and if he was my John he'd serve all the jugs to hum jist as they did the Mexicans—take away their power to kill us. Good day."—[Grand River Eagle.

SOMETHING IN A NAME.—Attention has been called to the appropriateness of the names of our military leaders Taylor has had an infinite variety of jocular allusions to the manner in which he has sewed up the Mexican nation. Scott has fully proved his claims to the appellation of Win field. Worth might have taken his name from his character and his deeds. Pierce has gone through the enemy like a streak of lightning, while the heavy blows of the Smith have rung loud and clear on the Mexican anvil. Wool, they say, has wooled our foes, and Twiggs, twigged them to some purpose. Pillow has invited many a Mexican to his last slumber. Butler tapped his share of Mexican barrels at Monterey, while Hunter started the game out of Alvarado, and gave his commander no chance to be in at the death. The Indiana general showed Santa Anna that there was no "turning" in that Lane, Some of our officers have proved even better than their names. Childs showed at Puebla that he was no baby, and Bragg proved himself more than a boaster at Buena Vista.

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a super-royal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week. Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will reserve the right and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy; to h Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the interior, and will try, by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the "States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall ride forth in His cloudy chariot, and dash in pieces the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw, that it become fine like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of Him who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and untarnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two Dollars a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United States, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

Mr. Springer's Speech, in the Iowa Senate.

The committee of the whole Senate having under consideration "An act to amend an act entitled an act, for the organizing of Pottawatamie and other counties," approved Feb. 24th, 1847, Mr. Springer having moved to strike out all after the enacting clause, addressed the committee in substance as follows:

This bill proposes, Mr. Chairman, to destroy the organization of one of the counties of the State, which has been established by law, organized in conformity with law, and which contains a population of some four or five thousand souls. We are met at the threshold by the stern question—Have we the right to do it? If so whence derived, where to be found? Is the right to reduce a whole community to anarchy, to take from them the common rights of protection and citizenship, to condemn them to exile, banishment and outlawry, to be found in any of the great charters of American liberty—in the declaration of independence—in the constitution of the United States, or in our own organic law? Or have we power independent of these to do this thing? Is our power unlimited or omnipotent? Or is it circumscribed within fixed limits? If so, let us see what those limits are, and whether an act so despotic and flagitious, so revolting to the principles of justice, and repugnant to the genius of our institutions, be not expressly prohibited in that instrument which we have sworn to support, from which we derive our powers, and without which we have none.

The framers of our constitution not knowing to what extremities parties might go, or seek to go, have wisely provided a bill of rights for the protection of all within the boundaries of the State. Let us test this measure by the bill of rights, and see what will become of it. Before doing this, however, let us recur to first principles; let us refresh ourselves for a moment, with the sentiments of some of the greatest lights of the world. On the 4th of July, 1776, a convention of the champions of liberty, a band of the purest and noblest men ever assembled, proclaimed to the world their views of the rights of man, and the causes which impelled the separation of the American colonies from the British crown. I trust the principles of the Declaration of Independence have not become "obsolete ideas," and that I shall not be deemed out of order if I refer to them.

What are some of the great truths contained in that immortal instrument? "That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness: that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Let us also see what were some of the charges preferred by the patriots of the Revolution against the British crown, involving a violation of these truths. It was charged against him that "He had refused to pass laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the legislature—a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only." Another, charge was for "obstructing laws for the naturalization of foreigners"—another, for "obstructing the administration of justice, by refusing laws for the establishment of the judiciary powers"—another, for "depriving the colonists of the benefits of trial by jury," and another, for "declaring them out of his protection and waging war against them." These are some of the charges preferred against the British crown, and which led the authors of the declaration of independence to declare that "a prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people."

In view of these truths and charges, how can we justify ourselves before the world if we pass this bill? Here is an integral section of the State entitled to the rights and privileges, equal to those enjoyed by any other portion of the State—a "large district of people" for whose "accommodation" we "refuse to pass laws." There are foreigners among them—we "obstruct their naturalization," by denying them courts, without which they cannot become naturalized. We obstruct the administration of justice by denying them the benefits of the judiciary. We deprive them of the benefits of trial by jury. We declare them "out of our protection," and what is that but "waging war against them?" To pass this bill, therefore, would mark our character by acts which would define a tyrant, and render us obnoxious to the charge of being "unfit to be the rulers of a free people." And so the world would regard it—and so the people of this State, the honest yeomanry of all parties, who have "no enemies to punish" and no ambition but to do right, and to serve their country by discharging their duties as good citizens, will regard it. And why does the dominant party in these halls seek to do it—I say dominant party, because judging from the vote on the passage of the bill in another house, it would appear to be a party measure—is it on account of the religion or politics of the people of that county? If not these, on what ground is it that you seek to cast them out of the pale of every civil enjoyment? denying them the "right of representation," and the right of suffrage, "rights inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only." They are a set of "fanatics and outlaws," are they? When the bill for the establishment of judicial districts, and which excluded Pottawatamie county, was before the Senate the other day, the Senator from Desmoines, (Mr. Browning,) requested that the friends of the bill would give some reasons, if they had any; for excluding that county. The reply from the other side of the chamber was, "they are a set of fanatics and outlaws." That bill proposed to deprive them of the benefits of the judiciary only—this, to take away from them all their civil rights, and still "because they are fanatics and outlaws." In other ages, in darker periods of man's history, these might have been held sufficient reasons to justify an act so atrocious and tyrannical, but in our day and generation, it seems to me, that if I could have given none better, I should have planted myself upon Falstaff's platform and given none.

Are they denounced as "fanatics" because of the peculiarity of their religious tenets, and is it, therefore, that they are threatened with this terrible anathema? If so, we have as much right to turn our avenging power against any other county in the State, a majority of whose inhabitants happen to have the misfortune to differ with us in religion. But I shall not waste words upon this branch of the subject. If their being "fanatics" were the real cause of this proceeding, the fourth section of your bill of rights which declares that "no person shall be deprived of his rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified from the performance of any of his public or private duties in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion," would settle the question. And there I leave it, and pass to the consideration of other sections of the bill of rights. Section 6th declares that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation."

In regard to this section two questions arise. 1st. What are "laws of a general nature?" 2d. What is meant by the phrase "uniform operation?" I will mention as examples of laws of a general nature, your criminal laws, your judicial laws, your election laws, your marriage laws, your probate laws, and your laws regulating the conveyance of real estate. These are to have a "uniform operation." Over what? Over a school district? Over a township? Over a county? Over any geographical division of the State? Or over the entire limits of the State, as defined by the constitution? Now if we have power to annul the operation of any, or of all these laws in the county of Pottawatamie, by destroying its organization, it follows that we can do the same thing with regard to Dubuque, Louisa, Desmoines, or the empire county of Lee, and indeed in regard to every county in the State. And to what does the doctrine involved in this measure lead, but to the overthrow of the constitution and the State government? Take for illustration your election laws. If you can nullify them in one county you can in all others. Without law there can be no elections—and without elections, there can be no officers, either State or county, after the terms of the present incumbents expire. What then would become of your government? In view of these results who shall say we have any constitutional right to pass this bill? But again. Section 9 declares that "the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate." Where? Over what portion of the State? The people of Pottawatamie county now have this right by virtue of their organization, you propose to deprive them of it. Sir, I need no remind this Senate that the right of trial by jury is justly regarded as one of the great bulwarks of freedom, having its origin with Magna Charta away back in the infancy of liberty, wrung from the grasp of despotism by the struggles and consecrated by the blood of the early patriots. You propose to deprive, in this middle of the nineteenth century, in this republican land, a body of four thousand of the citizens of your State, of this great right—a right enjoyed by the meanest subject of the British crown. You cannot do it. Your bill of rights, framed by the people of the State, for the protection of all, whether bond or free, high or low, rich or poor, jew or gentile, turk, greek, christian, or mormon, within its broad limits, and which they alone can change, forbids it. The genius of our institutions of the age, the spirits of departed patriots, all forbid it. It is a sacred right—touch it not.

I pass to the consideration of the 13th section of the bill of rights, which declares that.

"The writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless in case of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it."

Shall not be suspended where? It is superfluous for me to say, in no part of the State. There has been no rebellion by this county against your laws; and no invasion except the outrageous and wanton invasion of vested rights and of the constitution, contemplated by this unexampled measure. Next to trial by jury, the writ of habeas corpus is justly regarded as one of the greatest safeguards of liberty. These two great shields of freedom the patriots of the revolution struggled to establish upon a firm basis in this country—they are the main pillars of the great principles embodied in the declaration of independence. They are found in the organic law of every State in the Union. Let us remember that we are treading upon "holy ground," and give head to the teachings of the voice from the "burning bush."

In the 17th section of the bill of rights it is declared, that cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted."

Sir, the bill under consideration if it shall take effect, involves a punishment so unusual as to be without example or analogy, and as cruel as it is unusual. A sentence of outlawry, I believe, is the last degree of punishment in countries, where cruel and unusual punishments are permitted. Here you propose to reduce an integral section of your State, a municipal corporation, a whole community, men, women and children, to the same wretched condition, depriving them of the administration of justice, of the laws of marriage—entailing upon them illegitimacy and all its evils—of the laws of probate—of the writ of habeas corpus—and of trial by jury—of the rights of suffrage and of citizenship. One act more—confiscate their property and the tyranny and infamy of this measure would be alike complete. Sir, death itself has been preferred to punishment less grievous than this. In the days which are said to have "tried men's souls" a distinguished patriot exclaimed, in the very ears of minions of the crown, and amid cries of treason, "give me liberty or give me death" —nobly preferring death to those infringements of liberty perpetrated by the British parliament and crown—and what were they compared to those involved in this act!

But it has been said, let them go out of the State. Sir, let it be remembered that they have homes there and local attachments—and many of them are poor and unable to get away. But this is not the question. The question is, have you the power to inflict upon them this "cruel and unusual punishment?"

The 21st section of your bill of rights declares that "no bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts shall ever be passed."

What is this measure but a palpable violation of this provision of your bill of rights? What is a bill of attainder, but a legislative conviction for an act, which, when done, involved no crime or offence against the laws of the land? This bill is a virtual bill of attainder, just as much so, as if it were expressed in its title. It is worse, it is a condemnation not only without trial, but without cause, because men must lose their reason, before the free exercise of the right of suffrage, must be regarded as deserving the terrible visitation, which you propose to inflict upon this people by the passage of this bill. Sir, it cannot be disguised that the vote of this county, at the August and November elections, is the spring board from which this measure has leaped into existence. This is the head and front of their offending.

Besides are there not vested rights here, which you may not disturb? Are there not contracts here which you may not impair? Officers have been elected for specific terms—have qualified and entered upon their duties—judgments have been rendered be ore justices of the peace. Can you annul the one, or impair the other?

So much, sir, for the bill of rights. I will now call the attention of Senators to one other provision of the constitution. Section 2d of article 12, declares that "No new county shall be laid off hereafter, nor old county reduced to less contents than four hundred and thirty-two square miles."

This clause of the constitution presents, as I conceive, an insuperable obstacle to the passage of this bill. When a county has once been establish, it becomes an "old county" in the sense here intended—and being so we have no power to reduce it to a less area than four hundred and thirty-two square miles—and if we have no power thus to reduce it, much less have we power to reduce it to nothing. If we have no power under the constitution to reduce the county of Johnson to a less area than four hundred and thirty-two square miles, surely it will not be contended that we have the right to strike the county from existence, by attaching a part of it to Muscatine, a part to Linn, a part to Iowa, and the residue to Washington. The argument applies with equal force to the county of Pottawatamie.

There is another great question involved in this measure, and which demands our consideration, even if there were no constitutional objections against the passage of this bill It is the nature of the consequences flowing from the act itself. They are evidently against public policy and public morals—and being so would constrain our courts to declare it void. It is obvious, I repeat, that this act is against both public policy and public morals. To disfranchise some four or five thousand citizens of the State, would be regarded by any tribunal against public policy, to take from them the wholesome restraints of law, to entail upon them bigamy, and illegitimacy, and their kindred vices and evils would as readily be declared to be against public morals.

Allow me to ask, who and what are the inhabitants of this county—and to glance a moment at their history. They number as I understand and have intimated before, about four or five thousand souls, composed of native born American citizens and foreigners in about equal proportions—and are principally Mormons or Latter Day Saints, though there are said to be many among them of other denominations of religion. The foreigners I am told are chiefly from England and Ireland, some naturalized and some not naturalized. If naturalized they are entitled to the rights of American citizenship—and whether naturalized or not under our bill of rights, they are entitled, if residents of the State, to the enjoyment of the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment and descent of property as native born citizens, and of course as native born citizens in any portion of the State. What will be thought of your boasted regard [addressing the other side of the chamber,] for this class of our citizens? What have they done to merit this act of disfranchisement at your hands? Is your regard for them to be graduated by their votes? If they vote with you, they are to be welcomed with open arms, if against you, they are to be repelled as "vagabonds and outlaws." If this be so, it is time it were known. Yes, I desire to ask again, what will the worthy foreigner, for whom you have professed so much regard, and who has been taught to look to our country as a land of freedom and of equal rights, an asylum for the oppressed of every tongue and nation, think when he shall learn from over the water that in the land of Washington, of Adams, of Jefferson and of Henry, in the land of the declaration of independence, in one of the States of the American Union, by an edict of that party which calls itself "democratic," some two thousand of his fellows, either for the exercise of the elective franchise or for worshipping God according to the dictates of their own consciences, are disfranchised and cast out of the pale of government and of law—deprived of the common rights of protection and of citizenship—of the law of marriage, of descent, and of the conveyance of real estate? What will he think? What will the oppressed millions of the old world think and say, whose eyes have been accustomed to turn from the cheerless prospect which surrounds them, to the United States as the star of their hope, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," their refuge from tyranny and oppression—when they shall learn the astounding truth? Sir, I trust its tidings may never reach them. I trust for the honor of the State and country, this measure will be arrested here.

But to return. I propose to glance for a moment at the history of the Latter-day Saints. And here I wish it to be understood that I am neither their apologist nor panegyrist. Nor as I apprehend do they require that I should be either. I have had no intercourse with them—and know but little about them, except from sources open to all. I have the charity to believe however, that they are, like other communities, composed of some good, some bad, and some indifferent. In their new home, in this state, they have been, so far as I know, as law-abiding as any other class of our citizens. We first hear of them in the western part of our State, about the time of the adoption of our constitution, to which event I understand they contributed by their votes, and to whose exercise of the right of suffrage at that time I believe no objection was interposed. They were, no doubt marvelous proper people then. We heard nothing then of the rejection of votes—nothing of the deliberate destruction of their returns—nothing of that other process of defeating the expressed will of the people, called by some the process of "Cutlerization." Since that time they have opened roads, constructed bridges, and reduced the prairies to cultivation. They are the pioneers to your western border. They have fought the battles of your country. When the tocsin of war saluted our ears and the declaration came from the President of the United States that American blood had been shed upon American soil, who more cheerfully and readily than they rushed to the standard of our country—and who more nobly and gallantly than they sustained the honor of the stars and stripes in the shock of battle! It may be said of them that they "left the plow in the unfinished furrow," their families in many instances destitute of the comforts of life; and contributed a greater number of fighting men to the service of the country in the late war than any other class of people. And now when the war is over, those of them who have survived it, return to their families and homes but to find—what? The reward the brave have a right to expect from their country? No—but to find themselves by a fell stroke of party madness, reduced to banishment, exile and anarchy—stripped of their civil, and political rights. In a country where the declaration of independence was adopted—in a State where our bill of rights was adopted, they are to be denied the protection of our laws, and cast out as outlaws from society. Sir, far better the fate of the "unreturning brave."

The Senator from Davis and Appanoose, (Mr. Selman, the President of the Senate,) the other day when the bill to establish a fifth judicial district, was before the Senate, made a sweeping charge of corruption against the voters of this county, as the reason why they had changed their political sentiments. Charges of this kind, like all others are more easily made than sustained. Without stopping to notice this charge father than to pronounce it, so far as the party to which I have the honor of belonging is concerned, unmixed calumy—as destitute of truth as it is incapable of proof—I will beg to ask whether this people had not good grounds to repudiate their political association? And in answering it I shall not attempt to deny that the accredited organs of the Whig party did seek to convince them of the error of their political ways by arguments addressed to their judgement and their reason. I believe I was honored with the perusal of every document addressed to them—and I declare to you sir, that so far from a disposition to suppress a line or a word in either of them, I should be glad to see them all published to the world, and I hope they will be. In these addresses they were reminded that a change was going on in the public mind in regard to the politics of the country—that Gen. Taylor would in all human probability be the next President—they were reminded of the treatment they had received in Ohio, Missouri and Illinois under the protection of the dominant party in those States—and that of one thing they might be sure, no change would be likely to be for the worse, either to the country or to them. Sir, this and this only was the "witch craft" that was used.

But the honorable President expressed a willingness to put himself at the head of a mob and drive them from the State by the hand of violence. It would be amusing if not instructive to be permitted to stand upon some eminence in the honorable gentleman's district, and witness the attempted execution of this act of tragedy or comedy "as the case might be." The persons represented I suppose would be the honorable President with a fire brand in one hand, a sword in the other, and perhaps a trumpet at his mouth,—and his constituents. The honorable President is seen in great agitation on the stage flourishing his sword and fire brand, and rallying his constituents about him with his trumpet—pointing to the west, and exclaiming "fanatics, and outlaws, they must be expelled the State—fire, sword, burn, destroy!" His constituents answer, certainly, we are ready to co-operate with you in almost any emergency, but before we proceed to this extremity, may we be permitted to enquire what they have done to merit this act of violence from the hands of a mob. The reply of the honorable President is, they are fanatics, outlaws, and vagabonds. His constituents request he would condescend to be a little more specific.—The honorable President would doubtless reply "We know our rights and knowing dare maintain them." But be so good as to explain what crime they have committed. What crime? Why they are apostates from their political faith! But is not this a country where every citizen has the right of voting as he pleases?—They are apostates, fanatics, outlaws and cut throats—fire, sword, expulsion, death! His constituents would say are the people of Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, Pennsylvania, and New York, fanatics, outlaws and cut-throats, and having expelled our neighbors, must we then turn our crusading column against certain citizens of those States, who have if reports be true, been guilty of a similar offence? The honorable President would doubtless find this a "poser"—he would find himself in a dilemma from which he could only extricate himself, in imitation of an illustrious example, by breaking his sword.

But as much as I abhor mob violence, as much as I detest it in all its forms and features, I would prefer a thousand times over that the inhabitants of this county, natives and foreigners, Mormons, Methodists, and Baptists, whigs, and democrats, (for it seems there were forty-two who voted that ticket at the November election) should be driven from the State by mob violence, than that Iowa should be disgraced by the infamy of this act.

Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be a prophet, or the son of a prophet, but I will undertake to hazard a prediction, and to say that if it has been decreed that this measure is to pass, the future historian of th State, in writing the history of its parties, will trace not the decline and fall merely of the dominant party, but its utter overthrow to this act—this crowning outrage upon the great principles which lie at the foundation of our political institutions. The deliberate disfranchisement of a whole county containing, 4000 or 5000 inhabitants, to condemn it to anarchy, exile and banishment, for no other assignable reason than because they voted as they pleased, to deprive them of the protection of our constitution and laws, of all municipal and political rights, will be a land mark in your history. It is an act that will shock the moral sense of the country. It casts into the shade the vilest deeds of the Spanish inquisition or the British Star chamber. The consequences of this act you cannot shake off. They will stick to you like the shirt of Nessus—your ascendency in the State does not require this sacrifice. Judging from the last election you are strong enough (if power be your object) in spite of the five or six hundred votes in Pottawatamie county, but pass this bill and your paltry majority of 1500 will melt before an indignant public opinion like the mists of the morning before the effulgence of the sun. In the language of a Senator of the United States, it will sink your party "to an infamy so deep—a damnation so profound, that the hand of resurrection can never reach it."

Sir, I had hoped the day of excessive party violence was past—that that spirit which in its zeal and recklessness rushes headlong over the stern barriers of the constitution, trampling under foot the great principles of justice, to the accomplishment of its ends upon the flagitious principle that might makes right, had been sufficiently rebuked. But it seems I was mistaken, and to its many acts which have stained our history, Iowa seems likely to claim the honor of adding one which in its overshadowing enormity exceeds them all—one which defies all history for a parallel, and defies in vain; but against its consummation in the name of those I have the honor to represent on this floor, in the name of the declaration of independence, in the name of the constitution of the United States, and of this State, in the name of the great principles which form the basis of them all, and in the name of the eternal principles of justice, I enter my solemn and indignant protest.

Louis Napoleon wrote the following lines in an album, a few days before his election: "when revolution moves in the path of truth, it produces great men and great deeds: when it is in the path of error, it produces only uproar and tears.

From the Extra Guardian of the 24th of March.

WASHINGTON, MONDAY, March 5th, '49.

This day, at 12 o'clock, ZACHARY TAYLOR, President of the United States, delivered to the Senate and members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and thousands of American citizens in front of the Capitol, the following

INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Elected by the American people to the highest office known to our laws, I appear here to take the oath prescribed by the constitution, and, in compliance with a time honored custom, to address those who are now assembled. The confidence and respect shown by my countrymen in calling me to be the Chief Magistrate of the Republic of the United States, holding a high rank among the nations of the earth, have inspired me with feelings of the most profound gratitude; but when I reflect that the office which their partiality has bestowed, imposes the discharge of the most arduous duties, and involves the weightiest obligations, I am conscious that the position which I have been called to fill, though sufficient to satisfy the loftiest ambition, is surrounded by fearful responsibilities. Happily, however, in the performance of my new duties, I shall not be without the co-operation of the Legislative and Judicial branches of the Government, which present prominent examples of distinguished civil attainments and matured experience; and it shall be my endeavor to call to my assistance in the Executive Department, individuals whose talents, integrity and purity of character, will furnish ample guarantees for the faithful and honorable discharge of the trusts to be committed to their charge.

With such aids, and an honest purpose to do what is right I hope to execute diligently, impartially, and for the best interests of the country, the manifold duties devolving upon me. In the discharge of these duties, my guide will be the constitution, which I this day swear to preserve, protect and defend. For the interpretation of that instrument, I shall look to the decisions of the judicial tribunals established by its authority, and the practice of the Government under the earlier Presidents, who had so large a share in its formation. To the example of these illustrious patriots, I shall always recur with honor and reverence, and especially to his example, who was by so many styled the Father of his Country. To command the army and the Navy of the United States; with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, and appoint ambassadors and other officers; to give the Congress full information of the state of the Union; to recommend such measures as he may deem necessary; and take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed—these are the most important duties entrusted to the President by the Constitution; and it may be expected that I shall briefly allude to the principles which shall control me in their execution.

Chosen by the body of the people, under the assurance that my administration would be devoted to the welfare of the whole country, and not to the support of any particular section, or merely local interest, I this day renew the declaration I have hitherto made; and proclaim my fixed determination to maintain to the extent of my ability the Government in its original purity, and to adopt as the basis of my public policy, those great republican doctrines which constitute the strength of our national existence.

In reference to the army and navy, lately employed with so much distinction in active service, care shall be taken to secure the highest conditions of efficiency; and in furtherance of that object, the military and naval schools, sustained by the liberality of Congress, shall receive the especial attention of the Executive.

As American freemen, we cannot but sympathize in all efforts to extend the blessings of civil and political liberty, but, at the same time, we are warned by the admonitions of history, and the voice of our beloved Washington, to abstain from all entangling alliances with foreign nations. In all disputes between conflicting governments, it is our interest, no less than our duty, to remain perfectly neutral; while our geographical position, the genius of our institutions and of our people, the advancing spirit of civilization, and, above all, the doctrines of religion, direct us to the cultivation of peaceful and friendly relations with all other powers. It is to be hoped that no international question can ever arise which a government, confident of its own strength, and resolved to protect its own just rights, may not settle by wise negotiations, and it eminently becomes a government like our own, founded on the intelligence and morality of its citizens, and upheld by their affections, to exhaust every resort of honorable diplomacy, before appealing to arms. In the conduct of our foreign affairs, I shall conform to these principles, as I believe them essential to the best interests and the true honor of the country.

The appointing power vested in the President, imposes delicate and onerous duties. So far as it is possible to be informed, I shall make honesty, capacity and fidelity indispensable requisites to the bestowal of office; and the absence of either of these qualities, shall be deemed sufficient cause for removal.

It shall be my study to recommend such constitutional measures as may be necessary, and proper, to secure encouragement and protection to the great interests of agriculture, commerce and manufactures; to improve our rivers and harbors; to provide for the speedy extinguishment, of the public debt; to enforce a strict accountability on the part of all officers of the Government; and the utmost economy in all public expenditures. But, it is for the wisdom of Congress itself, in which all legislative powers are vested by the Constitution, to regulate these and other matters of domestic policy. I shall look with confidence to the enlightened patriotism of that body, to adopt such measures of conciliation as may harmonise conflicting interests, and tend to perpetuate the Union, which should be the paramount object of our hopes and affections. In any action of my part, calculated to promote an object so near the heart of every one who truly loves his country, I will zealously unite with the co-ordinate branches of the Government.

In conclusion I congratulate my fellow-citizens on the high state of prosperity to which the goodness of Divine Providence has conducted our common country. Let us invoke a continuance of the same protecting care which has led us, from small beginnings, to the eminence which we this day occupy, and let us seek to deserve that continuance, by prudence and moderation in our councils—by well-directed attempts to assuage the bitterness which too often marks unavoidable difference of opinion—by the promulgation and practice of just and liberal principles, and by an enlarged patriotism which shall acknowledge no rights but those of our own wide spread Republic.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

☞ Help the Cause.—If every subscriber for the GUARDIAN will make it his business to procure, at least, one more subscriber, he will confer a favor on us, and contribute to the advancement of the cause. If he can procure five, ten, or more new subscribers, the favor to us and the cause we advocate will be increased in like ratio. Will you undertake it? New subscribers can be furnished with back numbers if they wish.

☞ Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. These nicely enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and on receipt will be responded to forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

FASTING AND PRAYER.

By the advice and consent of our wise Counsellors and principle men in Israel, we do hereby advise and request all members of our Church in this County, and as many others as may be disposed, to observe FRIDAY, THE 27TH DAY OF APRIL, as a day of Fasting and Prayer.

The Branches of our Church abroad, are requested to publish this notice in their meetings on the first Sunday after receiving it, and appoint the following Friday after they have given the notice, as a day of Fasting and Prayer to be observed by them.

On the day of your solemnities, let every countenance be cheerful; and between this time and that, let every person lay by something for the poor. The fast that the Lord appoints is, "to deal your bread to the hungry—break every band, and let the oppressed go free."

1st. Pray for the health, peace, and general prosperity of your friends and brethren in the Valley.

Secondly: For our success in fitting out emigrants to go westward; for our health, peace, union and prosperity in all our various pursuits here; for the season to be a favorable one in this region, in the Valley and elsewhere, for the success of the cause in England—for the safety of the emigrants in crossing the ocean, and for the revival and gathering in of the various remnants scattered through the States, and for the general prosperity of Zion's cause in every land.

Thirdly: Pray for the President and rulers of the land, that they may manage wisely, and faithfully administer justice, mercy and truth; and in particular, we advise you to pray for Dr. Selman, President of the Senate of Iowa, who, we are informed, proffered, on the consecrated floor of the Senate Chamber, in Committee of the Whole, to head a mob to drive us from our quiet and peaceful homes, for no other crime that we know of than for voting for the man whom we believed an overruling Providence designed to place in the Presidential Chair. Ask the Lord to make him ashamed of his hard speeches made against a people that never injured him, neither wish to. We want he should be made a good hearted man, so that when he comes out here to electioneer again to get the votes of the low and dispised Mormons, to be cast in favor of the Democrats, we may not look upon him as leading a mob and be afraid. Let it be your prayer. O Lord! Make him a good man, so he won't want to shed Mormon blood, that he may be saved in heaven.

Let your gifts and offerings for the poor be brought to your meetings on the day of your fast, and placed in the hands of your bishop, presiding elder, or in the hands of any other person whom you shall appoint to receive and distribute them.

Should there be any difficulty in any branch of the church, let it be settled on the day of your fast, if not sooner. Do not be so anxious to have your brother confess his sins and right all his wrongs as you are your own. Be blind to your brother's faults, but search closely for your own, and confess them. Your brother's faults will not harm you. It is your own that you have reason to fear. Repent then, Repent! On that blessed day, let every member of the Church repent for him or herself, and not for another. Let manual labor cease, and let every one who has named the name of Christ offer up his, or her most solemn prayers, and sanctify your devotions by liberal offerings to the poor and needy. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble."—(David.)

Pisga and Garden Grove.

Respected friends and brethren at the above places. The deep snows, severely cold weather, and subsequent high water, have laid an effectual embargo upon all communication between you and your friends at the Bluffs for the last four months. Br. Sloan who arrived here on Thursday, the 29th ult., was the first to bring information from you. He says that you have got through the hard winter very well, and have lost but little stock. We were glad to hear this, and we hope you may continue to be prospered, have health and good will in your settlements, virtue and integrity in your habitations, and peace in all your borders.

You are situated far in the interior, where the Government of neither Church nor State can have full bearing, for the present, upon you, in case you should need the full force and virtue of either or both. We rely upon your moral force and sterling integrity to every principle of virtue, morality, and honesty, believing that under all circumstances, you will spare no pains to magnify every principle of honor and justice.

Mr. Sloan tells us that there is now and then a straggling thief that seeks a shelter about your secluded settlements. This may be expected, as your very remote and isolated locations would naturally invite a set of rogues around you for shelter. But suffer them not to stay about you or dwell in your midst. Your inventive geniuses can contrive plans enough to rid yourselves of all such characters. Your temporal and spiritual interest, (we had almost said salvation,) are suspended upon your keeping such characters far from you. And if a Mormon practices such things, set it down for granted that he is a snake in the grass, covering his real character with a false profession, and deserves to be dealt with far more severely than one who makes no profession at all. Beware of these renegadoes that bring evil upon the innocent; and if they call you by the tender and endearing name of brother, and are guilty of any such conduct, let not thine eye pity, neither thine hand spare. They are only a set of blood-suckers, which, if let alone, will draw the last vital drop from your veins. Give them a gentle and modest hint that they cannot mis-understand or mis-interpret, that they had better be after finding another place to dwell. We have no knowledge of any Mormon in your settlements following the above business, though we thus write. Do right all the time, and if any villian threatens to go into Missouri and raise a mob on you because you righteously rebuke such conduct, just apply the oil of hickory on him faithfully before he leaves, and when he gets into Missouri, they will probably repeat the dose.

Extra Pay—Extra Trouble.

In the notice that we published in our third number, the Paymaster gave an intimation that he would come here and pay off the boys their extra pay: but they are now informed that he will not come, but they must go to Fort Leavenworth.

This will subject them to an expense that would overbalance all the money they would draw. Their own time and expense and that of the necessary witnesses, also—would bring them several dollars in debt. Whereas, the Paymaster could come here the expense of only one or two men's journey would be incurred. This is the place where the boys were mustered into service; and they say that the Government generously gave them the extra pay to encourage them, and do them good after their hard service, and they think the Paymaster wishes to put them to more trouble to get it than it is worth in order to discourage them from undertaking it, that he may pocket the money himself.

We should not think that the government would nullify their own liberality by subjecting soldiers to some thirty dollars' expense to get twenty-one. The Secretary of War, we cannot think, has given instructions to the above effect.

Warning.

Just as we were going to press, we happened to learn that several small articles, at various times, had been taken from the counters of some of our merchants in this town. Some of these persons were seen in the act, and we have their names. They are advised to return them to the owner or owners, with an apology in cash, or, in suitable words that may be satisfactory to the agrieved party.

We shall wait a reasonable length of time, and if the articles are not returned and satisfaction given, we intend to publish the names of the guilty to the world, and the legal officers will be hard on your track. It is requested that this notice and warning be read by our traveling preachers in every congregation in the county. The Presidents of the various branches are also requested to do the same in their meetings.

Mr. SLOAN, our County Clerk, returned to our town from Iowa city, on Thursday, the 29th ult. He brings no later news relative to our county organization than we had previously received. He confirms however, the news that we had received. The county seal will soon be prepared and forwarded. Our friends there, some of the leading men of the State, advise us to comply faithfully with the instructions of the Democratic Auditor of State, and pay our taxes and comply with all the requisitions of the law and honor it in every respect, just as much as if the greatest liberality had been shown to us.

This is good advice; and so far as we have influence, we shall use it to magnify and honor the law. If they require us to fill its demands and with hold from us its privileges and benefits, we will patiently pocket the inconvenience of it; and in the issue, it will be as well for us as it will be for them. They must pocket the dishonor of such moves sooner or later, and the longer it is postponed, the more awkward it will be for them: and the nearer we live to the letter of the law, the more complete will be their disgrace. Jesus says: "If thine enemy sue the cat the law and take away thy coat, give him thy cloak also: For with that same measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

We understand that A. W. Babbitt, Esq., has obtained the agency of a mail route from this place to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. The mail is to be conveyed there six times in the year. If this be so, and we have no reason to doubt it, the Guardian can be forwarded as regularly to subscribers in the Valley as to any other section of the country.

Wm. F. Carter, of this place, has manufactured and keeps constantly on hand a most genteel assortment of Steel Plated Hoes. They are nicely handled and are ready for use. No man should go to the Valley, to the Gold Mines, or stay here without one or more of them. The genuine article has his printed label upon the handle. They can be had at his shop or at Smith & Tootle's store. He also keeps a good supply of horse and ox shoes on hand. Emigrants can be accommodated with these articles on the shortest notice, and on the most reasonable terms. Patronize the home trade.

Small Coin.

Every person coming here or going to the Valley should supply himself with half dollars, quarters, dimes and half dimes for the benefit and convenience of trade in new countries. Spanish quarters are only worth twenty cents—Spanish halves forty cents. American and Mexican coin are worth their full value. English sovreigns can reign with the full power of four dollars and eighty-five cents in this Republican country, at least in this bye corner of it, and no jealousies arise, or charges of treason preferred on account of their sway. They can command the loyal services of every American in this quarter.

We publish to-day. Mr. Sloan's remonstrance before the Senate of Iowa against the passage of the bill to disorganize our county. It is a document that needs no comment from us—it speaks for itself. And it would seem that where one lingering spark of patriotism yet remains, it must be hailed with a burst of applause by every honest man; and a shock of abhorrence must strike every noble and generous mind when it reflects and considers that party rage ran so high that reason's voice, the voice of constitutional rights, and the voice of humanity could not reach it at all.

The organization of our county, we believe, was a Democratic measure to secure our votes in the first place; but things taking a different turn, our votes became worthless, detestable, and even outrageous. We are then branded with every crime and enormity that a vindictive party zeal could imagine or hatch up.

Gen. Taylor was elected without our help, yet not without our good will. And just so sure as he was elected without our aid, just so sure and certain will be the down-fall of the Democratic party in Iowa without out aid, if they continue to resist the powerful patriotic appeals that are made to them in behalf of the citizens of this frontier county; and throwing our votes aside or rejecting them will not save their craft or keep it afloat. There are many high and noble minded Democrats,—men for whom we entertain a very high regard. But they do not, they cannot sanction the measures proposed to be carried against us! As bad as some represent us to be, we can appreciate any generous act extended towards us, and can feel as keenly also, and as sensibly as any others, measures aimed at our destruction. We are not ambitious in political affairs, but we note these things to show the feelings and dispositions of men, and to lay before our readers the true state of our affairs. To show still further the determination of some up to the very last moment to disorganize us, we make an extract from a letter from a responsible source in Iowa City.

"The Legislature has adjourned, and up to the very last hour, the Democracy strove to pass the Pottawatamie bill. But a motion to suspend a rule required three-fourths of the members present; and the Senate stood, ten Democrats to four Whigs, good and true—Springer, Cook, Wright and Sprott."

Our readers may forget as soon as they can, the injustice which the Democrats sought to do us. Indeed, the sooner the better; but never forget that four Whig members of the Senate stood by your interests to the very last hour—manfully defended them, and defeated your oppressors.

Gold Diggers, Gold Speculators and Gold Adventurers, California bound, are pouring into St. Joseph, by the steamboat load, as we learn. This is a golden age indeed! Gold is being found on the Platte river, and in various parts of the States. The riches and treasures of the earth are being discovered. Intelligence is being conveyed by the lightning's speed, aerial voyages are contemplated; and in fact, every thing seems to be tending to some important event. "As it was in the days of Noah, so also shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man.' Blinded by worldly enjoyment and prosperity, they were swept away by a wave of God's displeasure. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" All the mines of California will not redeem it. Something whispers to us that this golden age, so rapidly running into new projects, new discoveries, &c., &c., will be like the train, which, propelled with too great velocity, runs off the track—like the steam when raised to a very high pitch, it endangers the boilers and passengers. We say then, while you ride on a golden car, look out for rocks on the track.

Not more than eight miles from this place, and within one mile of St. Francis, there stands a house near the cotton woods. What do you suppose they were doing the other night there, when one says, "how much is in that bag?" "Three hundred and twenty," was the reply. "The sides will do very well, but the edges are bad. We shall have to send away and get a mechanic that can fix the edges right." It is not true about our sending any man or woman to watch the house, neither any living soul. But there are some keen and watchful eyes at St. Francis or Trading Point. The money market is about to experience a decline. Examine well what kind you take.

BACON.—A few tons of bacon, hams, sides and shoulders, would probably meet with a ready sale if brought to this market soon.

The Guardian circulates extensively in this North-western frontier country—it circulates in Canada—in all the New England States—in New York City and State—in Pennsylvania—in Delaware—in Ohio—in Michigan—in Arkansas—in Iowa—in Illinois—in Wisconsin—largely in St. Louis—in St. Joseph, and in various other parts of Missouri—in Scotland, England and Wales.

The First Flower of Spring.

Lady, take the flower I bring,
Fresh from the lap of earth,
Sweet herald of the balmy Spring,
And the wild flowers birth.
There are tears on its tender leaf,
For Earth, its mother, wept,
As I tore her fair first-born away
While on her breast it slept. H.

EXTRA PAY.—It is said that the Paymaster will remain at Fort Leavenworth during this present month, only. Such as may be passing or such as may be residing near the fort who belonged to the Mormon Battalion, can call and get their Extra Pay. The expense of going from here there, with witnesses, &c., will overbalance all the money they will draw, and consequently the hope of getting it will be abandoned by most.

We say again, to California emigrants and gold diggers, do not depend upon getting any recruits of provisions from the settlements in the Salt Lake country, for we are confident that they will not have any to part with till after harvest. Take your entire supply from the frontier and then there will be no mistake.

Memorial of James Sloan to the Iowa Senate, Remonstrating against the passage of the Bill to Disorganize Pottawatamie County.

IOWA CITY, Dec. 19th, 1848.

To the Senate of the State of Iowa:

GENTLEMEN: The subscriber begs leave to represent to your Honorable Body, that he is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the county of Pottawatamie, in the State of Iowa; that he came to the Capitol of the State of Iowa at this inclement season, for the purpose of making the necessary return, to the Secretary of State, giving evidence of the organization of Pottawatamie county, which duty has been performed. But what must be thought of the surprise of your memorialist, when, shortly after your memorialists' arrival, to find in the popular branch of the General Assembly of the State, a bill introduced and passing that body, disorganizing said county, disfranchising citizens thereof, and denying them the protection of the laws of the State. Your memorialist feels it to be his duty, in behalf of himself and the citizens of said county, before the final action of your body, on said Bill to solemnly but at the same time most respectfully to remonstrate against the passage of said Bill. Your memorialist begs leave to call your attention to the fact, that, that portion of country commonly called Pottawatamie county, contains a population of about four thousand souls. In that number, as near as your memorialist can judge, from a residence of upwards of two years, there are from twelve to fifteen hundred voters. This population consists of persons from various parts of the United States and many from other countries. A majority of them belong to that body of christians known as the Latter-day Saints, commonly called Mormons, whilst there are some that hold to other creeds, and a considerble number that profess no creed at all. These people, so far as your memorialist knows, belong to the Caucassian race and possess the common characteristics of intelligent beings brought up under the republican institutions of the government of the United States. Some are good, some are bad citizens, some are intelligently wise, others are ignorant. But none, so far as your memorialist knows, hold any doctrine or creed that would disqualify them for civil government or of becoming good citizens, whilst there are those, who from vicions practices are unfit for the one and do not possess the qualifications of the other. Your memorialst further begs leave to call your attention to an undeniable fact, that great prejudice exists, against the Latter-day Saints, partly arising from bad members belonging to that sect, partly on account of misrepresentation of their true character; but principally from the fact as your memorialist believes of individuals who have no religious connection with that people, and who violate both the laws of God and man, and to escape the punishment due their crimes, cast the blame upon the Latter-day Saints, that they may go unwhipt of justice.

Your memorialst would represent, that whereever the Latter-day Saints have lived, down until recently, they have exercised the rights of freemen, and performed the duty of citizens. When called upon to bear the burthens of the civil administration of government both State and National, they have freely done so. When driven from their homes by the ruthless hands of violence wandering up and down the earth in destitution and wretchedness they did not even then forget their country and their allegiance due the same. When the United States was engaged in war with a foreign enemy, they voluntcered their services in defence of the common cause, and in common with other citizens enlisted under the banner of the stars and stripes, and bore that flag aloft to glory and to victory! Thus they have served their country under circumstances well calculated to try the fidelity of any American citizen; and now that they have received an honorable discharge, shall it be said that Iowa denies to them the rights of freemen—the rights of citizens—the protection of her laws? Many of those who reside in Pottawatamie County formed a part of the Mormon battalion, having returned to their homes and families there, they are entitled to and will receive from the Government warrants for land, shall they be denied the privilege of making a legal transfer of those warrants, by any act of your body, without traveling some two hundred miles from their homes? Many of those citizens will soon be called to pay the debt of nature, shall they be denied the privilege usually enjoyed by the criminal on the scaffold, of making a will and admitting it to record. They may wish to convey estates, give bills of sale, to marry and to be given in marriage, and foreigners who wish to be naturalized, shall they travel two hundred miles to accomplish these objects? Crimes against the laws of the State may be committed within the county of Pottawatamie, how shall criminals be apprehended, and how puinished? Already it has come to the knowledge of your memorialist that crimes have been committed against the laws of the State, within that county, and the citizens are anxious to bring the guilty to punishment, how shall this be done without judge or jury?

The people of Pottawatamie county desire to enjoy the rights of freemen, the liberty of conscience, the pursuit of happiness; how shall these blessings be enjoyed if by your laws they shall be expatriated?

In the name of the Constitution of our Common country; in the name of the Constitution of the State of Iowa; in the name of our venerated fathers; in the name of the common treasury expended in the purchase of our freedom; in the name of the blood so profusely spilt on many a well contested field of battle, to secure the inherent rights of man, does your memorialist remonstrate and protest against the passage of the Bill now on your table; and in the name of those dearly bought privileges would your memorialist in behalf of himself and the people of the County of Pottawatamie, most respectfully ask, not only your Honorable Body, but also the other departments of your State Government, to throw around, and extend to the people of Pottawatamie county, the protection and privileges of your laws.

(Copy,) JAMES SLOAN.

FOREIGN NEWS.

We have just received a letter from Elder L. N. Scovil, at New Orleans, dated March 6th, in which he says:

"I received a letter yesterday from Br. O. Pratt, dated Liverpool, January 29th. He says that he has now three ships loaded with Saints in the Docks to sail in a day or two, and he has chartered two more to sail on the 21st of February. The names are as follows: Zetland, Ashland, Henry Ware, Buena Vista and Hartley. Br. Orson Spencer is the President of the first company which numbers 357 including infants. Br. John Johnson is the President of the second company—they number 183 souls. The Henry Ware, 230, including infants. Br. Dan Jones is to be the President of the fourth company, to number 300 including infants, (Welsh,) on board of the Buena Vista. The fifth company is to number 230 including infants, partly Welsh and English. The whole number 1290, and if they have a good voyage they will be here by the 6th of April. He does not mention whether this is all that is coming this Spring, but I draw that conclusion from his writing. I shall endeavor to charter a boat if possible, to go direct to the Bluffs."

From 2,500 to 3,000 souls of our own people, will arrive here most likely between now and the middle of May; besides hundreds of other people going to the Gold Mines. Ye flour, meat, and provision men; awake, and get ready to feed this multitude. Your oxen, mules, wagons, &c., will all sell right here—and here they will be all wanted, don't be in a hurry to sell. Let every family, if possible, prepare to take in another family of strangers and more if they can. Remember that it is said, "I was a stranger and ye took me in." Your cattle, horses, mules and cows will every one be needed here, and wagons also. We would advise that none be sold to go below. If it is the case, we shall have to go below and buy again, and give a greater price, perhaps, than we can get.

Election.

DR. CALVIN C. PENDLETON and Mr. JONATHAN BROWNING, we learn were duly elected Justices of the Peace in this precinct on Monday last, and ABRAHAM DAY and JOHN GALLAHER duly elected constables. The choice was good. The men are unexceptionable to all parties as far as we know. We hope they will have no scruples about qualifying and serving the people in the capacities to which they have been called.

An inordinate desire for gain will often draw men away from their Savior and their God, and cause their love and fellowship for the brethren to die within them. The end of these things is wretchedness and woe. Dollars and cents cannot make you happy if you have lost the Spirit of God.

We learn by Mr. Sloan that Dr. WINSOR P. LYON, died at Iowa City, of consumption, about the middle of January last. Exchange papers say so likewise.

MARRIED,

In this town on Sunday the 1st inst., by the Editor, Mr. ALBERT H. BOWEN to Miss LOUISA M. HAMONWAY, both of this place.

When we carried the loaf home to the printer boys, they said, "we are in favor of that girl any how. If this cake is a representation of herself, (of which we have no doubt,) there is no April Fool in the game at all, and always appreciate such favors from the beloved."

DIED,

In this town on the 13th of June last, of consumption, Miss LOLY A., daughter of Moses and Cornelia Clawson, aged 16 years 4 months and 1 day.

Also, in this place of consumption on the 22nd ult. Mr. WALLACE son of Moses and Cornelia Clawson. Aged 19 years, 6 months and 4 days.

Thus has a good and excellent citizen, a worthy and faithful member of the church, been bereft of two members of his family by the withering touch of the icy hand of death. Peace to the memory of the departed, while a hope full of immortality measurably consoles the heart-stricken parents, till again they meet, where the King of terrors has no dominion.

WEDNESDAY, ARRIL 4, 1849.

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, or to Pisga, Garden Grove, or to the Valley of the Mississippi by way of any of the above places, will do us a great favor by calling on us before they leave. If they could let us know a day or two before they leave, they would give us a little time to prepare a mail.

Mr. Merrick and the Stolen Pistols.

A young man calling his name Merrrck, came to this town late last fall from Illinois. He claims that his parents reside in Wisconsin. By some means the report was put in circulation upon his arrival here that he had quite an amount of cash, and was intending, in the Spring to proceed on to the valley. How far his agency contributed to put this report into circulation, the public here must judge. He was represented to be an educated man, and worthy to be patronized by the lovers of learning, as an instructor. He was employed for a time as an assistant in one of our schools. Some misunderstanding or difficulty arose, however, between him and the principal, and Merrick left the school.

It affords us no pleasure to be urged by a sense of duty to say anything detrimental to his character. Yet there are some things which the public should be made acquainted with. Mr. Phineas Kimball, of Nauvoo, Ills., not a Mormon, but a man of honor and strict veracity, arrived here in the latter part of December last, and informed us that he brought out a trunk for one Merrick. He observed that this individual told him that there were three hundred dollars in cash in the trunk, and wished him, (Kimball,) to take good care of it: he says to Kimball, "you may call my name Merrick, but I don't tell every d—d fool what my name is." Soon after Mr. K. arrived here and delivered the trunk to Merrick, the report was in circulation that this trunk had been robbed of the money. What agency Merrick had in causing this report to be made, we do not pretend to say: but if such had been the case, that the trunk had been robbed, Mr. Kimball was here with money and property by which Merrick could have secured himself if he had had just grounds for acting; but from the fact that Merrick took no steps whatever, either to recover his money or to punish Kimball for stealing it, the community came to the conclusion that he left no money in his trunk.

It is most generally the case that when an honest man goes into a place to be a citizen for a time, he will cheerfully and readily give the people a satisfactory account of himself as to where he came from, his business, motive for coming, &c. But Mr. Merrick has studiously avoided giving any account of his business—his motives, &c. A man is not required to do this, but an honest man will seldom if ever refuse to do it.

We are free to confess that we have regarded him from the beginning as a suspicious character,—mystery obscured his business, and his studied silence upon these points has impressed this community with the belief that he either came to this frontier country to avoid the penalty of some crime committed, or to commit some crime.

Our prophecy in relation to the stolen pistols in our last number was in type and struck off a short time only before we learned that Mr. M. was suspected of having stolen them. The reasons why suspicion rested upon him as being guilty of this theft were these. He was said to be up at a very late hour, and his movements were not a little singular as we learn by one or two of the boys who were sharp enough to watch him a little; not to see him steal the pistols, but to do something else. 'We are told that he arose at a very early hour in the morning, entirely contrary to his usual habit, and was observed by Mr. Clark to be coming from towards the stable and yard soon after he got up.

After Messrs. Kinkade & Livingston had got their horses and were about to put on their overcoats, they discovered that the pistols were gone. This mortified Mr. Clark, and he felt wretched enough, as well as all the boarders except Mr. Merrick who walked the room apparently unconcerned and unmoved, and appeared to treat it all with indifference, while the rest were in trouble and felt themselves disgraced by such a petty theft. This is the first thing of the kind that has ever occurred in our little town to our knowledge, with the exception of an axe or two taken perhaps by the Indians.

The Hotel was searched for the pistols during the day, and Mr. M's. trunk likewise, but they were not found. His wardrobe did not bespeak its owner a man of wealth, neither indicate that he had been very lately, having no more than a man could put in his coat pockets. His board bill had run up to some fifty dollars, as we are informed; and he never offered to pay a farthing. He had little else of property than a broken down horse.

We should not be surprized that if some persons so fully believed that he had got the pistols that they took into their heads to feel about his person for them, and might have been a little anxious to secure the twenty-five dollars reward, also. On the night following the theft, Mr. M was assailed in the street, by two or three men, who, he said, began to feel about him rather unceremoniously; upon which he drew a pistol and discharged it at the breast of one of the assailants. But he said it hung fire long enough to be knocked away and the ball passed through the little finger of his opposite hand. The assailants then beat him some and left him. We did not learn from him that they exhibited any weapons at all, and should judge they had no very serious intentions to injure his person. The fact of his striking (which he had a perfect right to do,) we feared might awaken an indignation that would lead to his being farther injured. We did not wish to have him injured in any such way, even if he were as guilty as many supposed. We advised his removal, not in the character of an enemy, but as a friend. He was taken away to Trading Point. Some have been ungenerous enough to attribute this disgraceful act to us, or the cause of it to us. We here say that it is not true. We have ample proof to satisfy any reasonably person, that our prophecy was in print, before our suspicion was directed to Mr. Merrick as the person who stole the pistols. The prophecy was a burst of righteous indignation prompted by an honorable pride for the character of our town. He may be an innocent man, but circumstances have forced us to another conclusion.

On hearing the discharge of a pistol at a late hour in the night, just as we were undressing to go to bed, we stepped to the door and heard an out-cry. We immediately drew on boots, coat and hat, and ran to where we heard the noise—but all was still when we got there, and the parties had left the ground. We went into Mr. Amy's where Merrick had gone, accompanied by Dr. Hoit, Mr. Huntington, Mr. McIntire, Mr. Allen and some others. Merrick was somewhat beaten, and looked as though he had been rather roughly handled. We asked him who it was that had beaten him. He said that they were a set of d—d cowards, he did not know who they were. He said there were three of them, but could not tell who any of them was. Mr. Amy, his wife, son and daughter, were present at the time.

We deeply regret any violent measures, and are sorry that anything of the kind happened among us. But the foregoing, with other circumstances not favorable to the man's character, and too well established in the minds of the whole community—both Mormons and those who are not Mormons, that a prejudice has arisen against him strong enough to admit him no longer in the circles of our society as a good citizen, or an honorable man.

We learn that the people at Trading Point called on Merrick to give an account of himself, but that he refused to do; and they told him that he must then find another place of residence. And he put out in a skiff down the Missouri river. We concluded that we should be much mistaken in the character of the people at the Point if they allowed him to remain long in their society.

INDIAN TERRITORY, March 31, 1849.

INDIAN CUSTOMS.—No. 2.

DEATH.

Mr. EDITOR; In several instances, it has been my sad lot to happen into one of the Omahas' lodges, where some one was about to be, or had just been numbered with the dead.

The scene presented on these occasions is too dreadful to be described. its features are too dark and shocking to be portrayed on paper, so as to be understood by those who have never been brought to experience the gloom that gathers around the soul, when the shocking blindness, delusion, and wickedness of heathenism is unveiled to his view, in contrast with the blessings of christianity.

A little more than a year ago I entered a lodge in which a middle aged man lay as his distressed friends supposed, upon the verge of death; he was a Medicine Chief, performing the last ceremonies of that mysterious art by which the Great Spirit is thought to be made propitious; but which possessed no power to secure the forgiveness of sins, or to lengthen out days forfeited by shedding the blood of his fellow-man. He had been butchered in a shocking manner in a night revel, in which he had been engaged among savages, whose native ferocity had been stimulated by the intoxicating draught. His face, hands, and naked breast were crimsoned with the blood of his fellow man, mingled with his own. A buffalo skin spread upon the ground, formed the wretched couch upon which he lay. All hope of life had fled. The small lodge in which he lay, was filled nearly full to overflowing with men, women, children, and dogs; whose united, but inharmonious voices, mingled their doleful accents, in one dreadful strain of woe and despair.

The dying man was evidently in the full possession of what little reason had fallen to his share; and though in the midst of the confusion, of groaning, crying and howling, and rending of hair—remained calm and unmoved. As a Medicine Chief, he was bound to betray no weakness at the approach of death. He held a rattle in his hand, and had a long wooden whistle laying by his side, which instruments he alternately played upon as his strength permitted. In this state I left the scene, and could hardly realize that what I had seen and heard, was a fiction of the brain, or a dream of the night.

The approach of death, is calculated to awaken fear and dread, in the mind of the poor savage, to which those, who enjoy the light of divine revelation are entire strangers. Revelation points out a way of escape from the fear of death, to which the poor heathen are in continual bondage; and dispels the gloom that surrounds the grave—and makes life and immortality the cherished object of faith and hope—and reveals a place where went, woe, mourning and death, never come. A state of endless rest from toil, sin, sorrow, and pain. How sad the state of those who have no vision that reaches beyond the hour of death—who have no hope of a glorified and happy existence beyond the grave. Such is the dreadful state of the miserable Indians who roam over these beautiful plains—like the wild beasts—slaves to appetite and passion—blind to the exalted enjoyments of intellectual and moral life—ignorant of the true sources of enjoyment here—and the way to secure endless happiness in a life to come. The darkness that veils the blessedness of a future state of happines throws a pall over the enjoyments of the present life.

The Indians usually select the highest eminences for a burying place. The reason assigned for this practice is, that such a situation affords an extensive field of observation, and enables them to guard against the treachery of enemies, to which they might be exposed in a more secluded situation. Indians are usually buried only a few hours after death—this duty falls upon the women.

In some cases, they are buried in a sitting posture, but this practice is not general. They are buried in the same clothing that they wear while living. They have a small quantity of food wrapped up in their robe and buried with them, as a security against hunger while on their way to their unknown abode. In all cases, their sacred relics, or as they call it, "Medicine" is buried with the one to whom it belonged. Great chiefs and warriors, have their implements of warfare, pipes, &c., buried with them.

The Indians have no correct conception of what their condition is to be when death makes a prey of the body—no abiding expectation of good beyond the narrow round of enjoyments which this life affords. But still they have a kind of traditionary belief that the soul will exist in some form or other after the present state of existence comes to an end. It is a prevalent opinion among the aged, and those most familiar with the superstitions concerning another state of existence—that men when they die, are sepetated into distinct tribes, and sent to occupy different spheres of enjoyment, or misery, according to the character by which they have been distinguished in this life. Those who have been distinguished for their wisdom, bravery, and patriotism, will enter upon the highest state of happiness which the Indians' benighted mind has been able to conceive of. They hope to go to a land of abundance—beyond the reach of enemies—to live in the enjoyment of ease and plenty—to eat, drink, smoke and sleep, with none to interrupt, or envy their enjoyment.

Another class who occupied a rank a little below the first, expect to go to a paradise where the buffalo hunt is the great pursuit of life, and source of happiness. Another class of individuals, who had not been known to do any great harm, and had done but little that was useful; were assigned a place midway between the enjoyments and misery of this world, and the happiness of another, where the wise and brave had gone to reap the reward of their virtue and bravery. They remained about the graves, as they had often been heard to whistle around those lonely places. This belief leads to the custom of placing food upon the graves of the dead. They believe the soul like the body, is fond of feasting; and hence this entertainment is occasionally provided for it, after death has disrobed the body of its power to enjoy. Feasting enters into an Indians highest conception of earthly happiness, and is a prime element upon which he depends for happiness in his paradise beyond the grave.

A fourth class, consisted of those who had not lived up to the ordinary standard of heathen virtue, but who descended to mean and vicious indulgences, and wore the brand of disgrace, shame and contempt. This class are doomed to a state of utter loneliness and desolation to become miserable wanderers in a strange land, to have no home, and no friends—but forever to wander about in poverty, wretchedness, and despair.

There are probably many other superstitions in regard to the condition of the dead, but those which I have mentioned, I believe to be the most general, and probably the most rational. How precious the gift that dispells delusions like these; and reveals a world of enjoyment infinitely more exalted than this life affords, and of endless duration. How great the responsibility of those who have always possessed this heavenly gift, which has so greatly distinguished them above these poor savages. Let them beware lest the heathen appear against them in the day of judgment, to tell the brief story, that you had the Bible, but withheld it from me. D. E. R.

Foreign News by the Europa.

We copy the following items from the Telegraphic Dispatches of the St. Louis Republican; the news is up to the 10th of Febuary, from Liverpool, and brought to St. John's by the Steamer Europa, and then Telegraphed westward.

FRANCE.—The breach between the National Assembly and the President was widening.

A real or sham plot has been disclosed to the French ministry, and for a few days Paris appeared like a beleaguered city. The streets were occupied by eighty thousand soldiers. Gen. CHANGARNIER plainly intimated that the first barricade erected in the streets would be the signal for a general slaughter. No alarm was felt, as Marshall BUGEAUD was dispatched from Paris to bring up a strong division of the Army of the Alps, ostensibly to command the peace during the State Trials, but with no less object than that of overawing the Red Republicans of Paris.

The motion to get rid of the proposition of M. Rateau to dissolve the National Assembly, was only defeated by a vote of 416 to 405. Since that vote, greater tranquility has prevailed.

In the National Assembly, on the 20th, the Minister of the Interior announced that he had been directed, by the President of the Republic, to present a bill against the Clubs.

The Assembly had already enacted severe penalties, with a view to repress the excesses and remove the dangers which were alarming society.

The Government had ordered a number of the Clubs to be closed in the Capitol, and the Departments had denounced offenders to the tribunals.

ENGLAND.—The British Parliment has been opened by the Queen in a lengthy speech.

The speech places the fact beyond doubt, that the Government has no idea of stultifying their past Free Trade doctrines, but are resolved steadily to carry out their principles.

Chinese Intelligence.

The following items of intelligence are furnished by the Pekin Gazette and China Mail:

CANTON.—The Governor Seu appears to show great activity in the performance of his duties, but his severity amounts to cruelty, for, by terror he attempts to crush the evil-doers, who, however, notwithstanding the unheard of punishments, increase in daring. He does not give much satisfaction to the people, though he aims at popularity. His influence is much circumscribed, and he cannot boast the tact of the famous old Lieutenant Governor Choo, who, in times of yore, became a tribune of the people.

The Tartar General of Kwang Tung has imposed a duty on all gunpowder carried by merchant junks.

It is rumored H. E. Seu has notified the British Plenipotentiary that it will be impossible for him to open the gates of Canton to foreigners on the 1st of April, as he cannot guarantee the safety of those who may enter the city.

A dinner was given to his Excellency, J. W. Davis, Commissioner for the United States at Canton, on the 1st of November.

Hassam Esmael, a native of India, who sailed for Bombay on the 30th October, in the Braganza, is said to to have swindled the Canton shopkeepers of goods to the value of $80,000.

WASHINGTON, March 5.

Both houses of Congress adjourned sine die at 7 o'clock yesterday morning.

The bill providing for the coinage of gold dollar pieces; the bill establishing a Home Department; the bill establishing a Branch Mint in the city of New York, and the different appropriation bills were severally passed.

The bill establishing a Territorial Government in California was not acted on by the Senate.

U. S. MINT.—The deposits at the four mints during the year amounted in all to $5,539,598.

In gold - -	$3,413,092
In silver - -	2,126,506
The coinage amounted to—
In gold - - -	$3,775,512½
In silver - -	2,040,050
In copper - - -	64,153
Total - -	$5,879,720½

A FORTUNE.—Daniel Webster, says the Boston Post, receives as a fee one-third of the head tax that Massachusetts has to refund to importers of emigrants by the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court against the constitutionality of such tax by a State Department of the Interior.

There is a probability that the present Congress will create a new deparment in the government. The bill for that purpose, which has passed the house, provides for—

1. The creation of a new Executive department, to be called the Department of the Interior; the head of which department shall be called the Secretary of the Interior.

2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall perform all the acts in regard to the office of Commissioner of Patents now exercised by the Secretary of State.

3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall perform all the duties in relation to the General Land Office, now discharged by the Secretary of the Treasury.

4. That the supervisory power now exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury over the accounts of the marshals, clerks and other officers of the Courts of the United States, shall be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior.

5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, now exercised by the Secretary of War, in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian affairs.

6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise all the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by Secretaries of War and Navy, relative to the acts of the Commissioner of Pensions.

7. That the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise all the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by the Secretary of State, in relation to all acts of marshals and others in taking and returning the census of the United States.

8. That the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury over the lead and other mines of the United States, and over the accounts of the agents thereof, shall be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior.

9. That the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by the President of the United States over the Commissioner of Public Buildings, shall be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior.

12. Creates a new officer attached to the Treasury department, to be called the commissioner of customs, who shall perform all the acts, and exercise all the powers now devolved by law on the first comptroller of the treasury, relating to the receipts from customs and the accounts of collectors and other officers of the customs, or connected therewith.

13. That an officer shall be appointed to the Treasury department, by the Secretary to be called the assistant Secretary of the treasury, with a salary of $3,000, who shall examine all letters, contracts and warrants, prepared for the signature of the Secretary, and who shall perform all such other duties as may pe devolved upon him.

15. Provides that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to effect or impair any of the powers conferred, or duties devolved, on the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the transfer, safe-keeping, or disbursement of public monies.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE.—Active measures are beginning to be taken in relation to the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi, which has been so frequently, and, at times, so hopelessly discussed. The Legislature of Illinois, we see, sanctions its abutment in that State, and we already hear of subscriptions to the stock. How true is the saying, that our age is one of progress. He who should have broached the subject of bridging the "Father of Waters," a few years ago, would have been laughed at as a fool. Five years ago the project was discussed almost solely with a view of showing its impracticability; and to-day, the only consideration that is talked of is the probable means of saving a few thousands, more or less, in its erection. The most serious objection which has existed against this project was the doubt entertained relative to the security and permanence which the soil of the Illinois shore might offer to the abutment; but a careful and thorough survey of that shore has removed this doubt intirely, giving the most satisfactory hopes and showing, clearly, the feasibilitly of the work, in every respect.—[St. Louis Reveille.

FLOOD IN THE ILLINOIS.—We learned from the officers of the steamer Prairie Bird, in yesterday afternoon from Peoria, that the Illinois river is still rising rapidly. A telegraphic despatch was received at Peoria on Monday morning, stating that the large three story stone warehouse of Messrs. Beebe & Brewster, of Peru, had fallen down. It stood immediately at the steamboat landing, and the water rose so high as to undermine its foundation and cause it to tumble down. It was a fine building, having been erected last year at a cost of seven or eight thousand dollars. Two warehouses belonging to Mr. Thompson, at Copper Creek Landing, also fell down a few days since, and another is only prevented from following suit by the immense quantity of grain stowed in it, which holds it down. The water is said to be higher at Peru and Peoria by eighteen inches, than it was during the great flood of 1844—the greatest in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant." The citizens of Peoria are seriously alarmed for the safety of their bridge. Already has it been shocked by the huge masses of ice that have rushed against it, floating down from the lake. Business is very much impeded all along the river, and at some points it has been entirely suspended, it being utterly impossible for the merchant of the interior towns to have their produce conveyed from the bluffs to the landing, or their merchandise brought from the warehouses to their stores; and the prospect for a speedy improvement of these disastrous state of things is indeed gloomy in the extreme.—St. Louis Union, March 16th.

TO STOP BLEEDING AT THE NOSE.—Dr. Negrier, a French surgeon, says that the simple elevation of a person's arm will always stop bleeding at the nose. He explains the fact physiologically, and declares it a positive remedy. It is certainly easy of trial.

BALLOON FOR CALIFORNIA.—The New York Mirror contains the subjoined notice of the ærial machine now constructing in New York, to carry passengers to San Francisco:

The inventors of an ærial steam passenger car made an exhibition of a model yesterday at Washington Hall, which certainly worked well, and impressed those who saw it with a belief that one on a large scale might be easily propelled through the air. We learned from the inventors that it is their intention to commence immediately on the construction of a car and balloon capable of carrying two hundred passengers, that number having already been engaged at $50 each, and that they expect to make the voyage hence to San Francisco in three days.

The balloon is to be 1,000 feet long, and the car attached to it, is to be propelled by two propellers made like the wings of a wind mill, which are to be put in motion by two steam engines of six horse power each; the balloon or boat is guided by a steering apparatus similar to a rudder, which is attached to the balloon and controlled by pulleys leading to the car.

As to the practicability of the thing for short distances, there can hardly be a question but as to flying through the air at the rate contemplated by the inventors, and for so great a distance, we fear that there will be found many insurmountable obstacles. However, it is not safe to predict a failure to any new scheme now on account of its novelty and seeming impossibility, and we shall be prepared to see the inventor of the new locomotive take the lead of all the other progressives of this go ahead age.

Mr. Meredith, the new Secretary of the Treasury, gives up a law practice in Philadelphia worth $20,000 a year, to accept an office at Washington worth $6,000 a year.

PORTO RICO.—Accounts from Porto Rico represent that island to be in a dreadful state of alarm, the people being every moment in expectation that the slaves would revolt, and perhaps massacre the free inhabitants.

GOLD IN MAINE.—Gold mining has been commenced in Maine. The Piscataque Observer states that the mines are in Somerset county. They discovered the mines by accident, of course.

QUICK.—A telegraphic dispatch was put on the wires at Washington at six minutes after eight o'clock, and reached Cincinnati at six minutes before eight, coming through literally in "less than no time"—and reaching that city, as an Irishman would say, twelve minutes before it started!

ABSENCE OF MIND.—The latest case of absence of mind reported, is that a man deeply involved in debt, who went on board a vessel bound for California, to take leave of his friends, and forgot to come ashore again.

KANESVILLE MARKET.

KANESVILLE, April 4, 1849.

The market during the past two weeks has been very active, for flour, beef and pork—there being a scarcity of the articles, the holders are unwilling to sell at present prices. Flour we quote at $2 25 @ $2 50 and very firm and very little in market, owing to the very high water and necessary stoppage of our mills. Beef, there has been a plentiful supply for home consumption, but owing to the demand for cattle for the spring emigration there has been no beef brought to market since our last report. Pork—holders are very firm at quoted rates. Corn has experienced somewhat of a decline since the warm weather has set in and is slow at 20cts. per bushel. Potatoes have been languid, and in other articles we have no alteration to report. We quote

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP,

More proof that

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP

Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, O., March 16, 1848.

Sir:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours, O. B. BEEBE.

TROY, Ia., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

R. BATES, P. M.

JEFFERSON co., Ky., Aug. 4, 1848.

This is to certify that I was afflicted last Summer with ague and fever, and had then had it for three years, and during that time I despaired of ever getting well. I was induced to get Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, and by using two bottles I was entirely restored to my usual good health, and have continued so up to this time; I therefore do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and the public, as the most effectual and innocent remedy that has ever came to my knowledge.

POETRY.

A VERNAL LYRIC.

BY GEORGE A. BAILEY.

"I hear thy voice, O Spring!"—W. J. PABODIE.

Old Winter's rage is over now—
His fierceness hath grown tame:
Thy soft blue eye and smiling brow,
Sweet Spring! are hear—in name;
While suited is the air to (blast)
Each newly-budding thing,
And (in the storm-wind howling past)
"I hear thy voice, O Spring!"

Yes, thou art here! And sunny skies,
And sweetly scented flowers
Of every hue, (the memories
Of last year's ones,) are ours.
In sun-lit groves (far, far away)
The birds are heard to sing;
I do not list to such as they—
"I hear thy voice, O Spring!"

The vernant poet singeth how
To thy soft, yielding sod,
He gratefully (great fool he!) did bow,
And kiss where thou hadst trod;
And proves in verse, "as clear as mud,"
That now cries everything—
E'en every baby blade and bud—
"I hear thy voice, O Spring!"

Though what day thaws the night may freeze,
Sneer not, ye unbelieving!
For snow and ice, as well as trees,
(By May,) must be a-leaving.
Cold is the heart that to thy lay
Owns no responsive string;
And short his ears who cannot say
"I hear thy voice, O Spring!"

Procrastination.

"Unhappy he who doth his work adjourn,
And 'till to-morrow will his task delay:
That lazy morrow shall be like to-day.
But is one day of ease too much to borrow?
Yes sure—for yesterday was once to-morrow.
That yesterday is gone, and nothing gained;
And all thy fruitless days will thus be drained.
For thou hast more to-morrows still to ask,
And wilt be ever to begin thy task.
And, like the hindmost charriot wheels, thour't curst
Still to be near, but never reach the first."

MISCELLANY.

THE GOLD DEVIL!

OR

California Now and a Hundred years ago.

BY GEORGE LIPPARD.

PART FIRST.—A Hundred years ago.

One hundred years ago, an adventurer who had penetrated into the heart of Mexico, was sitting in his hacienda, near the City of Montezuma, with the last rays of the setting sun upon his moody brow. His cheek rested on his hand, his eyes were fixed upon the floor, and his lip compressed between his clenched teeth, indicated a mind absorbed in the mazes of a trembling hope, or a troublous memory. The view from the casement was beautiful—the lake and the City of Mexico, bathed in the sunset rays, with the Volcanic Mountain rising in the blue heaven, a lone pyramid of snow and fire, in a canopy of cloudless azure.

But the thoughts of the adventurer were not upon sublime scenery or bewitching landscapes. He was from the land of old Castile; he had wandered to the land of Mexico in search of El Dorado; he was now thirty years of age, with a muscular form, clad in dingy velvet, a bold forehead, darkened by perpetual anxiety, and a pocket—excuse the anti-climax—tenanted by a solitary doubloon. Therefore, Juan Gonzas sat at sunset in his lonely hacienda, near the City of Montezuma, with his cheek on his hand, and his eyes fixed upon the floor.

"Inez!" he sighed, "El Dorado!"

Inez was a dark-eyed, voluptuous lady, whom he had often seen in the city—at the Cathedral, on the Almedia, at her father's palace, smiling from the balcony—and, without an El Dorado, it was impossible to win her hand. That was the meaning of the words coupled with a sigh. There was also the thought of a half-wild peasant girl, who oftentime went singing under a burden of fruits and flowers, along the road to the great city. She was a brown-cheeked, dark-eyed maiden, with the mingled blood of Castile and Mexico throbbing in her veins. Her name, Coyotla, was often times on the lips of the poor adventurer; and once or twice he had spoken to her—she was in sooth a rude wild flower of a beauty, but the lady Inez was beautiful and rich, and noble—alas! I for poor Coyotla!

Juan sat alone for a long time, until the shadow of evening gathered over the city and the lake, while Popocatepetl flamed like a funeral pyre through the night. Suddenly our adventurer became aware of the presence of an intruder, who had entered unobserved, and seated himself at the opposite side of the table. The stranger was remarkable for his height and vigorous form, and also for a singular hood, which relieved his boldly marked features, his eyes were very bright—they sparkled like fire-flies in the gloom. Who the stranger was, or what was the nature of his mission with the poor Castilian, we cannot tell, but it is recorded that this interview lasted until the daylight flashed through the casement, when Juan was discovered with his forehead resting on his hand, and his starting eyes fixed upon the table, while the stranger sat opposite, regarding him with a quiet look and a smile.

"El Dorado," said the Stranger, in a bland voice. "There is the map of it—the Jesuits call it California;"—he pointed to the parchment which was spread upon the table. "It is yours, friend Juan, for a mere song. Come, we must be going."

But Juan pressed his hand against his brow, which was damp with sweat, and fixed his glaring eyes upon the map, murmuring in an impassioned tone—

This room is full of gold. Gold in the river sands, gold in bars, gold in rocks, and all in this region, which you say you will discover to me—for what?" He gazed upward in the face of the Stranger, without changing the position of his head, and awaited his reply in breathless suspense. "I am to sign no parchment, mark ye, bartering away my immortal soul. No devil's work now—you understand?"

The Stranger rested his chin upon his hands, and threw one leg over the arm of the chair.

"Parchments!" he echoed, "a fig for such nonsense. I will discover the gold to you for the sake of doing you a pleasure, I'm an eccentric sort of character, beloved by every body, and respected alike by the Merchant, the Priest and the King. Just come with me—get this gold—marry the Lady Inez, and with your two hundred and thirty billions of millions of bright doubloons, you may become the actual Monarch of a world. Bah! What need of parchments in such a case?"

He smiled pleasantly, while Juan, absorbed in contemplation of the map, felt a soft hand stealing around his neck, under his dark curls and heard a mild voice whisper, in a tone that startled him—

"The man who sacrifices all his hopes, his home, his days and nights for gold, has no need of parchments of written obligations, to bind his soul to the Evil One."

It was Coyotla, the half Indian maiden, who had entered into the room, and listened to the words of the stranger, and shuddering for her lover, who had never spoken love to her, she whispered the warning in his ear.

Juan heard her voice, he felt the thrill of her pulse and her hand encountered his neck, but he did not raise his head, and gaze upon her face. The map of El Dorado riveted his soul.

The light of the rising sun streamed through the casement over Juan's pallid brow, and over the mild, timid face of Coyotla, while the visage of the stranger was in shadow. The empty goblet on the floor glittered like a fire-coal. At this moment Juan raised his head, and shuddered as he caught a gleam of a face which grinned upon him from an apperture in the wall.

"It is the face of Death," he faltered, and reached forth his hand to grasp the hand of Coyotla. "Take your map. Here is El Dorado," and clasped the hand of the poor Mexican girl, while his haggered face was overspread by a momentary smile. "Here, in the light of home, shines the true Dorado."

Keeping his hand beneath his chin, the Stranger whispered gently, as his eyes discovered Juan's face—Gold in the rivers' sands. Gold in bars. Gold in rocks. With this room full of gold, you can sway the commerce of the world."

And then Coyotla and the stranger contended for the possession of Juan, while the skeleton face grinned merrily above, and the map of El Dorado glowed in the sunshine, from the table. Who conquered? Let us see.

"Are we almost there?" asked Juan, as, toward the close of a beautiful day they entered the confines of a gloomy ravine, whose perpendicular rocks were topped with pines—"I am hungry and footsore, and by the Mass! it seems to me, that in these twenty days we've journeyed as many thousand miles. You have not spoken since we left the Jesuit Mission of San Jose this morning. Tell me, are we near it yet—this El Dorado!"

And as he spoke, the stranger drew his cowl over his singularly marked countenance, and murmured—"Very near!" while they passed into the depths of the ravine, where a twi-light gloom slept like a raven, among the rocks and trees.

"By the Mass! This is glorious! Gold in the sands, gold in bars, gold in rocks! The poor Coyotla was a silly thing. Now for Inez and the empire of the world. But first of all a room full of gold. That was your promise, my good friend."

They crossed a brook which sang and sparkled through the twilight. The stranger bent down and scooped a handful of sand from the little runlet—sand which sparkled countless points of light.

"Gold is in the sands," he whispered—and they went deeper into the gloom, following the course of the brook, until they came to a cavern through whose mouth it pattered gaily. The stranger led Juan through the cavern mouth, and presently they stood beneath an immense roof of rocks, illumined by a light, which seemed to flow from the bowels of the earth.

"Gold in bars!" murmured the stranger; and Juan, with his heart palpitating with the very agony of rapture, saw the gold bars, huge, cumbrous and glittering, piled up along the cavern floor, like logs of wood before a farmer's door.

"Two hundred billions of millions of doubloons," cried Juan. "Coyotla was a fool—decidedly."

The stranger led him onward from the cavern into a dark passage which sunk into the bowels of the earth, and which was, in fact, an inclined plane of a mile or more in length.

"Gold in rocks!" said the stranger, as they passed from darkness into light. Juan uttered an incoherent shriek of joy. He stood on the threshold of a cavern in which gold was heaped in masses, like blocks of granite in a quarry. A light emitted from these rocks filled the place with a golden light. The very air breathed of gold.

Juan, in the very extravagance of his joy, attempted to move one of the smallest rocks but his effort was in vain. All the force of his sinews, braced for the work by the very madness of rapture, could not stir the mass one solitary inch.

"Gold, gold, gold!" he said. Certainly, Coyotla was a fool. Millions, billions, trillions and trillions, millions and millions By-the-bye, my good fellow, I'm as hungry as a leporo after a three days' fast. Can we have a nice fowl or two, done to a turn, and a flask of wine or so, would not be difficult to take."

"Eat!" said the stranger, who was seated upon a rock of gold, with his legs arranged crosswise like a Turk; "eat! drink! and as the cowl fell back from his face, he reached forth his hands toward Juan. One hand was filled with golden sand—the other grasped a golden stone, worth perchance some hundreds of thousands of dollars.

"You mock me," faltered Juan, shuddering he knew not why.

"Eat! drink!" said the stranger; and the gold cavern rung with his hollow laughter.

"I will leave this place," cried Juan, turning pale and red again as he spoke, "Friend, I am not yet in your power. You have unmasked yourself too soon. I have not signed my soul away—you have no parchment stamped with my name written in blood!"

"The man who sacrafices hope, and home, and all the labors of life for gold, needs no parchment scroll to bind him to the Gold-Devil!"—and again he smiled, turning his eyeballs to the light, with a look of horrible mockery. There is no going back in the gold-hunt, my dear." Then, to the silent horror of Juan Gonzas, the mouth of the cavern was closed by a huge rock of gold, weighing some twenty tons, and he was alone there with the Gold-Devil, who said, "eat! drink! amid his bursts of merry laughter.

PART SECOND AND LAST.

California Now.

The sequel to this story is found in a letter sent from California, by overland express, and dated November 11th, 1848. It is addressed to a gentleman in this city.

DEAR BOB: Come out here, right off; come I say, and bring Charley and Bill with you. Don't show this letter for the world, for I'm almost crazy with joy, as I write it, and, at the same time, I tremble with fear, lest the United States Government should get hold of our secret, and deprive us of 10000000000000000000000 millions of Gold Eagles. I write this in sympathetic ink, which you will comprehend, when you are enabled to read it, by placing it before the fire. How I tremble lest Polk should get hold of our awful secret. To the brief, let me tell you all about it. Some days back, (on the 7th,) Jake and I left the four thousand fellows who are washing gold from the sands, and struck off on our own hook. We naturally concluded that there must be a fountain for all this gold—a quarry, in fact, where it was stowed away in lumps, and—we have found it! We have discovered the gold cavern! Not a soul knows of it but us two, and we spend our days in watching the mouth of the cavern from a distance, and at night we go into the cavern and strike a light, and measure the gold. Measure it, by Jove! Why it lays in lumps and chunks, and rocks and blocks, as thick as coal in Pottsville. We have made a rude estimate of the chunks hidden here—in its pure state, mind ye, for it has been smelted long ago by volcanic fire—and this is a moderate calculation.

Gold in chunks, about the size of a peck measure—

1,000000000000000000 millions.

In blocks the size of a bushel—

2,500000000000000000000 billions.

One piece, about the size of a Chesnut street omnibus—

4,300000000000000000000 trillions.

And a cluster of seven pieces, varying in size from an omnibus to a small two-storied dwelling in Green street, Philadelphia—

$8,630000000000000000000 septrillions.

Come out—bring a copy of Emerson's Arithmetic, for I declare I can't count the stuff any more. It goes ahead of all figures. And bring a few hundred sausages in your chests, as Jake and I are living on our second dog at present, and are much afraid we'll have to use up the last of the lot for our Sunday dinner.

Yours, most affectionately,

BEACHEM A. N. D. BILKEM.

P. S. I'd almost forgot to mention a singular circumstance. When we first discovered this cavern, we found a human skeleton embedded between two blocks of gold, and on one of these was written in Spanish, or carved, I should say, these words:

"THE GOLD DEVIL."

Uncle Benjamin's Sermon.

Not many hours ago I heard Uncle Benjamin discussing this matter to his son, who was complaining of pressure.

"Rely upon it, Sammy," said the old man, as he leaned on his staff, with his grey locks flowing in the breeze of a May morning; "murmuring pays no bills. I have been an observer any time these fifty years, and I never saw a man helped out of a hole by cursing his horses. Be as quiet as you can, for nothing will grow under a moving barrow, and discontent harrows the mind. Matters are bad, I acknowledge, but no mender is any better for fingering. The more you groan, the poorer you grow.

"Repining at losses is only putting pepper into a sore eye. Crops will fail in all soils, and we may be thankful that we have not a famine. Besides, I always took notice that whenever I felt the rod pretty smartly it was so much as to say. 'Here is something which you have got to learn.' Sammy, don't forget that your schooling is not over yet, though you have a wife and two children."

"Aye," cried Sammy, "you may say that, and a mother-in-law, and two apprentices into the bargain, and I should like to know what a poor man can learn here; when the greatest scholars and lawyers are at logger-heads, and can't for their lives tell what has become of the hard money.

"Softly, Sammy, I am older than you; I have not got these grey hairs and this crooked back without some burdens. I could tell you stories of the days of continental money, when my grandfather used to stuff a sulky-box with bills to pay for a yearling or a wheat fan, and when the Jersey women used thorns for pins, and laid their teapots away in the garret. You wish to know what you can learn? You may learn these seven things

"First: that you have saved too little, and spent too much. I never taught you to be a miser, but I have seen you giving your dollar for a 'notion,' when you might have laid one half aside for charity and one half aside for a rainy day.

"Secondly: that you have gone too much upon credit. I always told you credit was a shadow; there is a substance behind, which casts the shadow; but a small body may cast a greater shadow, and no wise man will follow the shadow any farther than he can see the substance. You may now learn that you have followed, and been decoyed into a bog.

"Thirdly: that you have gone too much haste to become rich. Slow and easy wins the race.

"Fourthly: that no course of life can be depended upon as always prosperous. I am afraid the younger race of working men in America have a notion that nobody would go to ruin on this side of the water. Providence has greatly blessed us, and we have become presumptuous.

"Fifthly: that you have not been thankful enough to God for His benefits in past times.

"Sixthly: that you may be thankful our lot is not worse. We might have famine, or pestilence, or war, or tyranny, or all together.

"And lastly, to end my sermon, you may learn to offer with more understanding, the prayer of your infancy, "Give us this day our daily bread.'"

The old man ceased, and Sammy put on his apron and told Dick to blow away at the forge bellows.

Physical Advantages of the Sabbath.

The Sabbath is God's gracious present to a world, and for wearied minds and bodies it is the grand restorative. The Creator has given us a natural restorative—sleep; and a moral restorative—Sabbath-keeping; and it is ruin to dispense with either. Under the pressure of high excitement, individuals have passed weeks together with little sleep, or none; but when the process is long continued, the over-driven powers rebel, and fever, delirium, and death come on. Nor can the natural amount be systematically curtailed without corresponding mischief. The Sabbath does not arrive like sleep. The day of rest does not steal over us like the hours of slumber. It does not entrance us almost whether we will or not; but, addressing us as intelligent beings, our Creator assures us that we need it, and bids us notice its return, and court its renovation. And if, going in the face of the Creator's kindness, we force ourselves to work all days alike, it is not long till we pay the forfeit. The mental worker, the man of business or the man of letters, finds his ideas becoming turbid and slow, the equipoise of his faculties is upset; he grows moody, fitful, and capricious; and with his mental elasticity broken, should any disaster occur, he subsides into habitual melancholy, or in self destruction, speeds his guilty exit from a gloomy world And the manual worker, the artizan, the engineer—toiling on from day to day, and week to week, the bright intuition of his eye gets blunted, and, forgetful of their cunning, his fingers no longer perform their feats of twinkling agility, nor by a plastic and tuneful touch mould dead matter, or wield mechanic power; but, mingling his life's blood in his daily drudgery, his locks are prematurely gray, his genial humor sours, and slaving it till he has become a morose or reckless man, for any extra effort or any blink of balmy feeling he must stand indebted to opium or alcohol. To an industrious population, so essential is the periodic rest that, when the attempt was made in France to abolish the weekly Sabbath, it was found necessary to issue a decree suspending labor one day in every ten.

Master manufacturers have stated that they could perceive an evident deterioration in quality of the goods produced, as the week drew near a close, just because the tact, alertness and energy of the workers began to experience inevitable exhaustion. When a steamer on the Thames blew up, a few months ago, the firemen and stocker laid the blame on their broken sabbath; It stupified and embittered them, made them blunder at their work, and heedless what havoc those blunders might create. And we have been informed that when the engines of an extensive steam packet company, in the south of England, were getting constantly damaged, the mischief was instantly repaired by giving the men what the bounty of our Creator had given them long before, the rest of each seventh day. And what is so essential to industrial efficiency, is no less indispensable to the laborer's health and longevity.—[North British Review.

GEMS "OF POOR RICHARD."—The N. Y. Evening Post has seen a copy of Dr. Franklin's Almanac of unbroken files for twenty-five years, from which it makes the following selections:

If pride leads the van, beggary brings up the rear.

Keep thy shop, and thy shop will keep thee.

God heals, and the doctor takes the fees.

Mary's mouth cost her nothing, for she never opens it but at others' expense.

The worst wheel of the cart makes the most noise.

Tart words makes no friends; a spoonful of honey will catch more flies than a gallon of vinegar.

Beware of little expenses; a small leak will sink a great ship.

A mob's a monster; heads enough, but no brains.

Nothing humbler than ambition when it is about to climb.

When prosperity was well mounted, she let go the bridle, and soon came tumbling out of the saddle.

A change of fortune hurts a wise man no more than a change in the moon.

A false friend and a shadow attend only while the sun shines.

If you would not be forgotten as soon as you are dead and rotten, either write things worth reading or do something worth writing.

Nothing dries sooner than a tear.

Kings and bears often worry their keepers.

He's a fool that makes his doctor his heir.

Love well, whip well.

Hunger never saw bad bread.

Great talkers, little doers.

The poor have little—beggars none—the rich too much—enough, not one.

Mankind are very odd creatures. One half censure what they practice, and the other half practice what they censure. The rest always say and do as they ought.

Old boys have their playthings as well as young ones; the difference is only in the price.

If man could have half his wishes, he would double his troubles.

Christianity commands us to pass by injuries, policy to let them pass by us.

If you would keep your secret from an enemy tell it not to a friend.

A Yankee down east has invented a machine that will reap thrash and grind, also spin cotton, scrape potatoes, rock the cradle, darn stockings, whittle shingles, whistle Yankee Doodle, play checkers, and puff itself in the newspapers.

A Curiosity.

The following lines were written by a young gentleman to his Lady Love under the eye and direction of his father, having an understanding with her to read every other line. All parties were satisfied.

The great love I have hitherto expressed for you
Is false, and I find that my indifference towards you
Increases every day. The more I see of you the more
You appear in my eyes an object of contempt,
I feel myself every way disposed and determined to Hate you; believe me, I never had an intention to Offer you my hand. Our last conversation has Left a tedious insipidity, which has by no means
Given me the most exalted idea of your character
Your temper would make me extremely unhappy;
And, if we are united, I shall experience nothing but
The hatred of my parents, added to everlasting displeasure in living with you. I have indeed a heart
To bestow, but I do not wish you to imagine it is
At your service, I could not give it to any more
Inconsiderate and capricious than yourself, and less
Capable to do honor, to my choice and my family.
Believe me, I never intended to offer you my hand;
I speak sincerely, and you will do me a favor
To avoid me, I shall excuse your taking the trouble
To answer this. Your letters are always full of Impertinences, and you have not the shadow of Wit or good sense. Adieu! Adieu! Believe me, I am
So averse to you, that it is impossible for me ever to be
Your most affectionate friend and humble servant.

LIFE OF A PRINTER.—The Alton Telegraph says: The following extract from the autobiography of a journeyman printer, is copied from one of our exchanges, is said to be strictly true. If there is no mistake in the age of the individual he must have led a busy life and, for his years, has seen as much variety as most men. He doubtless will be an embassador to some foreign court one of these days.'

'The life of a printer is, to say the least one of variety. I left home at the age of nine, and was apprentice to the printing business at thirteen, and since then I have visited Europe—been in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales and France,—in Canada, Nova Scotia, Labrador, S. America, West Indies, and all the Atlantic States of the Union, from Maine to Louisiana—and have lived in twenty-seven cities and towns of the United States. I have been a sailor in the merchant service, and have sailed in all manner of craft—ship, barque, brig, schooner, sloop and steamer—in the regular army as a private soldier, deserted and got shot in the leg. I have studied two years for the ministry, one year an M. D.—traveled through all the New England States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, as a journeyman printer, generally with little else than a brass rule in my pocket. I have been the publisher of two papers in———, one in Boston, one in Roxbury, Mass,' one in New Hampshire, and one in Maine. At one time had $7,359 in my pocket of my own. I have been married twice, and am only 26 years old! Was a member of Captain (late Major) Ringold's flying artillery, at the encampment in Trenton, N. J., I was a temperance lecturer, and the proprietor of a temperance theatre.'

THE WAY TO TEND A BABY.—A Chippewa Indian has been lecturing in Hartford, where, in a lecture on Tuesday evening, according to the Times, he advised the ladies of Hartford to tie their babies, as soon as they were born, to a board, bind them down tight, and keep them there most of the time, till they were ten months old.—"Put a hoop round the head." he says, "and then, when the board gets knocked over, it won't brake the child's nose." He sums up other advantages as follows: "You see, ladies, (holding up a specimen,) the child's tied down, so it can't scratch its own eyes out, and can't scratch its mother's breast, too; it can't wriggle about and get very tired; it can't bend over, and must grow straight—when the mother goes out after herbs, she can hang it on a tree, and snakes can't bite it; when it cries, the mother can swing it across her back; and rock it so—(swaying his body to and fro.) and carry it great distances in this manner, too; can sit it up side of the wigwam, very handy, and when canoe turnes over, the child swim off on the board, not drown; its back don't break across his mother's arm, because the board supports it: the child can't crawl into the fire and burn up, too—can leave it long time, all safe—so I think this much best way, ladies—much best!"

The ladies gave in their assent by a general laugh.

THE DEVIL AND THE LAWYERS.—Saint Evona, a lawyer of Brittany, went to Rome to entreat the pope to give the lawyers a patron. The pope replied that he knew of no saint, not already disposed of to some other profession. His holiness proposed, however, to Saint Evona that he should go round the Church of San Giovanni di Laterano blindfolded, and after saying a certain number of ava Maria, the first Saint he laid hold o should be his patron. This the good old lawyer undertook, and at the end of his ave, stopped at the alter of St. Michael, when he laid hold, not of the Saint, but unfortunately he Devil under the Saint's feet, crying out, —This is our Saint let him be our patron.

We should commend a handsome woman that will stay at home, an eloquent preacher that will make short sermons, a good writer who will not write too much, and a fool that has just sense enough to hold his tongue.

We should censure a man who marries a girl for her fine dancing, a working man who believes in the sympathies of professional gentlemen, a youth who studies law or medicine while he has the use of his hands, and the people who elect a drunkard or blockhead to office.

We should laugh at the man who expects his position to command that respect which his personal qualities and qualifications do not merit.

A CHARACTER.—Don't you know, or haven't you seen precisely such a person as this, in the whole course of your life? We have:—He is acquainted with everybody, but knows nobody; he is always talking but never says any thing; is perpetually putting some sudden interrogation, and before it is possible for him to understand the answer putting another His brain is a kind of ragshop, receiving and returning nothing but rubbish.

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a super-royal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week. Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will reserve the right and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy, both Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the interior, and will try, by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the "States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall ride forth in His bloody chariot, and dash in pieces the image with Nebuchadnezzar's, that it become like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of Him who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and untarnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two Dollars a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United States, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

BAPTISM OF THE DEAD.

The great designs of God in relation to the salvation of the human family are very little understood by the professedly wise, and intelligent generation in which we live; various and conflicting are the opinions of men concerning the plan of salvation; the requisitions of the Almighty; the necessary preparations for heaven; the state and condition of departed spirits; and the happiness, or misery that is consequent upon the practice of righteousness and iniquity according to their several notions of virtue, and vice. The Mussulman condemns the Heathen, the Jew, and the Christian, and the whole world of mankind that reject his Koran as infidels and consigns the whole of them to perdition. The Jew believes that the whole world that rejects his faith, and are not circumcised, are gentile dogs, and will be damned. The Heathen are equally as tenacious about their principles, and the Christian consigns all to perdition who cannot bow to his creed and submit to his ipse dixit. But while one portion of the human race are judging and condemning the other without mercy, the great parent of the universe looks upon the whole of the human family with a fatherly care, and paternal regard; he views them as his offspring, and without any of those contracted feelings that influence the children of men, causes "his sun to rise on the evil and the good; and sends his rain on the just and the unjust." He holds the reigns of judgment in his hands; he is a wise lawgiver, and will judge all men, (not according to the narrow contracted notions of man, but) "according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or evil." or whether these deeds were done in England, America, Spain, Turkey, or India. He will judge them "not according to what they have not, but according to what they have." Those who have lived without law, will be judged without law, and those who have a law, will be judged by that law. We need not doubt the wisdom and intelligence of the great Jehovah, he will award judgment or mercy to all nations according to their several deserts, their means of obtaining intelligence, the laws by which they are governed, the facilities afforded them of obtaining correct information, and his inscrutable designs in relation to the human family. And when the designs of God shall be made manifest, and the curtain of futurity be withdrawn, we shall all of us eventually have to confess, that the Judge of all the earth has done right.

The situation of the Christian nations after death is a subject that has called forth all the wisdom and talent of the philosopher, and the divine; and it is an opinion which is generally received, that the destiny of man is irretrievably fixed at his death, and that he is made either eternally happy, or eternally miserable; that if a man dies without a knowledge of God he must be eternally damned, without any mitigation of his punishment alleviation of his pain, or the most distant hope of a deliverance while endless ages shall roll along. However orthodox this principle may be, we shall find it at variance with the testimony of holy writ; for our Savior says that all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven men wherewith they shall blaspheme; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. Evidently showing that "there are sins which may be forgiven in the world to come, although the sin of blasphemy cannot be forgiven.

Peter also in speaking concerning our Savior says, that "he went and preached unto spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah." (1 Pet. iii., 19, 20.) Here then we have an account of our Savior preaching to the spirits in prison; to spirits that had been imprisoned from the days of Noah; and what did he preach to them? That they were to stay there? Certainly not; let his own declaration testify: "He hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised"—(Luke iv., 18.) Isaiah has it: "To bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness from the prison house." (Is. xlii., 7.) It is very evident from this that he not only went to preach to them, but to deliver, or bring them out of the prison house. Isaiah in testifying concerning the calamities that will overtake the inhabitants of the earth, says: "The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgressions thereof shall be heavy upon it, and it shall fall and not rise again. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the hosts of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in prison, and after many days shall they be visited." Thus we find that God will deal with all the human family equally; and that as the antedeluvians had their day of visitation, so will those characters referred to by Isaiah, have their time of visitation and deliverance, after having been many days in prison.

The great Jehovah contemplated the whole of the events connected with the earth, pertaining to the plan of salvation, before it rolled into existence, or ever the "morning stars sang together for joy," the past, the present and the future, were, and are with him one eternal now; he knew of the fall of Adam, the iniquities of the antedeluvians, of the depth of iniquity that would be connected with the human family; their weakness and strength, their power and glory, apostacies, their crimes, their righteousness and inquity; he comprehended the fall of man, and their redemption; he knew the plan of salvation, and pointed it out; he was acquainted with the situation of all nations, and with their destiny; he ordered all things according to the council of his own will, he knows the situation of both the living and the dead, and has made ample provision for their redemption, according to their several circumstances, and the laws of the kingdom of God, whether in this world or in the world to come. The idea that some men form of the justice, judgment and mercy of God is too foolish for an intelligent man to think of; for instance, it is common for many of our orthodox preachers to suppose, that if a man is not what they call converted if he dies in that state, he must remain eternally in hell without any hope;

"Infinite years in torment must he spend;"
"And never, never, never, have an end."

And yet this eternal misery is made frequently to rest upon the merest casuality. The breaking of a shoestring, the tearing of a coat of those officiating, or the peculiar location which a person lives, may be the means of his damnation, or the cause of his not being saved. I will suppose a case which is not extraordinary. Two men who have been equally wicked, who have neglected religion, are both taken sick at the same time—one of them has the good fortune to be visited by a praying man, and he gets converted a few minutes before he dies; the other sends for three different praying men, a tailor, a shoemaker, and a tinman. The tinman has a handle to solder on to a can; the tailor has a button-hole to work on some coat that is needed in a hurry; and the shoemaker has a patch to put on somebody's boot. They none of them can go in time—the man dies and goes to hell; the one is exalted to Abraham's bosom, and sits down in the presence of God, and enjoys eternal, uninterrupted happiness; while the other who was equally as good as he, sinks to eternal damnation, irretrievable misery, and hopeless despair; because a man had a boot to mend, the buttonhole of a coat to work, or a handle to solder on a saucepan. The plans of Jehovah are not so unjust; the statements of holy writ not so visionary; nor the plan of salvation for the human family so incompatable with common sense. At such proceedings God would frown with indignation, angels would hide their heads in shame, and every virtuous and intelligent man would recoil. If human laws award to each man his deserts, and punish all delinquents according to their several crimes, surely the Lord will not be more cruel than man, for he is a wise legislator, and his laws are more equitable, his enactments more just, and his decisions more perfect than those of man; and as man judges his fellow man by law, and punishes him according to the penalty of that law; so does the God of heaven judge "according to the deeds done in the body." To say that the heathen would be damned because they did not believe the gospel would be preposterous; and to say that the Jews would all be damned that do not believe in Jesus, would be equally absurd; for "how can they believe on him of whom they have not heard, and how can they hear without a preacher, and how can he preach except he be sent." Consequently neither Jew, nor heathen can be culpable for rejecting the conflicting opinions of sectarianism, nor for rejecting any testimony but that which is sent of God, for as the preacher cannot preach except he be sent, so the hearer cannot believe without he hear a sent preacher; and cannot be condemned for what he has not heard; and being without law will have to be judged without law.

When speaking about the blessings pertaining to the gospel, and the consequences connected with disobedience to its requirements, we are frequently asked the question what has become of our Fathers? will they all be damned for not obeying the gospel, when they never heard it? Certainly not. But they will possess the same privilege that we here enjoy, through the medium of the everlasting priesthood, which not only administers on earth but in heaven, and the wise dispensations of the great Jehovah; hence those characters referred to by Isaiah will be visited by this priesthood, and come out of their prison, upon the same principle as those who were disobedient in the days of Noah, were visited by our Savior, (who possessed the everlasting Melchizedec priesthood) and had the gospel preached to them, by him in heaven; and in order that they might fulfil all the requisitions of God, their living friends were baptized for their dead friends, and thus fulfilled the requirements of God which says: Except a man be born again of water, and of the spirit he can in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven;" they were baptized of course, not for themselves, but for their dead. Crysostum says that the Marchionites practised baptism for the dead, "after a catachumen was dead they hid a living man under the bed of the deceased; then coming to the dead man they asked him whether he would receive baptism; and he making no answer, the other answered for him, and said that he would be baptized in his stead and so they baptised the living for the dead."

The church of course at that time was degenerate, and the particular form might be incorrect, but the thing is sufficiently plain in the scriptures. Hence Paul in speaking of the doctrine, says: "Else what shall they do who are baptised for the dead? If the dead rise not at all, why are they then baptised for the dead?" (1 Cor. xv., 29.)

Hence it was that so great a responsibility rested upon the generation in which our Savior lived, for says he: "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily, I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation." (Matt. xxiii. 35, 36.) Hence as they possessed greater privileges than any other generation, not only pertaining to themselves but to their dead, their sins was greater; as they not only neglected their own salvation but that of their progenitors, and hence their blood was required at their hands. And now as the great purposes of God are hastening to the accomplishment and the things spoken of in the prophets are fulfilling, as the kingdom of God is established on the earth, and the ancient order of things restored, the Lord has manifested to us this duty and privilege, and we are commanded to be baptized for our dead, thus fulfilling the words of Obadiah when speaking of the glory of the Latter-day. "And saviors shall come up upon Mount Zion to judge the remnant of Esau, and the kingdom shall be the Lords." A view of these things reconciles the scriptures of truth, justifies the ways of God to man; places the human family upon an equal footing, and harmonizes with every principle of righteousness, justice and truth. We will conclude with the words of Peter: "For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles." * * * * "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."

The Return of Spring.

BY V. M. BRUCE.

Hail beauteous Spring, thy balmy breezes fill,
The heart of man with gladness, and with love,
To Him who sent the back from tropic's bright
Where thou hast been, to our temp'rate zone
Again. Hast sent the back, to drive Hoar Frost,
With all his chains of cold, and gripes, and bands
Of stupefaction, sealed with horrid glare
Upon all natures' tablature of strength,
And his white pall of death spread out in glee,
O'er a vegetation's facing life. To drive
Him hence, to where his crested piles of wealth
Lay, in the frigid north.

Thy presence, Spring,
Is welcome to our land. The hope thou bar'st
Upon thy wings, is almost life to us;
Thou snatchest man from winters' threatning blow;
Thou biddest ruin flee; while songs of joy
Arise from every minstrel of the wood;
And nature pays the homage due, as, by
The secret seal of vegetating power,
Incorporated in the mother earth,
Made active by the treasures thou dost bring,
It shall be drawn from out her yielding breast.
The sun's warm rays; the freshening showers, and dews
That moisten where they fall, are all thy gift;
Are trophies thou hast won from winter's grasp,
With which to bless the world. To twine a wreath
For "Flora's" graceful brow, and load the back
Of "Ceres" with her fondest wish. In fine,
To robe all nature in her wonted green,
Bedecked with every hue. And with the aid
Of thy twin sister, Summer; fill with fruit,
With ripened fruit, the garners of the rich,
The poor, and all who wisely use the time,
And favor thou dost bring. HAIL BEAUTEOUS SPRING.

The Mormons.

How true it proves that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Persecuted to the death in Missouri, driven for refuge to Illinois, where they built a city and a temple, only to be again devastated, their Prophet slain, and the Latter-day Saints driven with fire and sword to again cross the Mississippi, they struck off to the wild regions of the Rocky Mountains, and in the valley of the Great Salt Lake once more "stuck their stakes," and in peace, for none but savages were near to "molest or make afraid." They are flourishing and multiplying, and the prospect is that the despised and persecuted Mormons will become the nucleus of a populous territory, so populous that by another year they will apply for a Territorial Government. Mormons are not only concentrating at Salt Lake from the United States, but they are leaving the Old World to settle with their brethern in the New. The St. Louis Republican notices the arrival of the steamer Grand Turk from New Orleans with 225 English emigrants, who profess the Mormon faith, and are destined for Salt Lake, and states that between 3 and 400 more are on their way from Liverpool, having sailed about the 1st of October. A Mormon Conventicle.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Passing up Merrimack street the other day, my attention was arrested by a loud earnest voice, apparently engaged in preaching, or "rather holding forth," in the second story of the building opposite. I was in the mood to welcome anything of a novel character, and following the sound, I pssed up a flight of stairs leading to a long, narrow, and somewhat shabby room, dignified by the appellation of classic hall.

Seating myself, I looked about me. There were from fifty to one hundred persons in the audience, in which nearly all classes of this heterogenous community seemed pretty fairly represented, all listening with more or less attention to the speaker.

He was a young man, with a dark, enthusiastic complexion, black eyes and hair, with his collar thrown back and his coat cuffs turned over, revealing a somewhat unique quantity of "fine linen," bending over his coarse board pulpit, and gesticulating with the vehemence of Hamlet's player, "tearing his passion to rags." A band of mourning crape, fluttering with a spasmodic action of his left arm, and an allusion to "our late beloved brother, Joseph Smith," sufficiently indicated the sect of the speaker. He was a Mormon—a saint of the latter days.

His theme was the power of faith. Although evidently unlearned, and innocent enough of dealing in such "abominable matters as a verb or a noun, which no christian ear can endure," to have satisfied Jack Cade himself, there was a straight forward vehemence and intense earnestness in his manner, which at once disarmed my criticism. He spoke of Adam in paradise, as the lord of the lower world—"For," said he, water couldn't freeze him, fire could'nt burn him, cold couldn't freeze him—nothing could harm him, for he had all the elements under his feet. And what, my hearers, was the secret of this power? His faith in God: that was it. Well, the devil wanted this power. He behaved in a mean, ungentlemanly way, and deceived Eve, and lied to her, he did. And so Adam lost his faith. And all this power over the elements that Adam had, the devil got, and has it now. He is the prince of the power of the air, consequently, he is the master of the elements and lord of this world. He has filled it with unbelief and robbed man of his birth-right, and will do so until the hour of the power of darkness is ended, and the mighty angel comes down with the chains in his hand to bind the old serpent and dragon."

Another speaker, a stout, black-browed "son of thunder," gave an interesting account of his experience. He had been one of the apostles of the Mormon Evangel, and had visited Europe. He had but "three cents in his pocket" when he reached England. He went to the high profession of all sects, and they would not receive him; they pronounced him "damned already." He was reduced to great poverty and hunger—alone in a strange land, with none to bid him welcome. He was on the very verge of starvation. "Then," said he, "I knelt down and prayed in earnest faith, "Lord, give me this day my daily bread." O, I tell ye, I prayed with a good appetite; and I rose up and moved to go to a house at hand. I knocked at the door, when the owner came I said to him, "I am minister of the Lord Jesus Christ, from America, I am starving, will you give me some food?" "Why, bless you, yes," said the man, "sit down and eat as much as you please." And I did sit down at his table, blessed be God; but my dear hearers, he was not a professor, he was not a christian, but one of Robert Owen's infidels. The Lord reward him for his kindness."

In listening to these modern prophets, I discovered, as I think, the great secret of their success in making converts. They speak to a common feeling; they minister to a universal want. They contrast strongly the miraculous power of the gospel in the apostolic time with the present state of our nominal christianity. They ask for the signs of divine power: the faith, overcoming all things, which opened the prison doors of the apostles gave power over the elements, which rebuked disease and death itself, and made visible to all the presence of a living God. They ask for any declaration in the Scriptures, that the miraculous power of faith was to be confined to the first professors of christianity. They speak a language of hope and promise to weak, weary hearts, tossed and troubled, who have wandered from sect to sect, seeking in vain for the primal manifestations of the divine power.

In speaking of Mormonism as a delusion I refer more particularly to the apocryphal book of Mormon. That the great majority of the "Latter-Day Saints" are honest and sincere fanatics, I have no reason to doubt. They have made great sacrifices and endured severe and protracted persecution for their faith. The reports circulated against them by their unprincipled enemies in the west, are, in the main, destitute of foundation. I place no dependence upon the charges against them by the ruffian mob of the Mississippi valley, and the reckless slave drivers who, at the point of the bayonet and bowie-knife, expelled them from Missouri, and signalized their Christian crusades against unbelievers by murdering old men, and violating their innocent wives and daughters. It is natural that the wrong-doers should hate those they have so foully wronged.

The Prophet himself the master-spirit of this extraordinary religious movement, is no more. He died by the hand of wicked and barbarous men, a martyr—unwilling, doubtlessly, but still a martyr to his faith. For, after all, Joe Smith could not have been wholly insincere; or, if so at the onset, it is more than probable that his extraordinary success, his wonderful power over the minds of men, caused him to seem a miracle and a marvel to himself; and Mahommend and Napoleon, to consider himself the chosen instrument of the eternal power.

In the "Narative of an eye-witness of the Mormon Massacre," published in a western paper, I was a good deal impressed by the writer's account of the departure of the prophet from the "Holy City," to deliver himself up to the State authorities at Warsaw. It was well understood, that in so doing he was about to subject himself to extreme hazard. The whole country round about was swarming with armed men, eager to embrue their hands in his blood. The city was in a fearful state of alarm and excitement. The great Nauvoo legion, with its two thousand strong of armed fanatics, was drawn up in the principle square. A word from the prophet would have converted that dark silent mass into desperate and unsparing defenders of their leader, and the holy places of their faith. Mounted on his favorite black horse, he rode through the glittering files, and with words of cheer and encouragement, exhorted them to obey the laws of the State, and give their enemies no excuse for prosecution and outrage. "Well," said he, as he left them, "they are good boys if I never see them again." Taking leave of his family and more intimate friends, he turned his horse, and rode up in front of the great temple, as if to take a final look at the proudest trophy of his power. After contemplating it for a while in silence, he put spurs to his horse, in company with his brother, who, it will be recollected, shared his fate in the prison, dashed away towards Warsaw, and the prairie horizon shut down beneath him and the city of saints for the last time.

Once in the world's history we were to have a yankee prophet, and we have had him in Joe Smith. For good or for evil, he has left his track on the great pathway of life; or, to use the words of Horne, "knocked out a window in the wall of the nineteenth century," whence his rude, bold, good-humored face will peep out for generations to come. But the prophet has not trusted his fame merely to the keeping of the spiritual. He has incorporated himself with the enduring stone of the great Nauvoo temple, which, when completed, will be the most splendid architectural monument in the new world. With its huge walls of hewn stone, its thirty gigantic pillars, loftier than those of Baalbec—their massive caps, carved into the likeness of enormous human faces, themselves resting upon crescent moons, with a gigantic profile of a face within the curve—it stands upon the elevation of the most beautiful city site of the west, over-looking the "Father of Waters;" a temple unique and wonderful as the faith of its builder, embodying in its singular and mysterious architecture, the Titan idea of the Pyramids, and the solemn and awe-inspiring thought which speaks from the Gothic piles of the middle ages.—[Howitt's Journal.

GOOD ADVICE.—A recent philosopher has discovered a method to avoid being dunned. "How?" we hear every body asking—"Never run in debt!"

Why the Ocean is Salt.

The saltness of the ocean has usually been regarded as a special provision of nature to guard against certain inconveniences which might otherwise have resulted. The presence of so much saline matter in solution, depresses the freezing point of the water many degrees, thereby diminishing the dangerous facility with which fields of ice are produced in the polar regions. It has been said that the salt is useful in checking evaporation, and also that it aids in preventing the corruption of the water by the accumulation of animal and vegetable remains. Without for a moment questioning the incidental benefits resulting from the circumstances under discussion, and which, in one case at least, are quite obvious, it may be suggested that the saltness of the sea may be considered as more an inevitable result of the present disposition of things, than a special arrangement expressly intended to fulfill a certain object.

The rain that falls upon the earth is due to the condensation of aqueous vapor previously existing in the atmosphere, and which is supplied in a great part by evaporation from the surface of the sea—the area of the latter, compared with that of the land, being very great, necessarily so, perhaps, to furnish this extent of evaporating surface. This water as is well known, is perfectly fresh and pure, the saline constituents of the ocean having no sensible degree of volability at that temperature at which the vapor had been raised. No sooner, however, does it reach the earth than it becomes contaminated with soluble substances which it meets while floating on the surface of the ground or percolating beneath. It is thus that the waters of springs and rivers invariably contain a greater or less amount of alkaline and earthy salts, which all eventually find their way into the sea, and there remain, since there is no channel for their return. The same condition of sea water is but an exageration of that of ordinary lakes, rivers, and springs; the materials are the same, and of necessity so; the ocean being in fact the great repository of soluble substances which during innumerable ages, have been separated by a process of washing from the land. The case of the sea is but a magnified representation of what occurs in every lake into which rivers flow, but from which there is no outlet except by evaporation. Such a lake is invariably a salt lake. It is impossible that it can be otherwise; and it is curious to observe that this condition disappears when an artificial outlet is provided for the waters. It will be remembered that the saltness of the ocean is very far exceeded by that of inland lakes of the kind described. That of Aral, near the Caspian and the Dead Sea in Judea, are remarkable examples.

We copy the following article from the New Orleans Delta, to show the feelings of the South in regard to the spirit of emancipation which is prevalent, and the grounds that the South will assume in the matter:

Emancipation.

In our paper of Monday we referred to the movement now going on in Kentucky to induce the coming convention, under the pretence of emancipating the slaves of that State, to oblige the owners of slaves to sell them or to lose their value. There is no question as to which of the alternatives they would choose. The prospective emancipation of slaves in Kentucky, would, therefore, only have the effect of relieving that State from the obligation of standing by and with the other States of the South, while it would crowd our markets with her slaves. It would make of a State from which we receive a qualified support utterly inimical, while it would increase within our limits the elements of our danger and weakness.

The effect of emancipation in Kentucky, Maryland and Missouri, and perhaps Virginia, would be to throw the slave States into a hopeless minority; to overrun the three or four Southwestern States with a surplus slave population: to array against us all the interests of politicians, and all the fury of fanatics, until a catastrophe would ensue too terrible to portray, too frightful to think of. Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama can bear no large accession to their slave population without rendering slave labor utterly valueless; nor can they bear an accession at all from States where emancipation has taken place, or even been agitated without danger to their internal tranquility. Such an addition to our population must be mostly of turbulent, discontented, and bad subjects, such as no planter would want in his fields and no man could trust in his house. If these States or any of them choose to abolish slavery within their own borders—and we confess that that the signs of the times indicate that they will do it—it is their own concern. We might regret, but we would have no reason to complain of it. But they should not be permitted to do it at our risk and expense. If they are pleased with the name of emancipation, if they covet the honors of modern philanthropy, or even if slavery has become to them a burdensome and unprofitable form of labor, they have the right to all the gratification, fame, or advantage which may result from their formal liberation, but let them take care of their own negroes, and not cast them upon us as a burden to support, a foe to watch and guard against. It is time that the extreme Southern States gave some attention to this subject. It is one which will assume, day by day, greater importance. The plan of gradually driving the slaves South, and substituting the cheaper labor for wages has long been entertained by the shrewdest statesmen of the more northern slave States, and every thing seems favorable at the present moment for carrying the project into effect. Under such circumstances every one must take care of himself. Each State must attend to its own interests, quiet, and security. It must limit or prohibit the importation of slaves. If such a course have no other effect, it will prevent the increase of the kind of property which it is to be feared that we will have to defend with something more potent than argument; but it may have the effect at present desirable of delaying or defeating the farce of emancipation. The citizens of the "border States," will pause in their movement when they find that it will result in emancipation in earnest; they will think long and seriously before they turn loose their slaves to starve or steal, to prow about and prey upon the community. These philanthropic and calculating people will not be half so anxious to place themselves on the side of the dominant power when they must do it at some little cost and much inconvenience. If they will emancipate their slaves let them get rid of them—send them to Liberia, Jamaica, Canada, or scatter them among the negro-loving citizens other States, they will thus diminish in reality what they regard as an evil—they will not merely have crammed that evil into a narrower space, concentrated all its poison, and rejoice in the holy cheat they have imposed upon themselves and others.

At all events, it behooves the people of Louisiana to watch these emancipation movements—to guard against them in time—and to see that the State receives no injury therefrom. There is no subject, at this time, more deserving of attention. Nothing but its absolute importance, and the magnitude of the evils, political and social, to be apprehended from the course which things seem inclined to take, would have induced us to say as much as we have upon the matter. But we hope that what we have said will not be in vain.

COMPLAIN NOT.—Whatever be your condition, inwardly or outwardly, let not a complaint fall from your lips. You may be poor and obliged to work hard day by day; but this world is a place of toil. Millions have toiled before you who are now at rest in the kingdom above. Are you abused? So was the most perfect man the world ever saw. Abuse will not injure a sterling character. Harsh words rebound to the speaker's own hurt. Are you cheated? So is every honest man. If you complain at every mishap, at every slander, at every dog at your heels, you will pass a life of misery. The best course is, to suffer without complaining, and to discharge all your duties faithfully as in the fear of God. The man who has a snarl always on his brow, a scorn on his lip and a mountain on his back---not one of which he cannot muster courage to remove ---is of all men the most miserable.

CONFERENCE.

Our Conference Commenced on Friday the 6th inst. Thursday was a very unpleasant day and rainy: also on Friday forenoon, but the after part of the day was clear and warm, yet very windy. We organized the meeting, and there was much good instruction given. Saturday was a clear, calm and beautiful day, and much business was done. Considering the bad state of the roads, and bridges being swept off by high water, there was a very large congregation—between twenty-five and thirty hundred persons were supposed to be present. At the close of the Conference on Saturday, it appeared very unfavorable, and likely for rain that night and next day. But Father Bulkley, our Town Missionary, and a very good man, said he felt that we should have good weather and a good time. He said the Spirit manifested that to him: and sure enough, contrary to all appearances, we had no rain till Sunday night. Sunday was a fine day—rather cloudy, but all the better for it. Our Congregation would number at least four thousand, as judged by competent men. Several bridges being swept off by high water on Thursday, was the cause of many not attending, and several heavy settlements were but sparingly represented.

The minutes of the proceedings of this body appear in another place. Great harmony prevailed throughout the entire meeting, and it closed with the best of feelings, and good will appeared to reign in almost every breast. To see so large an assembly, apparently in good health and Spirits after so long and tedious a winter, was indeed gratifying beyond measure. Thanks to our CREATOR AND PRESERVER for his goodness unto us.

We return our thanks to Mr. Voorhis, Col. Chambers and others for late papers. All such favors are appreciated in this frontier country.

FIRST BOAT THIS SEASON.—The "Mustang" Capt. Patterson, arrived at Council Point on the 15th inst. She brought some few passengers who are on their way to the gold regions, and a large lot of whisky. This should go to the gold regions too.

It is rumored that Fitz Henry Warren, Esq., of Burlington, Iowa, has been appointed Assistant Postmaster General.

New Goods by the "Mustang" are now arriving at this place in heavy stocks. Our friends can be accommodated here with almost ever variety that any other country market affords, and very cheap too, as a matter of course.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

Cash will be given for a few hundred feet of good seasoned black walnut lumber, if delivered immediately, —clear stuff.

Law! Law!

Last week Messrs. George W. Braffit, D. H. Redfield and Peter Shirts were arrested on a charge of having feloniously taken and driven off 13 head of Government Cattle from the rush bottoms about forty miles above this place. The cattle were placed in the care Mr. Braffit to see to, salt, &c., while on the rushes during the winter by a Mr. Elliott, of Missouri, who, we believe is a sub-agent, or a sub-sub-agent to attend to the cattle. When the Mormons first came here, because of poverty, they drove their cattle on to the rushes to winter, but it was a miserable business. If we had sold one quarter of our stock for corn to winter the balance on, we should have been the gainers.

We hardly thought that "Uncle Sam," had become so reduced as to be obliged, like the poor Mormons, to winter his cattle upon the rushes. Indeed we do not think so; but the avarice of some of his subs, or sub-subs might have induced them to lay a plan to get corn prices for rush feed, and thereby expose all those cattle to starvation and death in this cold winter.

The prisoners were held in custody four or five days, during which time the officer was after Elliott, who swore out the warrant, as a witness in the case. But Elliott could not be found. The men demanded their trial, and complained that they were unlawfully detained in custody—twenty-four hours being the limited time by the Statute. Mr. Shirts, however, sloped. But Braffit and Redfield underwent a most rigid examination. They did not deny taking the cattle, but said that Elliott told them to take cattle enough to secure to them the payment of their money. This, they said they did, and if they had been paid, they would have delivered up the cattle honorably, every hoof of them that had not died.

There were some dark shades in the picture during the examination, and the Magistrate said that they were probably guilty of a wrong—an impropriety—a misdemeanor; but that the prosecution had not produced evidence satisfactory to prove a felony. The prisoners were discharged.

The Bribery Case.

Because we informed our friends last year by letter from Burlington that Col. Warren would tell them when and where to vote, many have come to the conclusion that the Mormon votes were sold, and were to be delivered wherever the purchaser might direct. The facts of the case are these: At the time that letter was written, we had no evidence that our county was made into precincts, attached to any other county. We did not know how, or in what shape our organization might be made; and as we regarded Col. Warren as a high-minded and honorable man, we requested him to communicate with our friends, and let them know where they could legally vote, if they could vote at all: and when the time of the elections would be, as we expected to be absent ourself, and knowing that our people had been in an Indian country so long, shut out from all the common sources of intelligence, that they had lost the track of elections, and would esteem it a favor to be correctly informed. We therefore wrote them as we did, and as A. W. Babbitt, Esq., has labored so faithfully to convict us of bribery and corruption, we here state in sincerity and truth, that this same A. W. Babbitt, Esq., is the only man on earth that ever offered us a bribe; and he did say to us in Burlington in July last, we think, (the exact day and hour we cannot determine,) that if we would go in for the election of Gen. Cass, he would ensure us a press and type, as good as we desired, without taking any further trouble. We replied that we believed Gen. Taylor was the right man, and we intended to go for him press or no press; and we even told him that forty presses would not divert us from our purpose.

We envy not Mr. Babbitt the honor nor the glory that he has won in commencing an unprovoked crusade against us.

"BANEEMY'S ORGAN," alias, Charles B. Thompson's Organ, who by interpretation, is an expelled member from our church. The first number of this little sheet has just been presented to us by the hand of a friend. We have only time to relate an anecdote concerning its author, or Editor, (as it is to be "published from time to time.")

Once on a time it happened to be our lot to journey from Buffalo to Albany on the cars. To pass the time as profitably as consistent, we freely indulged in conversation with our fellow passengers upon the subject of our faith. All parties appeared quite interested. At length a merchant from Batavia wished to speak, and we all gave him audience.

"He said that not long ago, near his town a Mormon Elder was preaching with much success—many were converted, &c., to his faith, and among the converts was a newly married couple, who freely offered him a home. Not long after this, the conscientious husband had occasion to leave home on business for about two weeks. He left the Mormon Elder as charge d'affairs at his domestic court, and departed. He had not been long gone before this Mormon Elder had a vision that the husband was dead, and that she was to become his wife. This rather shocked the nerves of the devoted lady and almost threw her into a spasm. To reject and disobey the revelation or vision, she did not like to; and to marry again so soon after the death of her husband would expose her to censure, &c. She finally gathered up strength enough to tell him that she would wait awhile before the consumation of his proposal. At the time appointed, the husband came home safe and sound. This broke the charm—the lady's eyes were opened. She denied her faith, and told it to her husband and he denied it also, and the minister was ordered to seek new lodgings. Now, what do you think of such men and such religion? Don't you feel proud and bold with such pure specimens before you?" This was a poser we assure you. However, we thought we would take it coolly, and make the best of the story, true or false.

We replied that we were very sorry for any such occurrence, yet after giving him to understand that one mans' sins nor fifty mens' sins could disprove the truth of any religion, and that we could not be answerable for any other man's wrongs; we acknowledged that we had some elders that were so bad that we could do nothing at all with them at home, and we sent them off to get rid of them; and when we send them away, they go under this prayer and blessing, that a merciful Providence may keep them away from all good people, and conduct them only to such places as where the people deserve no better. This man probably went out under these circumstances, and a Providential hand led him to your neighborhood and there left him. Our good merchant had occasion to go into another car amid convulsive roars of laughter. We have since learned that "Baneemy," alias Charles B. Thompson is the subject of that tale. Bishop Calkins' claim to that name has been jumped by a most potent rival.

On account of the press of other matter we were unable to publish the entire Minutes of the Conference in this number. They shall appear in our next.

Many thanks to Hon. Truman Smith for public documents, maps, &c., from Washington.

Bring on your bacon, pork, flour, &c., to supply the wants of the hungry gold diggers, that will arrive here shortly.

It has been cold or rainy for the last two weeks, which has prevented farmers to a great extent from getting their ground ready for planting. We hope the "clerk of the weather" will favor us with some better prospects soon.

We learn that between 600 and 1000 wagons are on their way here from Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, and destined for the Salt Lake and the gold regions.

The greatest specimen of a fool and knave that we have seen in this country, was a raw Dutchman from Fort Leavenworth. He was a doctor—a lawyer—a mormon—a gold digger—a speculator in claims. He came from Pisga, from Adams county, Illinois, and from tophet for ought we know. He wanted to defend Braffit and Redfield as an attorney. We think that he was engaged in assisting to hunt up the Government cattle. He would lie when the truth would have answered his purpose much better. He was an itinerant magistrate—issued warrants for the arrest of men, and considered himself Circuit Judge, furnishing us with what the Legislature of our State has denied us. If he had come like an honest man, he could have had all the aid that would have been necessary. He called his name Hardman or Hartman. Er ist ein Spitsbube.

The Missouri river is falling slowly at this point, but there is a great abundance of water even for the largest sized boats.

THE MORMONS.—A late London Globe says that this remarkable people are increasing in numbers, in England. There was a large number of them in the neighboring districts who were preparing to emigrate and colonize in California. Four or five vessels were chartered for their accommodation, intending to leave this spring.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

First Day.

Pursuant to the Semi-Annual adjournment of October, 1848, the Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, on the 6th of April, A. D., 1849, convened at the Stand, prepared for that purpose in the Hollow, about 60 rods northwest of the Tabernacle, at 2 o'clock, P. M. The morning having been so rainy, that they could not assemble.

Present of the Twelve, Orson Hyde, George A. Smith and Ezra T. Benson.

President O. Hyde addressed the assembly relative to the prosperous condition of the Church, and our duties to our Heavenly Father, the manifestations of his kind providences; the present aspect of the weather; the severity of the past winter, and the local affairs of the Kingdom of God.

The Conference then organized—President George A. Smith, moving, that Pres't. O. Hyde act as President of said Conference. (Carried.)

Pres't. O. Hyde motioned, that E. M. Greene and James Sloan be clerks of said Conference. (Carried.)

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith moved that Robert Campbell be Reporter, to report speeches, according to the best of his ability. (Carried.)

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith moved that James Craigan and Philemon Merrill act as Marshall's during this Conference, in seeing that the congregation is properly seated, horses and wagons kept off from the ground; all things kept quiet, and that they call to their aid as many good men as shall be necessary. (Carried.)

Pres't. O. Hyde, said there were some items of business to be brought up before the Conference; but in consequence of the late hour and the wind should not bring them up this afternoon. He would leave it for Brs. Smith and Benson to touch upon the items, that the people may have them to reflect upon; said he wanted some good sermons preached to warm up the hearts of the brethren. As the cold winter is now past, and the sun begins to climb the northern latitude, to warm the earth with his benign rays; so may our hearts be warmed with the Spirit of God. Spoke relative to prayer: said, it was the ancient order of things for the Saints to kneel before the Lord, to pour forth their fervent desires unto him; but we have been through so much, and passed through so many trials, and placed in so many different and difficult circumstances, that it has become very common for us to pray standing up. But let us kneel. He then knelt with the assembly and poured forth a fervent prayer; imploring the divine spirit to conduct and guide the affairs of the Conference; to bless the Saints in the Salt Lake Valley and those scattered abroad.

The Brethren sung, "Come all ye sons of Zion."

Pres't. E. T. Benson moved, that A. Burnham be requested to act as Chorister during the Conference. (Carried.)

Prest. O. Hyde proposed that seats be reserved in front of the stand for the singers, and that all who are singers, no matter whether they understand the rules of singing or not, come forward to those seats and mingle their voices in harmonious songs of praise to God our Heavenly Father. He further said, there had been complaints brought to them (referring to Presidents G. A. Smith, E. T. Benson and himself,) about the dam that had been erected across the Musquitoe Creek, by Mr. Meeks. Said, the Church has nothing to do with it, but the law was open on this as well as other matters, and there was plenty of jurisdiction in the county. He would recommend that the people living down there, who are incommoded, meet, and with Mr. Meeks agree on some three or five good men, disinterested; who shall examine the affair, and then say what is right; and let both parties agree to abide their decision, and then do it. I do not like for men to lose their labor, neither do I like for settlements to be exposed to sickness and disease by stagnant waters.

Prest. Geo. A. Smith, said, notwithstanding it was windy, he thought best to lay before the Brethren some items of business for their consideration. Spoke on church policy; thought it best for all to work for each others general good; recommended that the Brethren keep up their organized meetings of the High Priests' Quorum; and also of the Seventies; and that one or more officers from each branch attend said meetings, so that a continual semi-monthly report of intelligence may be had with each branch. Spoke concerning administering to the poor; locations of the Saints coming in the present expected emmigration. The large farmers and those who are able, leaving with their teams, and leaving the poor without teams He wished to organize a body of Elders to travel and preach through the county, so that each branch may have preaching every Sabbath.

Prest. E. T. Benson spoke on the drift of emmigration. He went in for the salt instead of the gold.

Prest. O. Hyde said, we were always right and always safe, when we go in the channel of the counsel of this church.

Prest. G. A. Smith spoke relative to the gold mines, &c. Also requested the brethren to invite in those who are from a distance, and not prepared to take care of themselves.

The Brethren sung "Come let us anew," &c., and adjourned until 10 o'clock, A. M. tomorrow.

Second Day.

SATURDAY, April 7th, 1849.

Pursuant to yesterday's adjournment, the Conference convened at the stand, at the appointed hour. Present, Presidents O. Hyde, Geo. A. Smith, and E. T. Benson. The High Council seated in order, in front of the stand.

The Choir comfortably seated, and the Marshalls performing promptly their duty. The Band also was present. The weather was beautiful.

The Choir sung, "Come, come, ye Saints,' &c.—with music.

Prayer by Prest. O. Hyde, and the Choir again sung, "Let Zion in her beauty rise," &c.

Pres't. O. Hyde addressed the Conference, calling the minds of the people to a rememberance of their duties to the Divine Ruler, with thanksgiving for life and health. I rejoice to see so many countenances sparkling with health; and if I may judge from their expressive smiles, a good spirit inhabits each bosom. Spoke relative to riches; the work of removing the Saints to the Valley; the arrival of emmigrants. If the rich all go away, we who stay, will be on the Bishop's hands. (Geo. A. Smith said the Bishop is going.) then we shall be left free. The wages offered for hands to go in the Government Trains, will be inducements that will take away the nerve and strength of our settlements. Is this good policy? Some will go to California or Oregon, on an 18 months' trip, probably at $40 per month which will be $720,; and when they return having paid their expenses and the debts that their families have contracted during their absence, it will swallow up their wages, and they will be no better off than those who remained at home with their families, and will not have half so many chickens, pigs, calves, &c. Is it wisdom, when we are not demanded, when our country is not invaded, for us to leave? Is it wisdom on another hand, for the strength of our people to leave! I tell you, if you go in this way, I will go too. I am willing to play my part, but I want some of the strength and nerve of the people to be yoked with me.

After much counsel on this matter, we have come to the conclusion, that it is best for us that every man, that don't go to the Valley stay at home, and raise grain to feed the hungry. We want every man that is a farmer, who intends going to the Valley to put in a good crop, and if you cannot sell it, leave it with the proper authorities for the benefit of the poor. We are placed here to do good to each other. We can do no good to God, but we can do good to his Image here on the earth. I had rather trust the chance of the salvation of that man that remembers the poor, than the man that has his £20,000 sterling a year for preaching. Do not let the California gold or government wages entice you away. Related Br. H. C. Kimball's dream of the bear with golden claws and golden teeth, which may be explained in the high wages of Government, and the gold of California. We will not say, you shall not go to California or in the Government service; but we, as your humble servants, recommend that you do not go. My exhortation is more particularly intended for those who purpose going to California and Oregon. If a man can get in a good crop, and leave his family comfortable, have his pigs, &c., growing, and go for a few months, we have no objections.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith, moved, that A. P. Rockwood, Lyman Stoddard and William Snow be a Committee to receive reports of Branches from their Presiding officers. (Carried.) Reports to be made by to-morrow noon.

Pres't. O. Hyde nominated, Hiram Clark, to baptize such as wish to be baptized for the remission of sins during the Conference.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith, moved, that Joseph Young, George Coulson, H. W. Miller and Joseph S. Clarke, be a Committee to ordain during this Conference.

Pres't. O. Hyde said, in relation to ordinations. Don't ordain them for their own accommodation, but ordain such as sustain just and equitable characters, and ordain them for the strengthening and building up of the kingdom of God.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith, moved, that some Elders be appointed to travel and preach through the county. (Carried.)

Pres't. O. Hyde said, we wanted men that would devote their time to it, and moved that Joseph Young, Lyman Stoddard, J. M. Benson, Hiram Clark, H. W. Miller, and James Snow be said Traveling Elders. (Carried.)

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith, moved, that those six men, be a Committee to devise the plan of their appointments, and carry out their measures; calling to their aid such of the High Priests, Seventies and Elders, as shall be necessary. (Carried.)

The Quorum of the High Priests will meet at this place the first Sabbath, and the Seventies the third Sabbath of each month.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith, spoke relative to the business of the Conference, and the plans to carry out our measures to sustain and carry on the work of the Kingdom of God; urged the necessity of the Brethren that go to the mountains to assist in getting in spring crops, and if they cannot sell them leave them for the poor. This is the best place for Mormons to make a fit-out. From the experience of the past we find it is best that each man make all preparations as though he was going to stay.

Moved, that it was the mind and council of this Conference, that every man that intends going to the Valley, do something in the way of labor, to leave for the benefit of the poor who shall stay behind him. (Carried.)

President E. T. Benson said, he rose to bear testimony to what had been said, and to the correctness of the business that had been done. We talk about moving to the Valley, about our labor, our stock, calves, &c., because it is our religion. We are called to pass through trials and tribulation to make us perfect. Jesus passed through all these to make him perfect, yet he was without sin. I can bear affliction when I can have the sympathies and confidence of this people. We have many things to present to this Conference. Every man that has named the name of Christ wants salvation. Every man and woman must learn their duty, and not be slothful servants; spoke on anticipation and the millennium. If you want an exaltation press forward, be diligent and follow counsel. Ye Elders of Israel, what is your calling here? To hoe potatoes. But anticipate when you get to the Valley. What then? Why, you will be sent to the nations of the earth. Do you think of it? I think of it; I pray about it, and I want you to pray about it too. Before I get through I shall touch the hearts of the rich. We have some Church property to carry to the Valley, and we are going to roll it off from our shoulders and you must bear it. A year ago last fall and winter, it is known that numbers of Elders were sent to the East to collect means to help off the Presidency last Spring to the Valley. Br. Erastus Snow was traveling in New York, and I was in Pennsylvania, and when Br. Snow had been laboring in a certain Branch, and the Brethren were ready to respond to the call, a certain Elder and a good man too, gets up, and said to the Brethren, you need not respond to that call; I have been to Nauvoo, and among the Saints, and I know that when any of the authorities want anything the Brethren immediately hand it out to them. Now I mean that Elder shall eat his words. He is here in the congregation.—I have seen him to-day; now let him come forward, and give some cattle, and help to roll off this property. If he don't want his name exposed, he may come privately—Nicodemus like. I believe all things will work right. And now Brethren I want you to get the good spirit. When a man has been legally baptized into this Church, he becomes a legal heir to the Holy Ghost, and need not complain of being lonesome, for he can commune with the Comforter when he is about his work. Faith is the gift of God, and there is but one principle on which he will give it. Some will say, if we carry the church property will you pay us for it? I will tell you; the man that helps us in sending the church property shall have our blessing. We want to strengthen the hands of the Brethren in the mountains; they are raising crops, and let us do our part.

Pres't. O. Hyde moved to adjourn one hour and one-fourth, and meet at the same place.

Dismission by Prest't. Geo. A. Smith.

SATURDAY, 2 o'clock, P. M.

Conference convened pursuant to adjournment; the weather was fine.

The assembly was called to order, and E. M. Greene read H. C. Kimball's letter of recommendation to Byram Bybee, John Hopper, George Clawson, W. C. Matthews, James Steel, Franklin Edmunds, Henry Oviatt, Peter Hanson, George Duncan, Joel Terry, Jason Hawes and Orson Whitney; certifying that they were all members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in good standing; and that they had been faithful in the discharge of their duties as teamsters with him. Recommending them to the favorable consideration of the Saints and church authorities. Praying for the blessing of God our Heavenly Father to rest upon them. Written and dated at the 5th crossing of the Sweet-water, and signed (H. C. Kimball.)

Prayer by Pres't. Geo. A. Smith.

Pres't. O. Hyde said, the buisness of the afternoon would be to devise means to send the public property to the Valley. Recommended that the Brethren make good strong fences, so as not to be troubled with unruly cattle and hogs. Make good fences, if you do not cultivate so much ground, and if you have not so much corn and potatoes, you will have more peace and more of the Holy Ghost. Recommended the establishing of good schools and keeping them up in every settlement in the county.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith spoke on politics—said laws were enacted by all governments to secure peace, protect the innocent, and punish the lawless and disobedient. The organizing hand of civil law has reached us. This county was last season legally organized to all intents and purposes. It is not to speak of the wrongs we have suffered, but to investigate the principle of our being organized. Some have much feeling on this subject. They say if we had not been organizd we should have had no taxes to pay; this is a mistake. There is a statute law, attaching this, and all un-organized portions of country, in the State of Iowa, to the respective counties, east, for revenue, election and judicial purposes. Our taxes then would have been paid to officers from that quarter Instead of one assessor of our own appointment, we should have four or five to pay from the other counties; also we should have officers with processes to haul away our best men for every frivolous scrape that any apostate might set up. I was a strong Democrat before the party got up the bill in the Legislature to annul or break our organization, and now much more so. I mean, if the Lord and my good Brethren will help me to go to a place the farthest from these good christains that I can find, where every man can have a fair chance in the world. The power of law throughout the States, which was designed for the well being and justice of all men, has been used on us, only to hold our prophets and good men while mobs have shot them. Let us live as we ever have, good and upright citizens. It was to save us from the consequences, foreseen by the Presidency, that they counselled our organization.

Pres't. E. T. Benson, corroborated Pres't. Smith's statements, and moved that we sustain the organization. (Carried.)

The band played, "Hail Columbia."

Pres't. O. Hyde said, he wanted to see if the united faith of this Conference would go with him in offering a prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, that every person that is in this county, or that may come into it, and shall steal any thing, it may so turn in the Providence of God, that he, or she, shall be exposed and punished; and if you are with me in this, let me know it by a show of hands, and there was a full expression in the affirmative. Well now, to get the carding machine and other property to the Valley. There is about five tons; it will take two wagons and five or six yoke of cattle to carry the carding machine and printing press, which we want to go with brother Egan who starts about the 15th of this month. Now we want the man that has money, oxen or wagons that can go, to come forward and let us know his name.

Isaac Matthews, gave one pair of oxen; Isaac Houston, one wagon and Alexander S. Stanley, one wagon.

Pres't. E. T. Benson spoke on the same subject.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith spoke relative to strays, &c.' advised that they be published in the Guardian; the burning of prairies and fences; the western mail; letters to be sent with brother Egan to be lodged with brother Robert Campbell.

Pres't. E. T. Benson wanted some more oxen, and moved to take up a collection to assist in carrying the church property to the Valley. (Carried.)

The band played "Soldiers' Joy" and "Century Hornpipe."

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith spoke on tithing. Said, the bishops had been instructed to settle with every man; to charge every man with his tithing and credit him with what he pays, so the books will show fairly every balance. Said when we go to the Valley, I doubt not but many men will pay the tenth of what they possess or gain as tithing; and then give, as a free-will-offering, four-tenths more to build a Temple. I am agoing to prophecy once more, the God of Heaven will deal with us just as we deal with his poor Saints. "Dean Swift on Charity."

Pres't. E. T. Benson reported $18 75 taken in the collection. He then called for some flour for the teamsters and other provisions. Samuel G. Clark gave 50 pounds flour, George Garnef 100 pounds of flour and 1 ham, Charles Bird 100 pounds and 1 ham, Jerome M. Benson 100 pounds flour; Philip Garner 50 pounds flour; Alfred B. Benson 50 pounds flour, 1 ham and 1 bushel of beans; Thomas Butterfield 1 ham and 1 bushel beans, Benjamin K. Bullock 1 ham, Dolly Bullock half bushel of beans, Sam'l. B. Merrill 1 shoulder, Solon Foster 40 pounds flour.

Pres't. E. T. Benson prayed for the blessing of Heaven to rest upon those who thus helped the cause of Zion.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith prayed for the same.

Pres't. Orson Hyde prayed for the same, and returned thanks to the patrons of the GUARDIAN.

Band played, "Russian March."

Pres't. Orson Hyde, moved that a committee be appointed to counsel and assist the emigrants in selecting locations. (Carried.)

A. P. Rockwood, George Coulson, Harlow Redfield and Charles Bird were chosen said committee.

Pres't. O. Hyde moved, that the six traveling Elders act as counsellors to the above committee. (Carried.) Also moved that these Traveling Elders have jurisdiction as bishops to settle all ordinary difficulties among the Brethren. (Carried.) Said, that the question had been asked, if we would cut off from the church, those who should go to the gold "diggins" without counsel? I say, no. We will not cut them off, there is no law transgressed thereby, for which we should cut them off; but they may stand a chance to get their heads cut off at the mines.

Band played, "Auld Lang Syne."

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock, tomorrow. Dismissed by E. T. Benson.

Answer to the Enigma in our last—FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

MARRIED,

At Pleasant Valley by Ezra T. Benson, Mr. ISAAC CARPENTER to Miss ADELINE PERKINS, both of Pleasant Valley.

DIED,

In this town, on Monday the 16th inst., at 11 o'clock, A. M., at the residence of Mr. John Needham, Miss HANNAH, daughter of ROBERT and ANN BOOTHE, recently from St. Louis. Aged 18 years.

The deceased was a member of the Church and was firm in the faith to the last. She has left behind a character unspotted; a name on which her kindred and friends will ever dwell with delight. She has several brothers and sisters; but at the time of her death they were all absent, except one sister: nevertheless many warm hearted and sympathetic friends crowded round her sick-bed, and every kindness which friendship and affection could bestow, was brought to her aid and comfort. Her sickness was but short—so short that it scarcely seems a reality, and we involuntarily ask ourselves: is it indeed so? Has she passed away from us, no more, on earth, to be seen or heard in the friendly and social circles of society? Yes, sister Hannah, you have left this vale of tears. You have gone from the evil to come, to associate with beings of a purer and higher order. Peace to your ashes. If we are faithful to the end, as you were faithful, we shall soon meet with you to mingle in the beattitude of Heaven. L.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, ARRIL 18, 1849.

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, or to Pisga, Garden Grove, or to the Valley of the Mississippi by way of any of the above places, will do us a great favor by calling on us before they leave. If they could let us know a day or two before they leave, they would give us a little time to prepare a mail.

We are glad to see the liberal course pursued by the Commissioners of our county in the commencement of their official duties in relation to the collection of taxes while the legality of our county organization has been suspended upon a doubt in the minds of many. We believe that things are now settled, and all parties are satisfied that our organization is legal, what we have of it.

The Washington Union publishes the official copy of the ratified Postal Treaty between the United States and Great Britain. Ratifications were exchange at London on the 25th of January, and the treaty is now a law. The rate of a single letter from New York to London will, in future, be 24 cents, made up as follows:

United States and inland postage - -	5 cents.
Sea postage - - - - - - - - -	16 "
British inland postage - - - - -	3 "
Total, - - - - - - - - -	24 cents.

Newspapers 2½ cents each, in advance.

A great reform has at last been completed, and we hope to see it followed by another equally thorough in our own internal department.

British Philanthropy Appreciated.—The Kingston Morning Journal of the 18th ult., states that information had been received from Sierra Leone of the liberation of 1100 Africans, but they positively refused to come to Jamaica.

Col. Benton and California.—The Philadelphia News, of the 20th, says; "It is stated that Col. Benton has sent to California, by the last steamship, another of his remarkable letters, addressed to the inhabitants of that territory. The first rescript to the Californians was taken out last fall, by Col. Fremont, and advised them to set up a provisional government without any provision as to slavery. The document was probably published in San Francisco, about the 1st of February last. It is said he now advises the people of California to insert a provision in this temporary system, for the eternal exclusion of slavery from their soil, and that he advocates or rather commands it with all his characteristic energy and power."

Canada—Triumph of the Ministry.—The Ministry (Liberals) have carried the motion, in the Canada Legislature, to go into committee on an indemnity to be paid for rebellion losses, by a vote of 59 to 20. The debate on the question lasted from three in the afternoon to 11 o'clock the next morning, twenty hours. The Montreal Gazette announces in connexion with this result, the arrival of the "rebel, Wm. Lyon Mackenzie," in Montreal, and informs the Governor and his advisers where he may be found.

Soldier's Families.—Congress appears to have been willing to do something for those whose protectors lost their lives in the service of the country. This is nothing more than right, but it is not yet doing justice. Many families were left entirely destitute by the death of husbands and fathers. Half pay for five years is a bare pittance, but trifle as it is, it is better than nothing. The following act of Congress will be interesting to many of our readers:

An Act granting five years' half pay to certain widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, both regulars and volunteers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the second section of the act entitled "An act amending the act entitled 'An act granting half pay to widows or orphans, where their husbands and fathers have died of wounds received in the military service of the United States, in cases of deceased officers and soldiers of the militia and volunteers,'" approved July 21st, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, shall be so construed as to embrace all widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, whether of the regular army or of volunteers, who have received an honorable discharge, or who remained to the date of their death in the military service of the United States, and who have died since their return to their usual place of residence, of wounds received or from diseases contracted while in line of duty, subject to such rules, regulations, and restrictions as the Secretary of War, by the third section of said act, is authorized to impose.

Approved February 22, 1849.

Col. Fremont.—We are pained to learn the sad fate of so many young and noble men as those that went with Col. Fremont last fall. They started too late in the season to get over the mountains—as we supposed at the time of their departure. We are informed from a previous account that he had lost 130 mules in one night, and the party were left on foot, and they deemed it prudence to remain where they were. The Col. dispatched three men to seek some settlement, and after twenty days' absence and not returning the Col started for Taos, in company with one or two men, a distance of some 350 miles, which he made in nine days. On his arrival, Maj. Beall, issued an order for thirty days provisions for the detained party, and mules to carry them. We take the following account from the Independence Expositor of the 24th ult:

Col. Fremont.—We mentioned in our last, the unfortunate circumstances attending the expedition of Col. Fremont, but owing to a want of time, we were unable to have any conversation with Mr. Jones before going to press. Mr. Jones, however, brings additional information of a very painful affair.

It seems that when Col. Fremont returned from Taos, with the escort so kindly furnished by Maj. Beall, to the place where he had left his suffering companions, that he found them all dead! Not a living soul to tell the sufferings they had borne before their spirits took their final leave of all earthly affairs. It is natural to suppose what were the feelings of Col. Fremont and his party, at this sad—this trying spectacle;—the number that died is supposed to be about thirty-eight. Col. Fremont is himself very severely frosted and scarcely able to get about. In a few days more, we hope to be able to state more particularly and in detail, the circumstances and fact connected with this affair, which must every where excite deep and absorbing interest.

Flood and Loss of Life in the Des Moines.

The Keokuk papers bring us the intelligence that at the breaking up of the ice in the Des Moines during the previous week, a heavy gorge was formed between Big and Little Yellow banks. This caused the water to back up a great distance, overflowing the banks and devastating and inundating farms and houses in its track. This happened on the 28th ult. The inhabitants above, not anticipating the cause of the rise, and not apprehending serious danger, remained in fancied security until after night fall of that day. Discovering a strong current running up stream, the families of Mr. Frederick and Mr. Cross, on section 7, of the Des Moines improvement, and about seven miles from Keokuk, attempted to make their escape in a canoe to the highlands. Finding that they could not all reach the shore in so frail a bark against the current and floating timber, it was determined to leave Mr. Cross and wife and two children on a log while Mr. Frederick and family should go on. Mr. F. and family reached the shore with much difficulty, being almost frozen.

Mr. Frederick being unable to go back, Mr. Colvin, contracter on section —, set out in the canoe to rescue Mr. Cross and his family. After much difficulty he reached them with the canoe. He found them suffering intensely from wet and cold. After taking them into the canoe he set out for the shore—Mr. Cross sitting in the bow of the canoe facing to the front, Mrs. Cross and the two children, one four and the other one and a half years old, in the centre, and Mr. Colvin in the stern. Mr. Cross, in his eagerness to expedite the passage, caught hold of the limbs of trees during their progress. Mr. Colvin begged him to desist and told him of the consequences. Notwithstanding this caution, he again seized a limb—the bow was pulled down stream—the canoe struck a sapling, took in water—and, during the excitement so much alarmed Mrs. C. her husband and the children, as to upset the boat. The parents took each a child and clung to the branches of a small hack-berry sapling. Mr. Colvin finding that he could not regain the canoe, caught hold of a branch, pulled himself to the sapling and seating himself astride of a limb directed the parents to pass to him the children, and that he would endeaver to save them, but that the parents must take care of themselves. The children were hanged to him; and he placed them in his lap. This was about eight o'clock at night, and so cold that none could remain out of doors without suffering.

The parents were still clinging to the branches of the sapling, with their feet in the water. Mr. Colvin made known their situation to the people on the shore. A float of timber was made, and and with it an effort to reach them. The current caused it to pass about forty feet below the sufferers. In this situation they had remained for about an hour and a half, when Mr. Cross' grasp gave way and he fell into the water. By this time the arms and legs of the children had frozen stiff, although Mr. Colvin continued to rub and encourage them. Notwithstanding these efforts, both children died in his arms. At about 2 o'clock Mr. C. began to fear that he too would perish. As the people on shore would leave their fires and come out occasionally, Mr. Colvin made them acquainted with his situation. According to the advice of those on shore, he dropped the bodies of the children in the water, and raised himself to his feet on a limb, and by kicking and stamping, and keeping his blood in circulation, he succeeded in maintaining his position until six o'clock next morning, when he was relieved from his perilous position by a float, constructed of two cabin doors pinned together. Mr. C.'s voluntary suffering in behalf of this lost family should not go unrewarded. Why they did not built a large fire on shore and make greater efforts at a rescue, we cannot imagine. We think the whole might have been saved.

Government Furnishing Colt's Pistols to Californians.—On the last night of the session of Congress, $50,000 was appropriated for an additional purchase from the inventor of Colt's improved repeating pistols, and a joint resolution was adopted instructing the Secretary of War to furnish these arms to emigrants going to California, at the Government cost prices. They are thus advantageously supplied on a written application to the War Department.

Ex-Governor Edwards is going to California. Missouri has one Ex-Governor there now.

The United States Senate adjourned its extra session on the 23d. ult.

The St. Louis papers give accounts of a most daring burglary and robbery having been committed on the night of Saturday last, in that city. It seems that some bold rascals broke into the banking house of Messrs. Nesbit & Co., corner of Main and Olive streets. After making their way down to the vault, and finding the door too strong to be forced open they penetrated through a brick wall, eighteen inches in thickness, which brought them to the massive iron safe containing the treasure. This was enclosed by a brick wall, three feet in thickness, which they penetrated; they then cut, with cold chissels, three sides of a square into the iron safe, twisted the piece about, and took out the money, amounting to about $16,700 in paper and specie. Nothing was known as to the perpetrators.—[St. Joseph Gazette April 6th.

Earthquake.—The Alton Telegraph of the 16th ult. says:

Three shocks of an earthquake were distinctly experienced here on Tuesday morning last, about twenty-five minutes after one o'clock. They succeeded each other very rapidly, and were attended by a low rumbling noise, like that made by a heavy wagon when passing over a bridge. How far the earthquake has extended, we have not learned.

California Fever.—The Illinois State Register of the 13th ult. says:

It is estimated that no less than one hundred and fifty persons will leave this county for California in April, one hundred of whom will be from this city, and from our best class of citizens. These emigrants will carry off, in property, money, &c., at least $75,000.

From the Republican's Telegraphic Dispatches.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

New York, March 24, 4 P. M.

The steamer Canada, with European news to the 10th instant, arrived at Halifax, on Thursday last. From Halifax, her news was expressed to St. Johns, New Brunswick, and from thence telegraphed to this city.

England.—Cobden's financial reform project—cutting down the expenditures ten millions of pounds—has been rejected by Parliament.

The emigrant barque Floridian, bound from Liverpool to New York, was wrecked off Harwich. All on board, excepting three persons, were lost.

France.—The Government continues to gather strength, and there is evidently a growing disposition on the part of the nation to crush any attempt at public disorder. Upon the whole, the prospects of tranquility are more favorable than they have been for the past year.

India.—Another murderous conflict among the Sikhs has occurred near the left bank of the river Ahell, between the army of the Punjaub, under Lord Gough, and the sikh force under Rajah Shwerering—a struggle in which the British have to deplore the loss of 93 officers and 2,500 men killed and wounded. The struggle terminated in victory to the British, but was disgraced by the flight of the Bengal cavalry regiment, and the retreat, as yet scarcely satisfactorily explained, of the British corps of dragoons.

The news from India is of the most disastrous character. Lord Gough has been superseded by Sir Charles Napier, who was to have proceeded to the scene of hostilities on the 20th ultimo.

Russia.—Important news has been received from Russia. A guard of soldiers, 24,000 strong, has left St. Petersburg for the frontier, to keep the disaffected Poles in check.

Schleswig-Holstein vessels have been refused admittance into Russian ports unless under the Danish flag.

The Czar of Russia has determined, if possible, to prevent a recurrence of the scenes of last year in his dominions.

Hungary.—The German population of the South, finding the Insurgents carrying destruction in their quarter, having called on the Russians now occupying Cronstadt and Hermanstadt, for aid. Several serious skirmishes have taken place. The Insurgents are computed to muster 14,000 strong, but they are split up into so many divisions that it is difficult to ascertain the exact state of the war.

Austria.—The Emperor of Austria is still pushing the war with Hungary, at the same time that he is not unmindful of the condition of Italian affairs. A body of Austrian troops has been marched into Ferrara—the city was seized, and a fine levied upon the citizens. This fine was handed over to the Pope.

Tuscany.—The revolution in Tuscany is complete. Republics have been formed in Leghorn and Florence. The Grand Duke protests against the establishment of these Republics, and calls upon European powers not to recognize them,

The prince of Canino has been elected Vice President of the Republic of Rome.

It is confidentially stated that Spain is about to send ten thousand men to aid in the restoration of the Pope to temporal power. The Pope has also asked the aid of Austria, in the conflict with his rebellious subjects.

Turin is reported to be in a distracted state. Genoa was ripe for the establishment of a republic. Altogether, the elements of discord were never more rife than at the present moment in the Italian States.

Destruction of the fine Steamer Alphonse de Lamartine by Fire.

Peoria, March 24th.

We learn from a telegraphic dispatch of the St. Louis Republican that the Steamer Alphonse de Lamartine, engaged in the trade between St. Louis and New Orleans, was burnt to the water's edge about three o'clock yesterday afternoon, while opposite the Bath, near West Point, Illinois river, about fifty miles below this place. The fire originated behind the wheel house. A strong wind prevailing at the time, it was impossible to check its progress, and in a few minutes the boat was all in flames. The boat was on a trip to this river in order to obtain freight for New Orleans. The boat's books were saved, and her "safe" was preserved. The passengers took refuge on West Point Island. No lives were lost.

Awful Destruction of Property on the Illinois River!—From the officers of the steamer Tamerlane, down yesterday morning from the Illinois river, we learn that the bridge at Peoria has been entirely swept away by the flood. On the 15th inst., the water was in the stores, at that town, to the depth of some three or four inches.

Not only on the Illinois, but on all its tributaries, (save Fox river, and the acqueduct for canal,) houses, dams and mills have been washed away. It is thought that at Peru alone, the damage done to property amounts to not less than ten thousand dollars.

Telegraphic dispatches to Ottawa, report, that owing to the sudden rise, and the great quantity of floating ice in Chicago river, nearly thirty canal boats, and some three or four steamers have been injured to a considerable extent.

On Vermillion river, the only improvements that have escaped serious damage are the flouring mills of G. C. Todd.—[St. Louis Reveille March 19th.

Great Flood at Chicago.—A telegraphic dispatch from Chicago, dated March 12th, to a gentleman in this city, states that the whole town was flooded by the ice breaking up in the river and lake, carrying with it canal boats, steamers, propellers, vessels and bridges; all of which were jammed together, forming a dam across the river. Thirty canal boats were sunk, or otherwise entirely destroyed. The bridges were nearly all swept away, and the water was still rising. The Illinois river at Peru, on the 15th instant, was two feet higher than in 1844, the bridge at Peoria was seriously injured by floating ice, on the 14th inst., the river rising slowly, all the way down.—[Republican.

The Gold Dollar and Double Eagle.—The following are sections of the bill which passed the House of Representatives, on the 20th ult., and was confirmed by the Senate on the last day of its session. It is now a law:

Sec. 1. That it shall be lawful henceforward to make at the mint and its branches twenty dollar gold coins of the weight of five hundred and sixteen grains, and gold dollar coins of the weight of twenty-five grains and eight-tenths, which coins shall be legal tenders of payment according to their nominal values.

Sec. 4. That so much of the act as regards the coinage of twenty-dollar and one dollar gold pieces shall continue in force until the fourth day of March, 1851, and no longer.

From California.—The ship Czar arrived at Boson March 26th, bringing dates from the Sandwich Islands to the 8th December. She brought $70,000 in California gold.

Important Decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.—On the 13th inst., in the case of the State of Missouri vs. the State of Iowa, Mr. Justice Catron delivered the opinion of the Court, establishing the old Indian boundary line, known for many years as Sullivan's line, as the Nothern boundry of Missouri; which is, in effect, a decision in favor of Iowa. This decision is final—it being the result of an agreed case between the parties, and settles the question of boundary.

The county of Schuyler, and perhaps other territory, over which Missouri has always claimed and exercised jurisdiction, is, by this decision, determined to belong to Iowa, and will hereafter form a part of that State. This result is unexpected, and may be productive of some inconvenience. The population of the country, last fall, was about thirty-five hundred, most of whom, we imagine, will dislike being thrown into a free State, though it happens, fortunately, that they own only a few slaves. The total number, at the last census, was only twenty-four.—[Republican.

Gold Diggers will please prepare now, to see themselves and their washbowls flashed through the air, to Eldorado, starting from New York at day-break, say, and dropping down, in time for supper at the dry diggings on the Sacramento. If you do not believe it, read the following announcement, posted to-day around the city, and which, we are assured, is made in good faith:

AIR LINE TO CALIFORNIA.

FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

Through by daylight, without stopping.

The Ærial Locomotive will leave the city on the 15th of April, on its first trip to the Gold Mines. Passage $50; wines included. Baggage extra. For freight or passage apply to PORTER & ROBJOHN, New York.

Wines included, indeed! As if mortal man were in a fit state to wine going through the air like a Flying Dutchman, at the rate so many hundred miles an hour.—[N. Y. Express.

The first would have been a much better day than the 15th of April, on many accounts, for the commencement to this ærial voyage. Won't they drop the latest Eastern news as they pass?

The New York Sun states, that its proprietors have negotiated for the immediate construction of a new line of telegraph from New York to Boston, and from New York to Washington city making a total length of 470 miles, which will cost $125,000. It invites other papers to join in the enterprise.

Gold Seekers.—There are at this time in and camped in the immediate neighborhood of St. Joseph, upon both sides of the River, more than one thousand men, the greater part of whom are fully supplied with oxen, mules, wagons, and complete outfits for a journey across the plains, as soon as the grass is sufficientiy grown to support their teams. Not a boat arrives at our wharf but brings more or less of these adventurers. The Mandan brought a company from Alton and landed them at a very convenient place on the west side of the River, where they have "pitched their tents." The Consignee, from Pittsburg came up, crowded with a company of about two hundred and fifty, from that city, and loaded deeply with teams, wagons, provisions, mining utensils, &c. More hardy, enterprising and intelligent companies of men cannot be raised than these; young and active, looking into the future and towards the "land of promise" with high hopes and through a golden medium. If that El Dorado is to be peopled by men of such character, as the emigrants now here, there is no fear that California will be overrun by desperadoes, or that crime will go unpunished. May their anticipations be realized.—[St. Joseph Adventure.

New Orleans and the Flood.—We find in the N. O. Courier that the municipal authorities of that city had as early as the 6th ult., resolved to construct a durable levee from the Mississippi to the Lake, for the purpose of turning the water from the former to the latter, as an indispensable measure of safety to the city against the threatened crevasse and consequent inundation. In the event of constructing this levee, it is not impossible that a permanent river channel may be established so that permanent communication will exist between the lake and river.

KANESVILLE MARKET.

Kanesville, April 18, 1849.

Since our last report the market has not changed in any particular. Flour, beef, pork, and bacon, being scarce, command full prices—in fact there is no beef or bacon for sale—on account of the large amount that it has taken to supply our emigrants. We quote as follows:

Flour, per hundred, - - -	$2 00 to $2 50

PROVISION STORE.

THE undersigned takes this opportunity to return thanks to his old customers in Kanesville and its vicinity, for their liberal patronage the past season. He still solicits a continuance of the same; as he intends to keep constantly on hand all kinds of PROVISION, especially Meat and Flour of different kinds. He has also made arrangements from down the river, for any quantity of good superfine flour, that may be wanted by emigrants going West this season, which will be sold on the most reasonable terms. Please call and examine, before purchasing elsewhere. [m7 3m] ABEL LAMB.

ROPE MAKING.

REUBEN W. ALLRED, has erected an extensive Rope-walk at Council Point, directly on the river, near the emigrant landing; and is prepared to supply merchants, citizens, and emigrants with all kinds of rope and cordage, from a fish line to a cable. Rope of various kinds constantly on hand, and manufactured to order. He solicits the patronage of a generous and liberal public. m21 3m

GUNSMITHING.

THE subscriber is prepared to manufacture, to order, improved Fire-arms, viz: revolving rifles and pistols; also slide guns, from 5 to 25 shooters. All on an improved plan, and he thinks not equalled this far East. (Father west they might be.) The emigrating and sporting community are invited to call and examine Browning's improved fire-arms before purchasing elsewhere. Shop eight miles south of Kanesville on Musquito Creek, half a mile south of Trading Point.

m21 6m JONATHAN BROWNING.

MILL FOR SALE.

THE well known GRIST MILL belonging to JEROME M. BENSON, situated on "Big Pigeon," about eight miles north of this place, is offered for sale on the most reasonable terms. There are two run of burrs and a bolt for manufacturing flour of the best kind, now in successful operation. This mill has all the grinding it can do by day and by night, and there is also a fine chance for erecting a Saw Mill on the same dam—part of the timber is now on the bank. Connected with the mill, is a fine little farm of about thirty acres under good fence. If any one wishes a great bargain, please call upon the subscriber on the premises.

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP.

More proof that

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP

Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

Cuyahoga Falls, O., March 16, 1848.

Sir:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours,

O. B. BEEBE.

Troy, Ia., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

R. BATES, P. M.

Jefferson co., Ky., Aug. 4, 1848.

This is to certify that I was afflicted last Summer with ague and fever, and had then had it for three years, and during that time I despaired of ever getting well. I was induced to get Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, and by using two bottles I was entirely restored to my usual good health, and have continued so up to this time; I therefore do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and the public, as the most effectual and innocent remedy that has ever came to my knowledge.

POETRY.

From the Pennsylvanian.

Gold.

BY DAVID PAUL BROWN.

"This yellow slave—
Will knit and break religious; bless the accurs'd,
Make the hoar leprosy ador'd—place thieves,
And give them title, knee and approbation,
With Senators on the Bench."

Thou slave and tyrant! Slave to the rich, and tyrant of the poor,
Thou bond of union between adverse hearts,
That binds and blends their sharp antipathies,
And knits them into one. Thou subtle fiend
That can'st dissever all the ties of blood—
Of Truth, of Friendship, of devoted Love;
Arm brother against brother, and unite
The filial band in one unbroken league
Against the breast that bore and nurtured them!
Glutting their rage e'en on their source of life!
——Thou, that can'st wither all the bloom of youth,
Or smooth the wrinkled brow of doting age.
Gild o'er a felon's crimes—or paralyze
The heart that beats—the arm that strikes for Virtue—
Thou, that can'st give form, feature, health and nerve,
Reverence, renown, pride, dignity and state,
To the decrepit, worthless, weak and vile;
Contemning time—reversing Nature's model,
Resisting the decrees of Heaven itself
In open, shameless, sinful, bold revolt:—
Where's thy dominion's limit? In the grave—
Where Xerxes—Cræsus—Cyrus—Cæsar—all
Resigned their millions for an epitaph.
And with their pamper'd bodies fed—the worm.
But turn we from these thunderbolts of war,
Who intertwin'd their diadems with laurel—

Leave them to rot—while we abase our eyes
Upon a crownless, ragged, wretched crew,
Clive, Elives, and a mortly sordid race,
Still hoarding—and still starving 'midst their stores;
Where—where are they—their predecessors or their followers?
Living or dead, they are alike despised;
The lazy worm will scarcely deign to feed
Upon their famish'd corse. Yet these are they
Who by the touch of their almighty wand
Made the soul quake, or bow'd the aspiring spirit
Even beneath their level. Such—such, alas!
Is the subduing spirit of mighty Gold.

MISCELLANY.

NAPOLEON'S DREAM.

BY BERTHA CLINTON.

In a small room in one of the suburbs of Paris, sat a young man deeply engaged in thought. From his military undress it was evident that he belonged to the republican army, and that his rank was not higher than that of sub lieutenant. His appearance was careless and negligent, his person slender and rather below the middle height, and his complexion sallow; but the discerning spectator could see much in his classic features to arrest attention. His forehead betokened a powerful intellect; his deep-set, penetrating eye spoke of a soul within born to command. On a table at his side lay a copy of Ossian, whose wild sublimity suited well with his enthusiastic imagination; a volume of Plutarch was in his hand, and long did he continue immersed in reverie, beholding visions of glory conjured up by the great historian of antiquity. At last his eyelids closed, the book dropped from his hands, his head sank down upon the table—Napoleon slept.

The ivory gate of dreams was opened, and there issued forth a female form of lofty stature, helmeted and clad in a brilliant coat of mail. A woman she was, in glorious, heavenly beauty, but no feminine softness or timidity dwelt in her heart; her countenance was grave, severe, sublime; her mien was dignity itself. No distaff did she grasp, as when Athenian matrons were taught the arts of peace; but her hand brandished a spear, piercing and transforming as Ithuriel's, from which falsehood shrunk back abashed. Napoleon gazed upon the awe inspiring vision—he recognized Minerva!

The first-born of Jove approached, and thus addressed him:—"My son, in thee I behold a kindred spirit: go forth and prosper. Thy brain be wise to plan, thy hand be strong to execute; be thou the man of the age, the hero of the nineteenth century. Free nations from tyranny; deliver thine own from anarchy and bloodshed; patronize science, and set the seal of thy genius upon generations yet to come. Let Europe, Asia and Africa tremble before thee; let ancient kingdoms quail at thy presence; the Alps shall behold in thee a second Hannibal—the city of the seven hills shall pay thee homage. Thou shalt rule upon the shores of the Seine, the Tiber and the Nile. Be thou strong and dauntless; fear nothing—but thyself! Be warned by me, and let not pride dwell in thy heart to ally thyself with imperial foes, parting from the wife of thy bosom; and let not the lust of dominion carry thee to the land of snows, the cold, unconquerable north, else will thy good genius forsake thee there, and thy days will end in darkness, thy empire will be a rock—a rock in the ocean, far, far away from France. Remember my words, for the future is yet before thee; consider well the past, and learn to restrain ambition. Look now in the mirror of history, and ponder the lessons of wisdom!"

With these words, Minerva raised her shield! No Medusa's snaky locks and deathly countenance were there to turn to stone the horrified beholder. The clear and burnished metal reflected the features of Napoleon as he earnestly gazed upon it; but looking more intently, a cloud of dust arose upon its polished surface, a cry as of the battle-field was heard, and presently he beheld a confused mass of men engaged in deadly combat. He saw the wounded and the slain, and the terrible war-horse, rejoicing in its strength, prancing fearlessly over both, while the shout of victory and the cry for mercy rang in his ears. Presently he began to distinguish the opposeing parties. On one side was an immense host, glittering in gold and gems, more suited to adorn a satrap's court than to defend an endangered country: soft and effeminate, they were soldiers who loved "the pomp and pride, and circumstance of war," but not the toil and peril of the battle-field. Opposed to them was a band of steel-clad warriors, whose manly forms and sinewy arms spoke of many dangers overcome, whose stern countenances told of revenge for past injuries, and of dauntless resolution. At their head, in the thickest of the combat, was a young hero, whose deeds of valor inspired their enthusiasm, who led them on from victory to victory. An eagle heart and an eagle eye were his, and lofty was his aim, like the king of birds who flies upward toward the source of light and returns the gaze of the sun unabashed. Born to a throne, a throne satisfied him not while a world lay before him unconquered. The kingdom of Macedonia, could not contain ALEXANDER. His enemies are routed—he remains master of the field. Will he tarnish his valor by cruelty? Ah, no! The pupil of Aristotle has not yet forgotten the lessons of his master. Queens kneel in anguish at his feet, the lovely and the venerable; he is generous and courteous—he will be a son to the mother of Darius—he will be a brother to his wife.

The scene has changed, and Napoleon beholds Tyre, the renowned and ancient city, whose merchants were princes and whose traffickers were the honorable of the earth, fall before the sword of the mighty conqueror. Whither now shall the ships of Tarshish repair? The nations of the earth shall mourn for Tyre: all her beauty and wisdom, and strength are brought down to the dust, and her feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn. Prepare yourselves, ye fishers, for Tyre shall be like the top of a rock—it shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea;

Vanish, Tyre—appear, Jerusalem! Deck thyself, though, in fear and trembling, to greet the conqueror of Asia. Adorn thy streets with garlands, and let thy children array themselves in virgin white. The victor cometh—go ye out to meet him. And lo! a long procession—children with flowers, beautiful youths with precious gifts, and at their head the priests of the Most High, inspiring awe by the majesty and sanctity of their mien; and the high priest in his gorgeous apparel, with "Holiness unto Jehovah" inscribed upon his forehead. Onward sweeps the pageant, till they reach a height whence they behold the holy city beneath them—the glorious temple, perhaps so soon to be laid in ashes; their homes and the sepulchres of their fathers. Tears stream from their eyes at the sight of thee, O Jerusalem! But hark! warlike music announces the approach of the victorious army. Alexander comes prepared for vengeance—for why should Judea alone decline to obey his behests? Wherefore should one state refuse to break its oath to Darius? The monarch comes to quench their scruples in blood, to consume them in the ascending flame. But when he beholds the peaceful throng, when he marks the pontiff's venerable air, fury departs from his heart; he alights from Bucephalus, and humbly kneeling on the ground, asks a blessing from the servant of the Lord of armies. Valor pays homage to religion.

Conquering and to conquer, onward is his march. Cities pour out their treasures at his feet, and kings court his alliance. He hath passed the Indus, and bitterly weeps because his warriors refuse to follow him on to the new world stretched out before him. Boundless in his ambition as the vault of heaven. "A god!" his followers cry. "A god!" the conquered nations echo from east to west. A god weak Alexander dreams himself, and falls from his height of glory. He marches across the dreary desert, and sycophantic priests proclaim him son of the Sun, and son of Amun a very god upon earth, as they have done to countless Pharaohs before his day. The oracle hath said it. Who will dare to contradict? His heart swells big with pride. Who will now stand up before the conqueror of the world, the son of Jupiter, and oppose his pleasure?

One, an honest friend—he was a man that dared to speak the truth. He had saved the life of his king in battle—he was his chosen confidant. Why should Clitus fear? Because pride and vanity, and drunkenness and sensuality now dwell in that once noble heart, and the tyrant brooks no opposition to his will. The victor is vanquished by his rage. Mourn, King of Greece Egypt and Asia—thy javelin is steeped in the blood of thy friend!

But pour out the ruddy wine, and drink deep, thou son of Amun, for mirth and revelry drown remorse. With lovely Thais at thy side, why should the conqueror of the world suffer dull care to prey upon his heart? Stint not—pour out the sparkling wine; pass round the golden cup, and let the splendid halls of ancient Persepolis ring again with the laughter of the inebriate. But what doth Napoleon see that he starts as if to snach a fire-brand from the destroyer's hand? Clouds of smoke and flame ascend to heaven, while the stars look down reprovingly. Art thou, indeed, sober now, son of Jupiter? Well mayst thou be. But though the king of the earth and born of a god, the elements are stronger than thou. Thy word cannot stay the devouring fire. Thy hand applied the torch—thine eye shall behold on the morrow a city in ashes. The palaces of Cyrus and still more ancient kings, and the records of the empire are consumed. Some lofty columns remain, some sculptured ruins, and that noble staircase, to excite the regret and admiration of future ages, but the rest is desolation. Such monuments do conquerors leave behind them!

But hush! Speak softly—tread lightly—he is sick. Splendid is the couch on which he lies—gorgeous the apartment in which he suffers—many the attendants to obey his behests. Cannot the wealth of nations cool the parched tongue? Cannot the death of a thousand of his slaves be a ransom for his life? Alexander is now a poor worm of the dust; he is conquered at last by death. Can the son of Jupiter die? Is there no respite? None. Who whispers "poison?" I beleive it not; 'tis only the poison hidden in the wine cup. What says the physician? Alexander is dead!

But his infant children will be reverenced, their rights respected! his generals will surely strive to outdo each other in devotion to them. Alas, no! the cry is now—"Each oue for himself!" Thy empire is divided, thou conqueror of the earth, and thy wives and children are murdered in cold blood. Is this the end of thy glory, great king of nations?

* * * * * * *

"I would be great as Alexander without his weakness," thought Napoleon, as the dark clouds swept over the polished shield.

"Then live for history and for humanity, not for thyself," said Pallas, "and scorn the bauble of a crown. Look once again into the magic mirror, and let my lessons penetrate thy heart."

As Napoleon gazed, the clouds and darkness which had swallowed up the gaudy pageant of Alexander's life were gradually dissipated; a clear blue sky appeared, and the sun shone down upon a wild and wooded country. Lofty trees, the growth of centuries, reared there proud heads to heaven; rugged mountains told of another land than France, and the swollen flood of the Monongahela rolled angrily along. No dwelling of man appeared, no beaten road, naught but the hunter's track in the forest: the timid deer rejoice in liberty unrestrained. But see, they fly! What sound has startled the wild tenants of the woods? 'Tis the warlike fife and drum—never before heard in these distant solitudes. Nearer and nearer it approaches, and earnestly does Napoleon gaze as he behold the scarlet uniform of a hated and rival nation. The army marches carelessly and at ease, as if upon safe ground; no enemy have they to fear among the wild-tangled forests. But who is that young man of such commanding aspect, so dignified and thoughtful, whose searching eye glances around as if he perceived danger in the wind? He strives to inspire caution, but his prudence is despised by all, save a band of brother provincials, who keep their trusty weapons prepared for action and glance at every tree as if it contained a foe. And lo! an appalling sound—the war-whoop of the Indian! And from every tree, and bush, and rock, the murderous rifle or the poisoned arrow performs its work of death; and unseen enemies select their victims, unable to escape. Dreadful is the open battle-field, but more awful still the onset of a hidden foe; nor is it strange that brave men fled, as if a legion of demons strove to drag them to destruction. Who now is calm, who resolute, in that frightful carnage? One—them an whose noble presence had before attracted the eye of young Napoleon. While companions were dropping round him like the leaves in autum, in perfect self-possession he appeared in the spot of greatest danger, obeying the behests of his commander, and inspiriting the panic-stricken troops. His general falls at his side; he bears him away from the field of battle, and leads the remnant of the soldiery to safety. Two chargers perish beneath him, and his garments are pierced with bullets; but fear not—he dies not yet. His life is precious—there is other work for Washington to do.

A change comes o'er the scene, and men of the same language and the same blood are arrayed as enemies. England's oppression can be brooked no longer; the colonies assert their independence, and the stripes and stars now wave upon the wind. Strong is the force of Britain, poor and undisciplined the troops of young America; but rich are they in native courage, in love of liberty and of home, and rich especially in the brave defender of their freedom, in Washington the great. Wisdom, valor and right have gained the battle, and a nation's gratitude awaits the father of his country. What reward shall he have? Shall a crown deck that lofty brow? Shall an emperor's state be his? Shall he be perpetual dictator of the new republic? Far other thoughts fill the mind of that unselfish hero. He disbands the army which adores him; he lays down his commission at the feet of an admiring senate, and retires to Mount Vernon to enjoy in private life the approval of his conscience, the praises of the good.

Called by a nation's voice to public office he reluctantly obeys. The warrior is now forgotten in the statesman, and wisdom guides the helm of government till the stormy sea be overpast, while the man shines preeminent in every virtue. His dignity of character commands the respect of foreign potentates while he lives a simple citizen. No guards are his, no warlike troops attend him; every American would die in his defence—all bosoms beat with love and veneration. Again retiring to his quiet home, he leaves an example of moderation to all successors which none would dare to slight. Dying, his tomb is wet with a nation's tears, his memory is embalmed in every heart. His statue is placed by Virtue in the loftiest niche of the temple of fame; his monument is reared in the history of his country's freedom and prosperity.

"Who would not rather be a Washington than an Alexander?" said Minerva. "Mark well the contrast, my son, and trace it to the fountainhead the motive which actuated each. Thou canst not be a Washington, I know it well; but behold in him thy model, thy exemplar. Limit thy ambition, and thy end shall yet be happy. Napoleon, I have warned thee!"

"No middle course be mine—glory and fame, power and dominion for Bonaparte!" cried the young lieutenant.

Minerva frowned, then smiled; and a golden cloud descending, wrapped round her like a mantle, hiding the lovely vision from the mortal eyes she had deigned to bless. Napoleon stretched forth his arms to detain her—and awoke.

CONSOLATION.—"Well, how do you like the law?" said a friend of ours to a young student. "Oh! it's rather dull," responded the young gentleman. "Never mind my friend, if you stick to it you'll be sure in time to get the hang of it."

AN ANSWER IN KIND.—"Can you tell me, sir, what time the rail road comes in?" inquired an old lady with a band-box in her arms, of a lounger at the depot. "About ten minutes after the depot goes out, ma'am," was the prompt reply of the wag.

TERRIBLE.—The Picayune tells us of a tree in his neighborhood that has grown so rapidly of late, that it has pulled itself up by the roots.

The Fatherless.

"Speak softly to the fatherless!
And check the harsh reply
That sends the crimson to the cheek,
The tear-drop to the eye.
They have the weight of loneliness
In this rude world to bear;
Then gently raise the fallen bud,
The drooping flowers spare.

Speak kindly to the fatherless!
The lowliest of their band
God keepeth, as the waters,
In the hollow of his hand.
'Tis sad to see life's evening sun
Go down in sorrow's shroud,
But sadder still when morning's dawn
Is darkened by the cloud.

Look mildly on the fatherless!
Ye may have power to win
Their hearts from sadden'd memory
By the magic of a smile.
Deal gently with these little ones,
Be pitiful, and He,
The friend and father of us all!
Shall gently deal with thee."

"Proverbs for the People."

We take the following "Proverbs" from one of our exchanges, and which we think will bear re-publication for the benefit of the "censorious:"

The censorious man is prompt to complain. It has been said that an Irishman is at peace, only when he is in a quarrel; a Scotchman is at home, only when he is abroad; an Englishman is contented, only when finding fault with something or somebody; and, let us add, that a captious, busy, blustering, impetuous American is at the height of felicity, only while he is in all tumultuous conditions at the same time. Place of birth and peculiarity of dialect matter not, wherever the graceless cynic throws around him "the rhinoceros skin of impudence," the identity of character is fixed, and is very likely to remain unchanged. His misanthropic heart is a fountain of bitterness, whose incessant flow indicates a disposition perpetually perverse. By a few masterly outlines the great bard has presented a vivid portrature of the censorious man. "Thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more or a hair less in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels as an egg is full of meat!"

Says Solomon: "an ungodly man diggeth up evil; and in his lips there is a burning fire. A forward man soweth strife; and a whisperer separateth chief friends." Instead of covering all in the spirit of the Gospel, the captious are most busy in digging up evil; they search for "hid treasure," black and foul as their own loathsome spirit, and take the greatest delight in reviving what has long been buried, only to invest it with aggravating circumstances and a more envenomed life. Such a perturbed and wretched anarchist goes forth with diligent hand to sow the seed of strife in every furrow of society—seed that spring up only in tempests, and generate the worst pestilence from the rotten fruits they produce.

A CONFIRMED HABIT.—A gentleman of excellent habits and very amiable disposition, was so unfortunate as to have a wife of very different character—in short one that would get beastly drunk. Being in company of a few intimate friends one evening, one of them remarked to him, that if she were his wife—since all other things had failed—he would frighten her in some way so that she would quit it; and proposed the following method: that some time when dead drunk, she should be put into a box shaped like a coffin, and left in this situation until her drunken fit should be over and consciousness restored.

A few evenings after the lady being in a proper state, the plan was put in execution and the box lid properly secured; the party before alluded to watched each in turn to witness the result. About day[illegible] next morning, the watcher, hearing a movement, laid himself down beside the box when her ladyship after thumping her head a few times was heard to say:

"Bless me! where am I?"

The outsider replied in a sepulchral tone: "Madam, you are dead and in another world."

A pause ensued; the lady again enquired: "where are you?"

"Oh, I am dead, too," said he.

"Can you tell me how long I've been dead?"

"About three weeks."

"How long have you been dead?"

"Four months."

"Well, you've been here so much longer than I have, can't you tell me where I can get a little gin?"

VERY FAIR.—We heard a story, yesterday, of a man who returned home from California with gold to the amount of sixty-four thousand dollars, which he deposited in one of the mints. He took off his old tattered unmentionables, and was about to throw them away, but his wife, good prudent woman, took them, and with a trifling effort, she shook twenty-three thousand dollars worth of gold dust out of them.—Chronotype.

GOOD ADVICE.—John H. Prentiss, in his recent valedictory on retireing from the editorial chair, which he had filled for forty-one years, has the following:

"No man should be without a well conducted newspaper; he is far behind the spirit of the age unless he reads one; is not upon equal footing with his fellow-man who enjoys such advantage, and is disregardful of his duty to his family, in not affording them an opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of what is passing in the world, at the cheapest possible teaching. Show me a family without a newspaper, and I venture to say that there will be manifest in that family, a want of amenity of manners and indications of ignorance, most strikingly in contrast with the neighbor who allows himself such a rational indulgence. Young men, especially, should read newspapers. If I were a boy, even of twelve years, I would read a newspaper weekly, though I had to work by torch light to earn money enough to pay for it. The boy who reads well will learn to think and analize, and if so, he will be almost sure to make a man of himself, bating vicious indulgences, which reading is calculated to beget a distaste for.

The Cathedral at Mexico.

A gentleman, who has resided for a long time in Mexico, has favored us with the following authentic account of the magnificent gold and silver ornaments contained in the Cathedral of the city of Mexico. The facts are obtained from the most unquestionable source:

GOLDEN ALTAR SERVICE.

6 large golden candlesticks, 50 inches high.

5 large golden branches, with vases of the same size.

4 smaller candlesticks of gold, 16 inches high.

2 golden censers.

2 golden utensils, to sprinkle holy water, (Navetas.)

1 golden cross, set with very precious stones, with pedestal and front pieces, also set with precious stones.

1 cross of gold, filagree work.

2 golden do., Atriles.

2 golden do., Palebreros.

2 portapares of gold

The weight of this altar service is not less than 460 pounds, and its value not less than $125 000.

The image of the Ascension (the title of this church) is of solid gold, adorned with very rich jewels; the weight of the image is 6984 gold castellanos, or $18,700. Its value, including jewels, is not less than $30,000.

The image of the Conception is of solid silver, and weighs 39 pounds—value $625.

The silver lamp, which adorns the front of the Presbytery, weighs 2186½ pounds of silver, 655 pounds of which is gilded with pure gold. Its appearance is magnificent. It has 54 burners; its height is 22 feet, circumference 30 feet, and is suspended by an iron chain and bolt, weighing 650 pounds. The cost of the lamp was $71,343 37½, and its value of gold and silver alone is $45,000.

The principal "tabernacle," or case in which the sacred species are preserved, is 37½ inches high, and weighs 44 pounds, of pure gold. Its front is covered with 5872 diamonds, its back with 2652 emeralds, 544 rubies, 106 amethysts, and 28 saphires. Its cost was upwards of $150,000, which it is now richly worth.

The large Cibrium is of pure gold, of 9 pounds weight, and has 1676 diamonds set in it. It is worth $10,580.

The chalice, of pure gold, weighs 5½ pounds, and has set in it 122 diamonds, 1400 emeralds, 850 pearls, and is worth about $4,000.

The jewels of these cups were the gift of the Emperor Charles V.

In addition to the e cups there are 20 chalices of gold, mostly richly adorned with diamonds and precious stones—6 large golden plates, with their incense boxes and bells of gold. The united value of these cups and plates is not less than $ 20,000.

The silver service of the cathedral is very beautiful, and extremely valuable: among the pieces are 12 chandeliers, 12 incense boxes, 12 large branches, 7 feet high each; 72 silver cups and incense burners; 96 silver candlesticks, and a multitude of branches; 3 silver statutes; 1 very large silver closet beautifully engraved, for the deposit of holy things; 2 lamp standards, with each four clusters of branches; 2 large standard candlesticks, each 6 feet high; 20 silver candlesticks, very large, in the aisles of the cathedral. Value of silver utensils, in silver, 30 to $40,000.

The robes and garments of the priesthood are of the richest and most costly description. The more expensive were gifts of the Emperor Chas. V.

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a super-ropal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week. Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will preserve the rigist and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy, both Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the interior, and will try, by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the "States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall rise forth in His cloudy chariot, and dash in pieces the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw, that it become fine like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of Him who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth! Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and untarnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two Dollars a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United State, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

Letter from Orson Hyde.

From an article in your paper of August 30th, headed "The late Locofoco outrage in Iowa," it would seem that some men have taken a very great interest in my affairs, and in the affairs of that people of Pottawatamie county, Iowa, over whom I have been called to preside. Charges of bribery, I discover, have been brought against the Whigs of Iowa, for the course they are said to have taken to procure the Mormon votes. I think that all parties will admit that I know as much about this matter as any other man, and I think that I am just as willing to tell the truth about it, and the whole truth, as any person. My God knows what I have done in this case, and why should I attempt to conceal it from frail and mortal men? I will not do it.

I am not a political man, having never cast but one vote in my life, and that was several years before I ever heard the name of Mormon. I may have voted for some petty neighborhood officer in the course of my life, besides the above named, but I do not recollect that I ever even did that. From the inaugural address of President Polk, I did think that we ought to contend for all Oregon, and on several occasion I expressed myself to that effect; for I could not see how the dignity of our Government could be sustained without it. But there was a great detraction from the first position taken. This appeared to me to be a blight in the wreath of the nation's honor, and it has never appeared to me otherwise. If, by speaking in favor of our holding all Oregon, I have committed myself to the Democratic cause, I stand committed; otherwise, I believe that I am free from any claim that they can have upon me.

I think that if the Democrats would go back a few years and search diligently, with an unprejudiced eye, they might find causes more potent for the late Mormon vote, than their alleged Whig bribery. The floor of Carthage Jail, still stained, perhaps, with the blood of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, can witness what confidence the plighted faith of a Democratic State is entitled to. It may be urged, that this foul deed was committed by a mob, without the knowledge of the Governor. The "Carthage Greys," had sworn to kill Joseph and Hyram Smith, and this fact was generally known; yet they were detailed by authority, in preference to any other soldiers, to guard the jail. Their pieces being charged with blank cartridges they could pour a tremendous fire into the mob as they approached the jail to kill the prisoners. The lifeless bodies of these men were taken to Nauvoo, and there exposed to public view, while thousands of bursting hearts and streaming eyes sent up their bitter wailing and complaints to high Heaven, against the perpetrators of this bloody deed; and it would require as strong proof to make that afflicted people believe that the Governor of that State did not give his private sanction to that cold blooded murder, as the Israelites had at Mt. Sinai of the existence of a God. Again, when the "Barnburners," and houseburners of Hancock commenced their career, Col. Backenstos, then the legal Sheriff of that county, called out a posse to quell their fiery operations. Their object was to burn us out, and drive us off from our lands, that they might have "Free Soil." The Sheriff was successful in his course against the fiery foe, and would most likely, have effectually put a stop to their operations had not the Governor, at this time, sent a body of troops into the county for the alleged purpose of quelling the disturbances there; but it appears evident, from what followed, that the Governors' real object was to help the mob and oppress the Mormons—to waste and destroy them; for, instead of his sustaining the Sheriff in his legal, honorable and fearless course, he orders the posse to be disbanded and sent home, and receives the mobocrats with open arms, and they become identified with his forces. Thus is a house-burning mob legalized by the Governor, and the Sheriff with his legal forces dishonored, disbanded and sent home!! This is not Whig bribery, neither newspaper froth or foam; but it is solemnly, shameful and official Democratic Truth!!

Again, the two letters written by Gov. Ford, one to A. W. Babbit, Esq., of Nauvoo, and the other to the editor of the Warsaw Signal, defining his position in relation to the Mormons and Anti-Mormons of Hancock county. The spirit and tenor of these letters bore an assusance to the mob, that they were at liberty to do with us as they pleased. The particular doctrines set forth in them, I will not name or repeat. Better for community that they be forgotten!

The foregoing acts gave strength to the mob, and weakness and discouragement to the Saints, and they exclaimed in their private councils and public walks, concerning the injustice and oppression of the Democratic administration of the State of Illinois—"This is your hour and the power of darkness." From this time forth, our troubles increased, until we were expelled from the State. Now, let me candidly appeal to every honest man in the Union, whether he be Whig or Democrat, if he does not think that the foregoing acts have had a greater influence upon the votes of the Mormons of late, than any alleged Whig bribery? Let others think as they may, my knowledge of the feelings of that people, together with my own experience, authorize me to say, that here are causes that have influenced the Mormon votes with an hundred fold more power than any other consideration. This is the testimony that I bear here, and it is the testimony that, by the grace of God, I shall bear in the Court of Heaven.

Now for the Whig bribery. I left my home in Pottawatamie county on the 24th of June last. My object in going abroad was to obtain a printing press, fixtures, &c. I expected to raise the necessary funds by donations, subscriptions, contributions, &c. I left with the feeling and intention to vote for Gen. Taylor if I voted for any Presidential candidate, and I had spoken of this to many of my friends. In fact, I felt disposed, if I voted at all, to vote the Whig ticket. On my way down, I met with Mr. Pickett on his way up, and had considerable conversation with him upon various matters. As I was going to Burlington to see a small branch of our church there and to send a young man from thence to England, Mr. P. advised me to call on Col. Warren of that place. This I did, and made known to him my mission. He directly asked me my political views, and I gave them to him frankly. He asked me if I could conscientiously recommend my views to our people. I told him that I should be very sorry to receive principles myself that I would hesitate to recommend to others. Said he, are you willing to do it? I replied that I was. Well, said he, by doing it, you will do us a favor. After some further and unimportant conversation I received several letters of introduction to gentlemen in the east, but no check for a farthing in any shape. These and other introductions facilitated my purposes, and I have got the press and intend to use it, not as a political engine particularly, but as a means to diffuse among our people, who have long been shut out from it, the news of the day, and also to [illegible] them in religion, &c. To charge the Whigs [illegible] tion, I do consider unjust, ungenerous and untrue. I have no warfare to wage against any people, but wish all well in doing well; but if the Mormon votes were illegal why were Democratic office-holders and office-seekers at Kanesville before the election, courting and soliciting those illegal votes? They certainly knew the laws of Iowa, and knew whether out votes would be legal or illegal. If they knew that we had no legal right to vote, how much corruption does it show in the democrats to solicit those votes! If they knew that it was our legal right to vote, how much corruption does it show in them to reject our votes and steal our poll-books? The suggestion that a Whig stole the poll-book is unworthy of a reply.

I have been absent from these scenes, and cannot say that the newspapers can be relied on for information upon these matters, and I have only glanced at a few of them; but if they are worthy of credit, I must say that the above inconsistency and corruption are enough to sicken any noble-minded man, and he must pity the imbecility and extreme selfishness of his race. The sum and substance of the Democratic reasoning concerning the Mormon vote seems to be this: "If you vote for Cass and Butler, your votes will be legal: but if you vote for Taylor and Fillmore, your votes will be illegal." That the "Washington Union," the government organ, should stoop to advocate such a degrading inconsistency, too clearly shows that that party is willing to adopt almost any measures to effect their purpose and objects, even if it be to drive a people, women and chilren, on to the western prairies to perish and die. That people, through much industry, toil, hardship and labor, are just beginning to drive want from their doors, and rise from the blow received in Illinois; and now, if we presume to cast our votes for Taylor and Fillmore, that blow is threatened to be repeated by the same hand. Ye men of this Republic, what say you? Shall we vote as we like, or shall we not? If we are going to the Great Salt Lake by-and-by, are we not interested in the Presidential election? Does he not appoint the Governor over that country, and other officers? It may be that, even in that secluded place, we shall be able to render the Government some important service, and things may assume such a shape that the Government could hardly do without us there; and now shall we vote as we like at the next election, and be protected in it, or shall we not?

I do not claim to be a prophet, but I will close with a parabolical anecdote. In the land of "steady habits, down east," in "blue-law" times, an unfortunate youth was left in the world, his father and uncle having been murdered. This youth fell into the hands of a very superstitious and bigoted man, who believed more in the rod for children than in giving them good and wholesome teaching. This lad was taken rather ill one day, and the old man resolved to give him a portion of jalap. Consequently, he mixed it up for the lad, not, perhaps, in the most delicate way that could be imagined, and gave it to him, and ordered him to swallow it; but the stomach of the lad refused it. "What!" says the old man, "do you not like it?" "No sir," said the boy. "Then says the old man, "I'll whip you till you do," and he applied the rod with great severity to the back of the unoffending boy. Again the old man presented to him the nauseous drug with like results as before, but the cries of the lad under his castigation drew the neighbors together to behold the scene. When they learned the real merits of the case, they seized the old man, bound him hand and foot, and cast him into prison, where he lay for a long time. At length he was liberated, but he was not received into society. This so mortified his pride, and broke his spirits, that he soon died of grief, and few there were to lament his end. The lad fell into the hands of a very kind and tender-hearted man. He soon recovered from his afflictions, and grew up to be a man, respected by all the wise and good. His wisdom was great and all its lovers sought for his society and listened with deep interest and attention to the words of his mouth.

Yours, most respectfully,
ORSON HYDE.

From the Missouri Republican of Sept. 21, 1848.

Letter from Orson Hyde.

I would esteem it a favor if the following can have place in your columns. I am sorry to trouble you or the public with a second communication, bordering upon matters that have caused so many unpleasant feelings. But as this article may reach many of our people through the public papers whom I cannot personally see or address, and that, too, at an earlier period than I can convey intelligence to them in any other way, I hope to be pardoned for the indulgence that I ask.

I would say to the good people of Pottawatamie county and to our friends elsewhere, that the advice that I gave to you, touching political matters, I gave in all good faith and conscience, and in the spirit that dwelt in my bosom, namely: in the spirit and feeling of a brother who regards your interest and your welfare, and that also of all men.

You have the laws of Iowa at the Bluffs, and I wish you to make yourselves acquainted with them, and let no political zeal carry you beyond their limits. Remember, that it is the native born male citizen of the United States, who is twenty-one years old and upwards, and also foreigners who have been duly naturalized according to the laws of the country, who are legal voters, if they have resided in the State and county the requisite term of time, and I believe that none others are.

Be particular in these matters, and let no illegal votes or [illegible] claims to be identified with our[illegible] who make threats against any people, or of any great things that he will do; particularly if he wishes his union with us to be continued. So far as the law opens your way to the ballot box, we can honorably travel on towards it; but when that ceases to be our pioneer, and we attempt to force a passage by any other means, we sacrifice our peace and happiness at the shrine of a misguided zeal and a vain ambition which are stamped with the high displeasure of Heaven, and of all wise and good men. There are certain knowing ones also, who say and tell things that they do not know, for popularity's sake, at the expense of their best friends. This is a poisonous worm that is gnawing at their root.

If there are precincts in Pottawatamie county, or if that county, is properly organized, I can see no objection to the legal voters among the Mormons, casting their votes at the election. If they do intend going to the Great Salt Lake, I cannot see that this should disqualify them as voters any more than the hope and intention that we all cherish, perhaps, of going to Heaven by-and-by.

In the midst of all these various opinions and contentions, there is an over-ruling hand that "steadies the ark," and I think that none have occasion to run mad and raise the cry of extermination against a people that have committed no legal offence. If they do, cause and effect assure me that it must recoil with ten-fold more weight upon their heads than all the Mormon votes if cast against them.

Mr. A. W. Babbitt is a member of our church, but professes to be no religious Mormon. Time will determine, or has determined, whether he lives up to his profession. He is made to say by the newspapers, that I showed him a check for a thousand dollars, on Washington, but he does not say on what house or on what institution. I here state that I never showed Mr. Babbitt a check on Washington, nor any other person, for I never had one to show. Mr. Babbitt has taken his own course in politics which is peculiar to himself, and has chosen his own mode to help his party. If I were to see him, perhaps he would tell me another story, different from what I gather from the papers. But I will close with the wish that Gen. TAYLOR may be elected President of the United States, trusting that a merciful Providence and patriotic men may have an eye for good upon us poor Mormons, who appear to be threatened with extermination and death, if we presume to express our minds at the ballot-box in a free country, under the influence of Democratic rule.

I have just this moment cast my eye upon a recommendation to jug me up for my crimes, and for the first time in my life, learned that Mr. Babbitt was one of the Twelve Apostles. If I really felt guilty, I should fear these threats and monstrous recommendations, but as I do not feel guilty, I have no fears.

I have this one request, however to make. The people of Pottawatamie county are a good people; they have struggled hard for life, and may the Great Ruler in Israel bless them and give them life eternal! If vengeance has to be taken, let these good people escape; for rather than see again, men, women and children suffer, as I have seen them suffer, I would say, let me be the only object of vengeance. They may put me in prison, they may Carthagenianize me, or they may put a noose on me in private, but I will try to be prepared to meet whatever may come. I do not consider that I have the guardianship of my life or liberty. Thankful I am, that that is retained in better hands.

Yours, most respectfully,
ORSON HYDE.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

[Concluded.]

Third Day.

SUNDAY, April 8th, 1849.

Conference convened at 10 o'clock, A. M. The sun shone clear and warm. Pres't. O. Hyde wished seats to be reserved for the ladies.

The Choir sung, "Come let us anew," &c.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith requested order and attention. Opened the meeting by Prayer.

The Choir sung. "On the Mountain top appearing, &c."

Pres't. Orson Hyde said, I rejoice that we have met under such favorable circumstances, and that we have had such fine weather. Spoke of the business already transacted, and reserving to-day, for instruction in the principles and doctrines of the Gospel. Spoke of his acts and proceedings, and wished to take an expression of the feelings of the Brethren in regard to them; and said you have witnessed our course, and you know how to appreciate our acts, and under what circumstances they were performed, and we submit the thing to your decision.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith moved, that Pres't. Brigham Young be sustained in his office as the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. (Carried.)

Moved that Heber C. Kimball be sustained as First Counsellor to the President. (Carried.)

Moved that Willard Richards, be sustained as Second Counsellor to the President, and Historian to the Church. (Carried.)

Moved by Pres't. Geo. A. Smith, that Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, Geo. A. Smith, Amasa Lyman and Ezra T. Benson be sustained as the Twelve Apostles in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Each voted for separately, and unanimously.

Moved that Father John Smith be sustained, as Patriarch to the whole Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. (Carried.)

Joseph Young be sustained as Smith, that Josenh President of all the Seventies; [illegible] Senior cock, 2d; Henry Herriman, 3d; Zerah Pulsipher, 4th; A. P. Rockwood, 5th; Benjamin L. Clapp, 6th; Jedediah M. Grant, 7th. Each voted for separately, and unanimously.

Moved that we sustain N. K. Whitney as Bishop of the whole Church. (Carried.)

Moved that we sustain Orson Hyde, as the President of Pottawatamie county, and Geo. A. Smith and Ezra T. Benson as his Counsellors, and are satisfied with their course. (Carried.)

Moved that we sustain James Allred as the President of the High Council; George W. Harris, Noah S. Bulkley, Lyman Stoddard, George Coulson, William Snow, Ira Oviatt, Aaron Johnson, Henry W. Miller, Jerome M. Benson, Andrew H. Perkins, Silas Richards, and Evan M. Greene as Recorder, Historian and Clerk of the High Council, each voted for seperately and unanimously.

Moved that Father Draper be acknowledged as the Patriarch in Pottawatamie county. (Carried.)

Pres't. O Hyde said, I cannot withhold an expression of my feelings, and hearty thanks for your good will expressed towards us in your unwavering determination to sustain us in our office and calling, and also our brethren in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. We should be sorry to betray the confidence which you, this day, have reposed in us. We are glad that there have been no objections raised against us: yet if objections do exist against us, or any one of us in our official proceedings, or in our private capacity, this is the place and now is the time when they can be lawfully and honorably made to our face in the midst of the people. (After a short pause, and no objections made, Mr. H. continued and said,) as there are no objections made, I trust that there will be none made in any bye-corner after this, unless we shall do something hereafter that will merit censure. No whining or complaining about us will be heard.

I wish now to call your attention to the course taken by a certain branch of the church. It is true that I am a little warm or heated at times, but am fortunately yoked with two counsellors who are cool, deliberate and calculating. These serve to modify and temper my feelings to a degree of moderation that is tolerable. We have looked for members from this branch to meet with us in council, but they have seldom, if ever done so, cheerfully. One would naturally conclude that they were all law students. They are very technical, and metaphysical, and claim only to have apostatized from dishonesty and crime. This reformation may be a redeeming quality—a saving clause; for they may have learned by experience that the way of the transgressor is hard in those things from which they now claim to have apostatized. If they have indeed apostatized from such faith and conduct, they have done that which I should charitably hope no other branch in Pottawatamie county could do for the reason that none other may be guilty. I mean the Silver Creek branch where Father Cutler has the Presidency. We look for men clothed with high and responsible priesthood, to meet with us in council and mingle their spirits and feelings with ours; and if they are one with us, they will be very apt to do it—particularly when circumstances will allow.

In the first place: In view of that people who are the descendants of Abraham, and the great desire of the Saints that the promises made to their father and reserved to be fulfilled upon their heads in the last days, should be speedily consumated. Some men have suffered enthusiasm to take the helm of their minds, and they have caused us much trouble and awakened a prejudice that has been a strong barrier against our success and prosperity in this matter. Great wheels move slowly, and all these things must move along in the Providence of God, if they move aright. No enthusiastic flirts—no vain or wild chimera—no mysterious humbug is going to accomplish the great purposes of our Heavenly Father in these days. If a man has received a plain, straight forward and honorable mission, and shall afterwards attempt to wrap it up in mystery, or present it in dark and ambiguous sayings to excite wonder and awaken discontent, you may know that "mystery Babylon" is there, and that the destroying spirit is in the ascendant.

Our martyred prophet, in one of the last councils in which I had the honor to enjoy his company, said: "Tell the red men of the forest that they must bury the tomahawk and live in peace with the white man and among themselves also, and with all mankind. This was the teaching given to Father Cutler also by President Young. He was instructed to go and tell the Indians to bury the tomahawk, and by the permission of Government to build mills, to establish schools, and to take all legal measures to improve their condition—to teach them that Jesus Christ died for them, and that they should repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. It is no pleasure to me to take power from a good man, but if possible, to increase it. I will come to the point Because a mission has been given to Father Cutler and Bishop Calkins to do a certain work, they have preached up their own righteousness, neglected their mission and infused into that branch self-righteousness enough to alienate them from the body of the Church.

It is true that there was on a certain occasion a deputation from that branch of the Church, and a private council waited upon them here, consisting of the Presidency of the Church in this place. They were called up here for an investigation of their doings. They made satisfactory retractions, and the doings of this Council were written in a letter addressed to the Silver Creek branch. This letter, Father Cutler advised the brethren with him to back up when they returned home. I observed to them that the letter was a true statement of the case; but told them that they could [illegible] to take that letter and confirm the truth of its contents by their testimony to the branch, or go before the High Council, which was to be in session that day, and have an investigation there of their proceedings. I told them not to take the letter at all. unless they intended to support it to all intents and purposes; for if they did, they would not only alienate that branch still the more from the church, but bring innocent blood on their own heads. They consented to take the letter upon the terms required, and took it.

But how was that letter treated by the branch, and by the men who promised to back it up. The testimony is that it was read in detatched sentences—some not read at all—moved by one that it be laid under the table, by another that it be laid on the table and wink at the ignorance of the writer or of the thing. The Council we held, I wished to have private, for if the matter had been brought before the High Council and raked as they would have raked it, it would have been a much harder case for them. I tell you that that mission cannot nor shall not prosper with the present spirit of that branch. Father Cutler lies a little back in the shade, behind the curtain while Bishop Calkins is his organ and mouth-piece and the "Magnus Apollo" to carry out his measures.

Why are we placed here to preside over the Church? Because the First Presidency cannot be every where present, and consequently cannot be here. We are placed to act in their stead. We are their representatives. If they were here and saw that that mission was being converted into something that they never contemplated, and was having an injurious effect upon the Church and its organization, would they not veto it? Every body would say, yes! Cannot their representatives do the same? Most assuredly, or else they have no reprerentatives. We are here under their seal and sanction, and we do not intend to dishonor them. It matters not then how great any man's mission may be, if he is within our reach, he can be controlled by the council and authorities of the Church here, particularly if he is going out of his circle and limits; but if he keeps within the limits of his instructions, we have no wish to interfere with him.

If the Silver Creek Branch were as frank and honest as they pretend, they would say, in my opinion, that they regarded Father Cutler as the highest authority on earth—that they consider it more to their advantage, if they make us think they are one with us, so that we will not act upon their case, and thus give them a latitude to privately operate under our sanction. To our face, their words are with us; but who cannot see that their spirit is against us; nay, feel it also! And that they bolster themselves up by an affected righteousness, and try to stifle their own convictions of error by magnifying the faults of their brethren. The wicked subterfuge is resorted to, in order to beguile the unwary, that the ancients have visited them, tongues and prophecyings are dealt out so profusely that the market is glutted. We are weak mortals: but when the Holy Spirit comes upon us, and we take an action upon those who have questioned our power, our right, and our jurisdiction, in order to get a lengthened term to do wrong, they will find, sooner or later, that what we bind on earth is bound in Heaven.

Pres't. O. Hyde, presented a letter written to E. M. Greene by Bishop Calkins, and observed, that all know that Br. Greene has been appointed Clerk of the High Council, recorder and historian of the church, and you all know his honorable course, his high standing in the Church, and his good moral character. We have confidence in Br. Greene, and he is always welcome in the Council to do the business of recording for them.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith called upon Robert Campbell to read the letter.

SILVER CREEK, Jan. 15, 1849.

BR. GREENE, SIR: This is to let you know that I have received your copy of the minutes of the special Council, held at Kanesville, on the 15th of December, 1848. I am much obliged to you for the favor; but would have been a little better pleased had you done justice to the principle of truth, and honesty in those minutes.

I will ask you a few questions which I wish you would take the trouble to answer to relieve my mind and feelings on those matters, viz: Did not I myself ask you into the Council at about the hour of nine or ten o'clock, P. M., to do a little waiting for me, to take down some testimonies that were to be given there in my case, (not as a clerk for the Council, but to do me a favor for my own private journal,) which was to be given by W. P. McIntire and others?

Why did you not give G. W. Harris's testimony as well as McIntire's?

Why did you not give the motion of G. W. Harris seconded by yourself, and voted unanimously according to your agreement the next morning with me in your private room, that all things might show true on both side of the question?

Why did you not give the outline of G. A. Smiths' talk about the leather breeches, &c.; that the spirit of that man might be as plain to the reader as my own?

Why did you say that I made "satisfactory retraction," when the truth is I did not make any in any shape whatever: But said there might be a shadow of justification under the testimony of McIntire for the course of O. Hyde. But still the righteous way would have been to have sent to me instead of the branch?

Why did you say I agreed with O. Hyde "to burn all the letters and papers that had passed between us," when no letters or papers has ever passed between us. Again, why did you not send those minutes under your certificate, instead of your official seal? when it is a well known fact that you were not the clerk of said Council; but was only invited in by me, to do some writing for me as an individual, and that not until the Council had more than half done its business.

Now if you will please answer these few questions, I shall feel better perhaps in my mind, as I wish always to have the best of feelings when there is room for it. Yours, respectfully, &c.

To E. M. GREENE. L. H. CALKINS.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith saids, I think this was one of the most insulting letters I have ever heard. I think the leather breeches fit tighter and tighter. He believed Br. Greene done his duty according to the time and on-

Pres't. O. Hyde, moved that Bishop Calkins be disfellowshipped from the Church until he makes satisfaction.

Pres't. O. Hyde explained that some who had visited that Branch caught their spirit and returned teaching that the church is separated, that some of its members are here and some in the Valley; that there is no organization here, nor in the Valley; that the church is disorganized at present. Spoke of some wanting us to hold still about their bogus press and their dark designs until they can bring all the evil they can upon this people. Said also, when I got up that letter, I proposed to Father Cutler and Bishop Calkins to back it up to the Branch. Two others came in, and the question was asked them if they would back it up; and they answered, they would sustain Father Cutler and Bishop Calkins any how; showing, they would back them up whether they got the sanction of the Church or not. Said he felt like putting a veto upon that misson until things are straightened out by the Church; and observed that I want to have Bishop Calkins disfellowshipped until he makes the proper apology to Br. Greene, for that letter, and let him give satisfaction to the Council. I also wish a vote of injunction to be laid upon that mission. It will test the action of Father Cutler and that branch.

Br. William Redfield said it is with peculiar feelings that I arise to address you. I am connected with the branch there, and I am conversant with the acts of the branch all the way through. There may be things I don't know of. I was present when that letter was read. The letter was not read sentence by sentence. It was not motioned to lay it on the table, nor any remarks made to lay it on the table,—except by Jim Long and who cares for him; neither God, man, nor the devil cares for him. The Branch acquiesced in the letter; and there has been every thing done to sustain the Authorities of the Church here and elsewhere. Father Cutler always sustained the heads of the Church. Spoke of there going to be another Council, and that Father Cutler would make a full return to the authorities here, as soon as he got back. Said also, if Bishop Calkins taught wrong things it was private, and not in public; and if he has done any thing wrong why let him suffer for the wrong. And those who have said anything against that Branch, let them prove it; for I know they are all good men.

Br. Louis Harvey said I am no spokesman, and rise in weakness. Said he was present when that letter was read. Thinks a part of the letter was not read, and that there was not the true spirit there. He said, when it was moved to lay it on the table, or put it under the table it was sanctioned by many there.

Br. Wm. Redfield said something about being at Pres't. Hyde's at the time it was read, and that every word was read in the Branch.

Br. Louis Harvey said I do not disupte but that Long made the remarks, but I tell you that others too, made remarks, and these remarks were sanctioned by many that were there.

Two other witnesses were at hand on both sides of the question, but were not called to testify.

Br. Alexander Stanley from the Congregation asked for the reading of the minutes.

Pres't. Hyde read that portion of the minutes, relative to Bishop Calkins making retraction, burning papers, &c.

Br. A. Stanley asked if retraction was called for in the Council.

Pres't. Hyde answered, yes.

Bishop Calkins was dis-fellowshipped until he makes satisfaction to the Council for the letter he wrote to E. M. Greene. (Clear vote. No dissension.)

Br. Alexander Stanley moved that this Conference suspend Father Cutler's Mission until an investigation is entered into, and an understanding is given before the Authorities of the Church, and it is approved of by them; and until he knows us and knows himself. (Carried unanimously.)

Tune "Russian March."

Pres't. Orson Hyde gave notice of a fast on the 27th of this month, and instructed the brethren to lay up something for the poor.

Motion was made and carried to adjourn one hour and a quarter.

Br. Benson dismissed the meeting.

(The report of Branches was so incomplete, owing to the bridges being swept away, that we do not deem it expedient to publish the report of the branches. There were twenty-three branches out of thirty-eight represented.)

SUNDAY, 2 o'clock, P. M.

Pres't. O. Hyde called the meeting to order.

Prayer was made by Pres't. E. T. Benson.

Pres't. O. Hyde said we have been favored during this Conference with a representation from all parts of the county. Gave a lengthy and able address on the nature of the Kingdom of God and the kingdoms of this world. Spoke of not running after the gold—for the promise is, all are ours, &c., but if you pluck an apple and pick it up before it is ripe, it will set your teeth on edge, that no allurements arising from going to the gold mines should entice us. Adverted to the train, that without casting any reflections or throwing a stigma upon our California brethren who have so dearly earned their laurels, I have to say something about its disadvantages. Spoke of the looseness of the morals of men going out in companies—that it required the sternest stuff to stand against its influence, and showed its evil consequences and closed by blessing the people.

Pres't. Geo. A. Smith gave instructions to the Saints who are going to the mountains to leave their calves; to treat the Saints on their arrival from England with kindness and cordiality; to take them by the hand and to point them out good locations. Spoke of the necessity of the Saints being united; of their sacred covenants made in the Temple, to sacrifice their property to help each other to a place of gathering. Spoke of the extent of the work to which we are called; of the 300 vessel loads of Saints now in England that would come if they had the opportunity and wagons; that five more yoke of cattle were still wanting.

Pres't. Joseph Young spoke at length; expressing his satisfaction at the counsel given to the elders not to go to California and Oregon; expatiated at large against lying, swearing, stealing, against quarreling and taking the name of the Lord in vain; said that our actions and motives were riddled out by the searching spirit of God. Exhorted the brethren to honor one another and to love one another, and repeated that Br. Benson had enjoined upon him to say Oxen. I say, OXEN.

Pres't. O. Hyde spoke upon the utility of the Saints taking the Guardian; of the nature of the Fast, and the duties of the brethren on that occasion. Gave notice that this Conference would be adjourned to the first Saturday and Sunday in May, to meet at Benson's Settlement. Instructed them not to sell their land before they got their crops in, and made a call for oxen.

Pres't. Ezra T. Benson spoke on the text, "OXEN," and gave good instruction. Said that when men get so large, that they cannot be tried by any tribunal this side the Valley, they ought to go there. When a man has a pretence, that he will listen to counsel in the Valley, and will not hearken to counsel here, he gives the lie, &c.

Maj. Miller said that he had done all in his power to prevent the Indians from stealing horses, and had told them that no other people would have suffered as much from them as the Mormons had; he had no force, but the force of argument to prevent them.

Moved that we adjourn this Conference to Bensons' Settlement to be held on the Fifth and Sixth of May. (Carried.)

Congregation sung, "All's Well."

The Conference adjourned.

ROB'T. CAMPBELL, Reporter.

We learn that the Government proposition for the modification of the navigation laws, has again been brought forward, and Mr. Bancroft, our Minister, states that to whatever extent in liberality the British Parliament may be disposed to legislate in this matter, he will meet them; that he is ready to sign a convention to-morrow, based upon complete reciprocity, and upon the opening of the entire coasting trade of the two countries to the vessels of each. By the proposed law it will be competent for an American vessel to come to Liverpool from the United States laden with Cotton and Tobacco; she will be permitted to discharge all, or part of her cargo in the Mersey, take in goods or passengers and carry them to Glasgow or London, in transit, and clear out with perhaps a fresh cargo, from her final port on her discharge.

Col. Fremont and his party have suffered very severely beyond a doubt; but it is more than probable that exagerated accounts of his disaster and loss of men have been published.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 1849.

Agency.

Elder ISAAC BULLOCK, a young man of fire moral character, and well qualified for the business, has been employed by us as an agent to procure subscribers for the Guardian while he travels the country in the capacity of a Missionary to preach the Gospel, to comfort the Saints and instruct them in matters pertaining to their duty—the gathering, &c.

His circuit is within the limits of the United States, and we will be responsible for all the money that is paid to him by subscribers for the Guardian, and will forward the papers to them with as little delay as possible. He has the requisite papers to show that he is our authorized traveling agent in the United States.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

Cash will be given for a few hundred feet of good seasoned black walnut lumber, if delivered immediately—clear stuff.

GROG SHOP.

Our community, for a long time, has been cursed with a grog-shop, located within a few rods of the door of our Tabernacle and School-House, where meetings for divine worship are regularly held. The proprietor of this concern went into this low and degrading traffic there, after our meetings were regularly established, in order to take the advantage, not only of the usual trade and travel, but of every gathering for religious purposes, to vend that article that carries ruin and death into many a homely cot. He was candidly and respectfully remonstrated with, against a traffic of that kind in that place in the out-set, but he only treated with contempt, the reasons that were urged against his business. He manifested no regard for the feelings or wishes of this community; but despite of reason and argument, persisted in keeping the establishment open to the great annoyance of the citizens here, and to the enticing of many a young and liberal hearted man from the path of sobriety and honor, to the shades of vice and wretchedness. It is, indeed, a low miserable sink—a place of drunkenness and gambling on the Sabbath-day, where men get so filled with whisky that they blaspheme every thing that is good—go from thence into the congregation, frequently, and disturb them—insult females in the street while passing to and from the place of worship, by gross and vulgar language, &c., &c. We are prepared to prove every word we say, and still more; but for poor weak humanity's sake we forbear for the present.

This thing has been endured till endurance ceases to be a virtue. The curses of the inebriate are justly poured against the concern in his sober and reflecting moments. Were almost any other people situated as we are, before they would endure what we have endured, they would blot that little hell out of existence. Young men drinking there, fighting in the street because of liquor, shooting, hallowing and carousing day and night, is sufficient to awaken the righteous indignation of every good citizen against that slough of corruption and drunkenness.

If a man has no higher object to attain in this life, than a few paltry dimes at the expense of the unfortunate enough to live near him, he supplies but a broken link in the chain of creation, and deserves to have a welding heat, and become more firmly joined under the hammer of public frown, upon the anvil of the laws of the State. If it is really necessary to have a liquor shop in the country, (which we seriously doubt) let it not be a low, dirty gambling concern, but a respectable one, if possible, where the keeper has principle enough to deny a man before he gets intoxicated, and not harbor about him a set of disturbers of meetings and the peace and order of society.

The following acrostic from the Palmyra, (Mo.) Whig, does not gingle badly in sentiment with the foregoing:

G ulf of mis'ry; source of strife;
R oad to ruin; bane of life;
O rphan maker; young man's snare;
G rave of virtue! devil's lair.

S ource of murder; nation's curse;
H ealth destroyer; vice's nurse;
O ut of thine enchanting bowl,
P oisons flow that kill the soul.

In another place the feelings of a stranger are expressed in relation to our Conference, and in relation to the conduct of certain individuals there. Parents would do well to consider this.

When a stranger who is not of us reproves, we think it high time for the parents of some young men here to bestir themselves.

We will now publish some of the laws of the State, touching these things; and although our county organization is lame in some respects, yet we think that if some three or four good men are deputed by the Magistrate to act as constables at our large meetings, and arrest such as may be guilty of drunkenness, vulgarity and profanity by which the peace and quiet of the assembly is jeopardized, and make them or their parents pay over the penalty which the law imposes, with costs, &c., we will venture to predict that some means of reformation will be devised by fathers or by sons.

Let the organization of our county be as impotent as any man may consider it; it is potent enough to make men pay five dollars and costs if they will sell liquor on the first day of the week; and it is for those to determine who understand jurisprudence better than we, if a Magistrate's decision is not final in relation to higher offences and misdemeanors in the grocery operation, where a case has been tried by a jury, and there is no Circuit Court to appeal to.

IMMORAL PRACTICES.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Iowa, That if any person of the age of fourteen years or upwards, shall be found on the first day of the week commonly called Sunday, rioting, quarreling, fishing, shooting, or at common labor, (works of necessity and charity only excepted) he or they shall be fined in any sum not exceeding five dollars: Provided, Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to extend to those who conscientiously do observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, nor to prevent persons from travelling, watermen from landing their passengers or freight, or ferrymen from conveying any person over the waters on such day.

SEC. 2. That if any grocery keeper or other person shall sell or barter any spirituous liquors on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, (except prescribed by a physician, or if such grocery keeper or other person shall know that such spirituous liquors are wanted to be used as medicine) such grocery keeper or other person so offending, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding five dollars.

SEC. 3. That if any person of the age of fourteen years and upwards, shall profanely curse or damn, or profanely swear by the name of God, Jesus Christ or the holy ghost, in any court of justice or within hearing of any religious assemblage, each and every person so offending, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding one dollar, nor less than twenty-five cents for each offence.

SEC. 4. That all fines accruing under the provisions of this act, shall be collected in the name of the United States as in other cases of a breach of the peace, and be paid into the township treasury for the use of common schools in the township in which the offence shall have been committed, (excepting in such counties as have not been organized into townships) in which case the fines aforesaid shall be paid over to the county treasurer for the use aforesaid, within thirty days after collected, and if any officer fail to pay over such fine by him collected agreeably to the provisions of this act, such officer shall for any such neglect, forfeit and pay into the treasury aforesaid, double the amount of any such fine or fines by him collected, to be recovered in a summary way before any justice of the peace having cognizance of the same, at the suit of the township or county treasurer, as the case may be: Provided, That all prosecutions under the provisions of this act, shall be commenced within ten days after the offence is committed, except prosecutions against justices of the peace for not paying over any fine or fines as aforesaid.

APPROVED, 10th Febuary, 1843.

WORSHIPPING CONGREGATIONS.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Iowa, That any person who shall, by menace, profane swearing, vulgar language, or any disorderly, or immoral conduct, interrupt and disturb any congregation, or collection of citizens, assembled together for the purpose of worshipping Almighty God, or who shall sell, or attempt to sell, or otherwise dispose of ardent spirits, or liquors, or any article which will tend to disturb any worshipping congregation or collection of people, within two miles of such place, unless the person so selling or disposing of said spirituous liquors or articles, shall be regularly licensed to keep a tavern, or grocery, and shall sell the same, at his said tavern or grocery, to travellers, any person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding fifty dollars.

SEC. 2. Justices of the peace respectively, in their several counties, shall have jurisdiction of the aforesaid offence, and may, on view, or upon information on oath, cause every such person, having offended, as aforesaid, to be apprehended and brought before him to answer such charge.

SEC. 3. Any person, who shall be accused as aforesaid, if [illegible] and, if he shall insist, by a full jury of twelve, who shall be summoned to try the cause, and if the jury shall find the accused guilty, they shall assess and state the amount of the fine, not more than is stated in the first section of this act, upon which the justice, before whom the trial shall be had, or in case the person shall plead guilty, shall give judgment for fine and costs, and proceed to collect the same, without delay, and (when said fine shall be required) to pay it over, without delay, to the treasurer of the proper county, taking his receipt therefor, and which receipt shall be filed with the clerk of the board of county commissioners, after which the said fine, or fines, which may be thus deposited, shall be subject to the control of said court, and appropriated to the education of any poor orphan child, or children, of the proper county.

SEC. 4. Any person, who may consider himself, or herself, aggrieved by the judgment of the justice, may appeal to the district court of the county, and may remove the same, as in cases of assault and battery.

APPROVED, January 24, 1839.

It has been our lot to act here, in many respects, in the capacity of magistrate or judge; and indeed, some have thought it very hard because we would not use all our spiritual power and influence to make men pay money where the laws of the State did not require them to do it. We have considered this to be an oppressive measure; for there are many men here that would pay fifty or a hundred dollars, on the strength of our word when the law would not require them to do it. As our county is now organized and the officers are legally empowered to act, we resign our share of the magistracy, and say, that we intend to have nothing more to do in deciding any legal question—in collecting any man's debts, or to do any business at all that may be justly disposed of by our legal tribunals. We now, and henceforth refer all persons claiming dollars and cents to the ordinary means provided by law for the security and collection of their money. If the parties are both members of the church, we should advise them to settle their differences before the bishop, as he is not bound by technicalities, but is a perfect liberty to administer justice according to the nature and spirit of the case, if it is not according to the exact letter. Where one or both of the parties do not belong to the Church, the Magistrate is the proper man to go before, unless they mutually agree to go before the bishop. We must all exercise forbearance and get along the best way we can, and take an honorable and charitable course, and so act that the laws of God nor man can bring us into jeopardy. There are some cases which interest all parties: Such, for example, as counterfeiting, theft &c., &c. These may call for a united action, not altogether so mild or charitable as under other circumstances. In all such cases, every good citizen, should consider himself an officer under oath to bring such characters to justice in this frontier country.

The Committee appointed by the Conference to assist the emigrants that arrive here, to counsel them, &c., will do well to counsel together, and be prepared, and be on hand in season and out of season to aid the emigrants in finding homes.

Gold Hunters and Emigrants, Remember

That you who emigrate to the Salt Lake, must either take provisions enough with you to last you until you can raise your own there another year, or take money or goods to buy with after you get there. We have advised you to take useful articles of goods—plough irons, iron, steel, glass, nails, leather of all kinds, and good and substantial dry goods—such as every family really wants, in preference to taking money. Among other things to take there to sell, every family would do well to take a few entire copies of the Guardian from the beginning. They will sell there as readily as anything, and will be very joyfully received in our opinion, because they contain a regular series of our operations here; and our friends in the Valley will thus get much information that cannot be sent them by letter. It will also help to sustain and support our office here, and it is hoped that every friend of the cause will supply himself liberally with the Guardian before he leaves for the West.

Indeed! the attraction of repulsion may be sufficiently powerful in them to keep the Indians away from your camps, that they will not steal your horses and mules, nor trouble you at all. The attraction of cohesion may also be sufficiently powerful in them to draw you right forward to some rich lead or placer of pure gold. Gold hunters, just think of this idea once, and then leave for those enchanted regions without a regular file of Mormon papers if you dare risk it. We tell you the Mormons found the gold there: and now don't call us superstitious if we ask you to supply yourselves with plenty of our papers as an essential part of your out-fit.

Should you leave without this pre-requisite, and after you have got well out on the plains, should there discover, off in the distance, a war party of Indians, following you up—then think that you neglected to take the Guardian.

It is our intention to make the Guardian so useful and so efficient that it will even draw out gold where there is no mine at all. Our circumstances are such that we cannot go to the gold regions ourself, but we would like to have a little gold, notwitstanding, and we know not how to get it, except we say to you, subscribe for the Guardian.

We re-publish two of our letters which originally appeared in the Missouri Republican. The third letter we have not in possession, but would be much obliged to any friend that can furnish us with it.

It is not our object to revive, by it, any controversy; but to make them a matter of record among our own community who will be the better able to judge our actions and the motives that prompted us to write them. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

They are freely submitted to those whose right, we acknowledge, it is, to judge us. We acted then in all good conscience, and we have not yet discovered any error therein, or any cause of regret. Our conscience was not guided by dollars and cents, as some have wickedly charged us; but a sense of duty that we owed to ourselves, to our country and to our God influenced us to act; and it affords us unalloyed pleasure, that although our votes were cast aside, our prayers were heard and answered upon this subject by the God whom we adore, and who is the wise and merciful DISPOSER of the events and destinies of nations.

Western Emigrants, Take Notice.

It will be borne in mind that the past winter has been severe with the Western Indians as well as with the Eastern whites. By a communication from Philetus, who is well acquainted with the [illegible] dition of the Indians in this state, we discover that they are all poor, having lost their horses, and have obtained but few buffalo. They will calculate to steal horses, mules and cattle from the emigrants that pass. And we say to you, take warning in season, and be on your guard by night and by day. You may be attacked by the starving tribes who will want to rob your wagons of provisions, clothing, &c. The Indians are bad enough after a mild winter; but after they are completely stripped by this last winter's cold, look out for them now. If you see no Indians for several days, do not indulge a feeling of security and thereby be thrown off your guard; for this is the very snare that the shrewd and cunning fellows will seek to catch you in. They will follow you when you cannot see them, but they will see you and mark all your movements. A good and sufficient guard should be posted about your camp whenever you come to a halt, whether it be by day or by night, and every man that goes to sleep should have his arms by him, and ready for duty at a moments alarm. They will sometimes make their attacks in day-light. We close by saying: "Watch as well as pray!"

The proceedings of the Branch of the Church in Cincinnati Ohio, have met the aproval of the Authorities here: And the further investigation of Elder Heath's case is referred to the President of his quorum here.

SEED CORN. Our farmers will do well to be on their guard against bad seed corn. The early frosts last Fall were so severe and corn was late in getting ripe—that it froze so hard that the chit or germ was killed in a great deal. Much corn that looks very well and is passable for meal, we are told will not grow at all. The corn that you select for seed can be proven by placing a small quantity of it in warm water for 24 or 48 hours and see if it will germinate or sprout." "By a little, learn what a good deal means" before it is too late.

Elder C. R. Dana who has been out on a mission last summer and winter, is requested to discontinue his labors in behalf of the Church, and to return here as soon as it may be practicable. With the blessing of the Lord, we as a Church will try to sustain ourselves without taxing further, the charity of the public. We will not solicit charity when we can possibly get along without it. Innividuals, however, belonging to our church are at liberty to make their wants known as they please. This refers to the church as a body. We have so far recovered from the disaster that we unavoidably met with in our expulsion from Illinois, that we think we shall now be able to live by our own exertions.

We feel to acknowledge the kindness and hospitality of our friends who have aided us in the hour of our distress and want. May God, our Heavenly Father bless them, and may they know by experience, the unspeakable bliss of the fulfilment of the words of our Savior; "I was hungry and ye gave me meat, naked and ye clothed me, &c. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

The weather is extremely cold and the season wet and backward here. It was cold enough on Sunday last for a snow storm and has continued to be so ever since. It is very discouraging to to farmers. Still, we trust warm weather will come soon. Let us perform well on our part towards raising crops of all kinds, and leave the issue with Him who has promised "seed time and harvest," so long as the rain-bow is seen.

The following letter from the late Capt. Dan Jones, but now a successful minister of Jesus Christ, in Wales, from the "Millennial Star," of Nov. 15th last, will doubtless be interesting to many of our readers. What many are pleased to call Mormonism, is destined to live and prosper, despite of the pious exertions of the many to expose its alledged weakness wickedness and folly. While some have vainly tried to stay its progress, have endeavored to obscure the light of our path, their own lights have gone out and they have been left in darkness. "It is hard to kick against the pricks." This cause is destined to prevail because the power of God is in it, and no man was ever blessed by opposing it, or comforted by mobbing or driving the Saints: but after his passion has subsided, and excitement died away, and he left to his sober senses, he must feel something like a Judas, though he may lack the honesty to confess openly, "Surely I have betrayed innocent blood."

"THE DEAF HEAR, THE DUMB SPEAK."

MERTHYR, October 23, 1848.

"Dear Brother Pratt,—It is a pleasure to me to write to you, because it is so pleasing to anticipate, and much more so to realize, your replies. It is a pleasure also, because I never have but pleasing news to inform you of from Wales. The power of God is manifested among and in behalf of his Saints continually here. I might mention many instances of marvellous healings, such as broken bones, fevers, and various kinds of diseases, by faith through the ordinances. But the following instance of the deaf and dumb being healed instantaneously, has attracted more public notice from the world of late.

I send you the remarks which the editor of The Mertin has been pleased to publish, being a witness of the fact, and deserving credit above his contemporaries for his veracity and impartiality. Although some choose to give the glory to the "thunder and lightning," rather than to the God of heaven, yet the children of God will give their Father the praise due. The miraculousness of the case, so far from diminishing by their alleged cause, appears to me far more miraculous; for the idea of the "electric fluid's" waiting in anxious suspence, as it were, to watch this man's course for eight years, in different parts of the world—waiting until he should have found out the Saints in Wales, believed their doctrines, gone down into the water, and waited until the sacred ordinance was performed, before it would dare or please to confer the blessing, is marvellous indeed! A miracle without a parallel! Why not influence him five minutes, days, months, or years before? or why not wait longer after that unparalleled epoch in his existence? God has chosen to manifest his power in many instances to my knowledge through his ordinances; but in this instance our enemies admit him a God of miracles through the use of the "electric fluid," which element none but God can control! Thus they make the case far more miraculous, in my estimation, by trying to deny it. But now, read the facts referred to:—

"EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE.—During the night of Friday week. (Sept. 22, 1848.) between the hours of eleven and twelve, a very extraordinary occurrence took place in Newport. A young man named Reuben Brinkworth was, in 1840, at Bermuda, on board the Terror, Commodore Franklin, in the Arctic expedition, when, in the midst of a storm of thunder and lightning, he was suddenly deprived of both hearing and speech; and in this deplorable condition returned to Stroud, in England, of which place he was a native. He has since been residing with Mr. Naish, basket maker, Market-street, Newport, who, with several other persons, is attached to the community of people known as 'Mormons.' Persons of this denomination have been able to communicate their doctrines to Brinkworth, by means of writing, signs, and the finger alphabet. His sad condition, they allege, excited their sympathy for his spiritual as well as temporal welfare; and their doctrines made very considerable impression upon him—perhaps, more especially, because their creed was, that God did perform miracles in these days as he did in the days of old, and a miracle might be wrought in his favor. On Friday night week, the young man was suddenly seized with a kind of fit, in which he continued some time; and on his recovery, he was called upon, by sight, to believe in the Savior, that the healing power of God might be exercised in his behalf. He was, moreover, earnestly entreated to be baptized; but this was very strongly opposed by a person in the room. The deaf and dumb man, however, signified his acquiescence—he was taken to the canal and baptized in the name of our Savior; and immediately on coming up out of the water, he cried out, 'Thank the Lord, I can speak and hear again, as well as any of you!' He now speaks fluently and hears distinctly; which marvellous circumstance is attributed to the power of Providence by the friends of the young man; who called at our office with him and gave us the details. We have heard from another source that this happy change in the young man's condition is supposed to have been produced by the action upon him of the electric fluid during the thunder storm of Friday night. We shall not take upon ourselves to decide the matter."

The young man referred to has been ordained to the priesthood, and has been preaching with great success ever since. He hears as distinctly, and speaks as fluently as ever he did, and more so. In connexion with this "miracle" is another not less marvellous to me, that is, that it has had a tendency to make many believe and obey the Gospel! The reverse is the effect produced upon the human mind in general; but this instance has caused many to be baptized; proving that "there is no rule without some exception."

From your affectionate brother in Chirst"

CORN.—Mr. Elijah B. Gaylord in the south part of the county, said to us that he deposited a quantity of corn with some man in Carterville for us—did not deliver it here because the high water had swept off the bridge and it would not allow his team to pass. We have enquired diligently, and can find no corn there. If any one has it, we would be glad that he would inform us.

If a man is too poor to take a newspaper, how many dogs can he afford to keep?

Flour! Flour!!

Our farmers who have wheat, had better get it flourred, and have the best quality of it put up in good sacks containing about 50 pounds each, and bring it to this market forthwith. Should they not be able to sell it immediately on bringing it here, they can store it with us and we will sell it for them at a small commission. Let the name of the owner be legibly written on the sacks, also the number of pounds which each sack contains—and the quality of the flour, whether from Spring or Fall wheat, particularly if it is to be left with us for sale. If farmers expect to get cash for their flour, they must have it on hand here without delay.

By the advice and request of Elder Wm. Snow, Pres't. of the High Priest's quorum, we notify the Saints that Samuel Swarner is dis-fellowshipped from the Church for drunkenness, profanity, and other gross and immoral conduct.

Gold Adventurers.

There are many men here from Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and from various other parts. They are generally fine looking men; hale and hardy, well raised apparently, and above the medium of society in general. They appear to be fitted out with good mule and ox teams and substantial wagons. One company, called the "Dowdle Family," consisting of twenty-one persons, and not a single Dowdle in the mess, have just arrived here from Indiana, Illinois and Michigan. They are sufferers by the wreck of the steamer Dahcota, as well as many others destined for the "Gold regions." We learn that the few Mormons that were on board, were the greatest sufferers by this wreck on account of their goods being principally stowed away in the hold aft; among whom was the family of our foreman printer. The stern of the boat is lowest and the the ladies cabin under water, and the river rising.

The following letter brings to us sad news. Did this company leave St. Louis pursuant to the counsel given them? Why do men send their families without coming with them? This is a new country and a man should come with his family and see to their location himself. But an accident has befallen our friends. We will help them according to our ability. As another boat was hourly expected along for this place, we delayed sending teams after them until Monday, thinking they would get upon the next boat and come up to our landing.

LAND OF NOD, April 25, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER: We are a total wreck with a great loss of property and one child. The steamboat Dahcota was wrecked to-day, about 18 miles below Fort Kearney, Nichtenabotna township, you will please send us some teams, as we are on the river bank without provisions or means of transportation, the teams will come to the narrows of the Nichtenabotna and Missouri river, thence down the Missouri river four miles to Mr. Thomas Hughes. The following are the names:

Col. C. M. Johnson, John Murry and family, Henry Boley, Elizabeth Johnson, Peter Lacock, Mrs. Mary Ann Gooch and child, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Crombie, (widow;) Sarah Worsley wife of John Worsley and six children; Charles Nowlan and family, Jared Graham, John Fotheringham and family, Thomas Binnel, Joshua Grant and family, Emeline Mangum (widow) and Child, Wm. Benn and family, Edward Reeves and family, Robert Miller, G. P. Dykes.

DIED,

At St. Francis, MARTHA E. MERRITT, infant daughter of Josiah and Aceneth Merritt, the 25th of April, aged nine months and three days.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WAR! WAR!! WAR!!!

THE subscriber having purchased the old stand of HORACE BURGESS, situated on Little Pigeon, is now prepared to sell goods in his line: such as dry goods, groceries, &c., a little cheaper than they are sold at any other place in the upper country. Of course, he claims a share of the patronage of a liberal public.

IMPORTANT TO FARMERS.

THE subscribers respectfully inform the Farmers of Buchanan county and adjoining country that they will put in operation at the Steam mills on Main street, one set of double wool carding machines, and will be ready to commence carding by the 20th of April.

Mr. Buell, a workman of thirty years experience, will give his personal attention, throughout the season, to the business—customers may rely on having their work well done and at short notice. The machinery will be propelled by steam, day and night all the season. Persons living at a distance may depend upon having their rolls to take home with them.

Terms—As reasonable as at any factory in the country; all damage done to rolls, will be paid for, if the wool is in good order. One pound of clean oil or lard to eight pounds of wool, will be required from those who wish to furnish their own.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 1849.

☞ Notice.—All communications addressed to the Editor, must be post-paid to receive attention.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time; but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

☞ Help the Cause.—If every subscriber for the GUARDIAN will make it his business to procure, at least, one more subscriber, he will confer a favor on us, and contribute to the advancement of the cause. If he can procure five, ten, or more new subscribers, the favor to us and the cause we advocate will be increased in like ratio. Will you undertake it? New subscribers can be furnished with back numbers if they wish.

☞ Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. These nicely enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and on receipt will be responded to forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, or to Pisga, Garden Grove, or to the Valley of the Mississippi by way of any of the above places, will do us a great favor by calling on us before they leave. If they could let us know a day or two before they leave, they would give us a little time to prepare a mail.

SAD AFFAIR.—On Saturday evening last, a lamentable affair occurred near this town. A young boy was ploughing in a field with an ox team, and a little before night, he quit work, put his cattle on to a wagon and started for home. His older brother was in the field ploughing with a horse team. An Old Countryman bound for the "Gold Regions" from Galena, by the name of Joseph McVaugh or McVey, met the boy and forcibly took his oxen and wagon from him, telling him that he could not have that team any longer, and drove them off.

The young boy ran and told his older brother of it, upon which he mounted one of his horses and rode with all speed after the thief or robber, having an iron bolt in his hand. He rode about a mile and a half, and overtook McVaugh near Maginhises', headed the cattle and struck McVaugh on the head with the iron bolt or rod. Several persons saw the whole operation. McVaugh fell immediately, and Hatch took his oxen and wagon, turned them about and drove home. Two or three surgeons were immediately called, and upon examination, found his skull badly broken. He died on Sunday morning.

The community are much excited against Hatch. It was a severe and horrid retribution, it is true: But what would almost any spirited man do to a stranger who should forcibly take a yoke of cattle and wagon from his little boy and drive them off? It is said that he was drunk, and that he has had fits, and is sometimes deranged, or nearly so. If this is true, his friends should not trust him to go out alone, for strangers cannot appreciate any such circumstances when they know nothing of them. One would naturally conclude, that if a man was reckless and daring enough to rob a boy of a yoke of oxen and wagon in the street, he must be armed and prepared to defend them, and the pursuer would naturally try to get the first blow. We do not feel to sanction any such dreadful affair, still we are unwilling to see a prejudice and an excitement arising against Hatch that may deprive him of Justice.

The prosecuting attorney has just informed us that legal measures are being taken to investigate the affair.

Any body may read this.

Every person that will rent or sell a house and claim in the county north of Keg Creek had better advertise forth with in the Guardian. This will be a great advantage to those who wish to sell and to those who wish to buy. It will save time, trouble and expense, and help the printer too.

William Muir of this county was a few days since taken into custody by the sheriff for passing counterfeit money in St. Joseph, Missouri. But as the law of Iowa had not been violated, he was dismissed for want of legal jurisdiction. He was notified by the Bishop that charges were preferred against him before he left the room—was brought to trial before the church authorities, found guilty and dis-fellowshipped from the church. He said he received the money in good faith for his mules that he sold there, but did not know the man's name to whom he sold them. Yet it appeared that one "Alf Hawes," and Jim Hillman," were very friendly and interested about the mule trade. He was asked, coming up from Missouri, if he knew from whom he received the money; he said that he did. He was told then that he should go directly back and get good money. He replied, that he did not care any thing about it. He would pass off the money any-how, and tried to get others to pass it off for him by offering them a heavy per cent. or commission.

If he wishes to take any step towards redemption, let him send good money in place of the trash that he peddled off, as a preliminary to repentance: but if he wishes to advertise himself as a confirmed villain, let him pass out of the country without making good the wrong, and we will give him credit for what he does do and for what he don't do.

We will publish any man's name in any future number of the Guardian, and mail a copy of it to his friends in any part of the world that he may direct, for one dime, if he will leave us his name and the address of his friends.

Keep a close mouth in the presence of him that is curious to know all the particulars of your affairs.

ACCIDENT.—Thos. Walker, from Keokuk, accidentally shot himself at Dodge's Point, about 70 miles east of Pisga. His gun was charged with buck shot and went off while he was getting into the wagon after something. The contents entered his right breast and passed out through the abdomen. He was for the Gold Regions, but has suddenly gone to other and unknown regions.

The person who is over anxious to possess your secret will be pretty certain to use it to your disadvantage, at some time or in some way, should you disclose it to him.

ARMY GENERAL ORDERS.

General Orders, No. 19. WAR DEPARTMENT ADJ'T GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, March 15, 1849.

I. To carry out the provisions of the 6th Sections of the Act of May 19, 1846, relative to establishing military posts on the Oregon route, and to afford protection to the numerous emigrants to that country and California, the first station has already been established, under instructions of the Secretary of War, of June 1, 1849, on the Platte River, near Grand Island, and is known as Fort Kearny. The garrison of this post will be one company 1st Dragoons and two companies 6th Infantry, to be designated by the commander of the Department.

Under the same instructions of the Secretary of War, it now becomes necessary to establish the second station at or near Fort Laramie, a trading station, belonging to the American Fur Company. The garrison of this post will be two companies of the Regiment of Mounted Riflemen, to be halted on the route, and one company 6th Infantry.

In the further fulfilment of the requirements of the Act of May, 19, 1846, the march of the Rifle Regiment to Oregon during the ensuing season is deemed the proper occasion for establishing a third post on the route to and through that Territory. From the best information on the subject, it is supposed the most eligible point for this third station in the N. W. chain of posts may be found somewhere on Bear River or its tributaries, near enough to the settlements in the vicinity of Salt Lake to obtain with facility such supplies of subsistence and forage as they may afford. The trading establishment at Fort Hall, on the upper waters of the Columbia River, has also been considered an advantageous position. The instructions to Brevet Major General Twiggs, commanding the 6th military Department, charge that officer with giving the necessary directions upon the subject.

II. Fort Atkinson being no longer required for military purposes, the garrison has already been withdrawn.

Fort Crawford, being also no longer required the commanding officer of the 6th Department has been authorized to withdraw the companies composing the garrison, and to assign them to such stations on the frontiers as he may judge expedient. The quarters and other public property pertaining to the Post will be dispensed of by the responsible department of the staff.

III. Article 72 "Regulations for the Ordnance Department," (the same as paragraph 891, of "General Regulations for the army," edition of 1841,) is amended by substituting the following:

One complete set of arms and accoutrements of each description may, if the state of the public supplies will permit, be issued to any officer of the army for his own use, and no others, on his payment of the cost price thereof to the issuing officer.

By order: R. JONES, Adj't. Gen'l.

LATE FROM NEW ORLEANS—DEATHS FROM CHOLERA.—The steamer Iowa arrived Thursday the 12th inst. from New Orleans, bringing a heavy cargo and four hundred and fifty one deck passengers, principally English, and the most of them Mormons. The Iowa left New Orleans on the morning of the 5th inst. Her officers report the Cholera on the decrease, no deaths having been reported at the Charity Hospital for two days previous to her leaving. The health of the city had improved, as it was supposed, from a purification of the atmosphere; heavy rains, attended with thunder and lightning, having fallen on the 3d and 4th inst.

At Vicksburg the Iowa lost one deck passenger overboard, name not known. On the passage up nine deaths occurred from Cholera. Seven among the deck passengers and two of the crew, one of the latter was Mr. George S. Welch, a pilot of the boat, the other a deck hand. On the arrival of the boat at this port there were quite a number sick, but none thought to be dangerously so. Those indisposed were affected with diarrhœa, and similar symtoms attended upon a change of water and climate. The effects of Cholera having disappeared gradually as the boat made her way up the river into a milder and more healthy climate.

We have since learned that three deaths took place among the passengers on board the steamer Iowa the night after she reached this port. Yesterday the throng, four hundred and fifty, were leaving the boat as fast as they could obtain their baggage and moveables, and it is to be hoped that the disease with which they were affected, will entirely disappear after their dispersal.

KANESVILLE, Aptil 27, 1849.

FRIEND HYDE: The election of a Whig Judge in the Fifth Judicial District may be regarded by the leaders of the Democratic party in the western part of this State as a rebuke upon their former conduct, and a declaration on the part of those who have hitherto followed them, that they are no longer worthy of their support and confidence. The people of this State are all familiar with the miserable chicanery made use of by the dominant party in the Legislature last winter when the district was formed; but they are not informed in regard to the extent of the wrong committed; The Whigs in estimating the number of those who were thereby deprived of the writ of Habeas Corpus and the right of trial by a jury, thought there must be about five thousand; but subsequent facts have shown that even their estimate was much too small. It is now ascertained beyond a doubt, that in one of the organized counties in this State between eight and nine thousand inhabitants, and upwards of three thousand voters are unjustly deprived of the right of trial by their peers, and the writ of Habeas Corpus,—rights which were by Magna Charta granted to English subjects more than five centuries ago,—and which have been secured to the people of this Government not only by the Constitution of the United States but by the Constitutions of all the different States in the Union.

This bold assumption of the vested rights of a part of the citizens of this State may be recorded as the first attempt of the kind, in the annals of American Legislation. But the failure has proven as signal, as the attempt was bold and daring. Wm. McKay (Whig) has been elected to the judgeship by a majority of 23 votes, his majority was considerably larger, but between forty and fifty of the votes given in Clark county were rejected in consequence of their religious tenets, as we suppose, knowing of no other reason why they should have been. This success of the Whigs in electing their candidate in a district which has heretofore been strongly democratic, and that too when party lines were closely drawn, is the first great step taken by an honest and intelligent people to overthrow a party in this State, who have acquired their strength by lobbying about the halls of legislation for office, which, when once obtained, is converted into a machine for making servants of the people, instead of they themselves acting as the servants of those who have elevated them to posts of trust and responsibility. I have had the pleasure of a few month's acquaintance with Maj. McKay—have found him a moral high-minded man, and a sound Lawyer, a man well qualified to fill the ofice of Judge.

BELLEVUE, (Upper Mo.) April 16th. '49.

MR. EDITOR: I was present at your Conference, (Sunday, 8th)—was much pleased with the exercises and order of your meeting; I was especially pleased with your remarks about persons frequenting the grocery, while attending meeting, I thought them very appropriate, as I witnessed some ten men in a whisky sink, near the creek in your flourishing village, drinking, carousing and taking the name of Him in vain, who created them for some better end. But alas! Some were even seen going from the grocery, to the place where God was worshipped, who sadly mistook their aim; for any rational person knows the spirit of God will not dwell with the spirit of rum. I also witnessed some six or eight boys desecrating the Holy Sabbath, by profane swearing, carousing, &c. I pitied them from the bottom of my heart, I pity their parents or guardians also. who we hope have taught them better than to violate the Lords Day in such a disgraceful manner. We hope "for their own good at least," that they will desist from such conduct, now, before it be forever too late.

A TRUE FISH STORY.—I saw a man a few days since, chasing a fish in the prairie, half a mile from the Missouri river, which would weigh ten or twelve pounds, after running the fish some little time without catching it, returned to his wagon for his ox whip, with which he succeeded in killing. Your readers may think this a fish story indeed, but it is nevertheless true. From Saturday evening (7th,) to Monday morning, the Missouri river rose between four and five feet. Monday morning the river was literally filled with flood-wood, ice, and occasionally a dead buffalo, which caused no small stir among the Indians at Bellevue, running almost any hazard to obtain the carcass, three of which they succeeded in getting on Monday, two Tuesday and one Wednesday. The animals had lost most of their hair, and was somewhat tainted, but were none the less delicious, for an Indian's taste supersedes his smell; consequently his nose is no trouble to him where there is tainted meat, for their stomach is similar to that of a dog's.

The Pawnees have lately arrived at their village, came in very poor, have but few buffalo robes, and a scanty subsistence, having neither meat nor corn—with the exception of a few bushels which they are trying to reserve for planting. The traders have carried some corn to them to trade robes, they subsist on wild potatoes and peas, and those not being plenty, afford but a scanty allowance for six thousand souls.

Their agent has purchased a quantity of corn, which they expect to receive soon, but it will be but a trifle among so many. It is to be hoped that the Indians may soon be induced to bury the tomahawk, and become cultivators of their beautiful soil and yet be restored to the privileges of their ancient fathers and Israel's God be their God.

The republican band of Pawnees have had an engagement (the winter past,) with the Socks, in which nine Pawnees and seven Socks are said to have been killed. Two principle chiefs of the Pawnees were killed. Some five or six others have been killed from the severity of the winter. The Pawnees have lost most of their horses, consequently they will steal more, for they have but a trifle to buy with. PHILETUS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE HERMANN.

NEW YORK, April 13.

The steamer Hermann arrived to-day, having sailed from Southampton on the evening of the 26th ult. She brought a very valuable freight, and 120 passengers.

CONTINENTAL AFFAIRS.—The amount of gold received by the different mercantile houses of London, from the mines of California, had already amounted to about 40,000 pounds sterling—nearly $200,000.

All the efforts used by the governments of France and Great Britain to renew the armistice between Austria and Sardinia had failed. Hostilities would therefore, recommence, and the war would be prosecuted with great vigor by both parties. The sympathies of the European powers were strongly enlisted in favor of the Italians. It was feared, however, that Charles Albert would be forced to succumb to his more powerful enemy. The Austrian army numbers ten thousand men, and already a direct attack upon Turin was meditated.

The latest accounts from Hungary state that the Imperialists were not making much headway against the Magyars, but that, recently, success had crowned the efforts of the latter party

The proposal to appoint the Emperor of Russia Emperor of Germany, was rejected by the Frankfert Parliament.

A formidable insurrection had broken out in Calabria, and it was with great difficulty that the king of Naples retained his seat on the throne.

Fears were still entertained of the Royalists and Communists. Great military preparations, however, have been made to preserve the peace.

The French Government had received a Telegraphic dispatch announcing that, on the 20th ult., the Sardinian army had crossed the Tecino in three divisions. On the 21st, the Austrian army had crossed the same river, after experiencing some slight resistance. It was supposed that King Charles Albert would be forced to recross the river, and that a great battle would be fought on the plains of Vercelli. A French expedition of twelve thousand men were ready to start at a moment's warning, should the Austrians set foot within the Pontifical dominions.

PHILADELPHIA, April 10—12 M.

FROM CALIFORNIA.—By an arrival at Boston, we learn that Gen. PERSIFER F. SMITH (the Governor of California) and suite, had arrived at San Francisco. The previous accounts about the quantities of gold are confirmed.

THE NISBET ROBBERY.—Mr. COUZINS and his party returned (April 13th) to the city, having in custody the two men arrested on the Wabash, as being concerned in the robbery of NISBET & Co's Banking House. They were lodged in jail, and will undergo an examination hereafter.

Yesterday, Mr. NISBET received a telegraphic dispatch from his correspondent in Cincinnati, which puts an entirely different face upon the developments there; at least, as to the amount recovered. The fellow, CONNELLY, supposed to be a partner in the robbery, had been arrested, and on his person about $1,000 were found. In the trunk, obtained from Newport, there were only $1,400, instead of $17,000, as stated in the newspapers; so that, by this haul, only about $2,400 were obtained. The whole amount recovered up to the present time is a little less than $9,000. In the trunk, we learn, the sleeve of young NISBET's coat was found, and some papers, bags, &c. which would enable him to identify the money, or, at least, connect CONNELLY with the robbery. CONNELLY was in custody, and if the rogue's sovereign remedy in these days, the habeas corpus, was not interposed, the younger NISBET would reach Cincinnati in time to hold him, and send him back to this city for trial.

All the developments in this case, show how cautious the administrators of the law should be, in dealing with suspicious characters.

PROVISION STORE.

THE undersigned takes this opportunity to return thanks to his old customers in Kanesville and its vicinity, for their liberal patronage the past season. He still solicits a continuance of the same; as he intends to keep constantly on hand all kinds of PROVISION, especially Meat and Flour of different kinds. He has also made arrangements from down the river, for any quantity of good superfine flour, that may be wanted by emigrants going West this season, which will be sold on the most reasonable terms. Please call and examine, before purchasing elsewhere. [m7 3m] ABEL LAMB.

ROPE MAKING.

REUBEN W. ALLRED, has erected an extensive Rope-walk at Council Point, directly on the river, near the emigrant landing; and is prepared to supply merchants, citizens, and emigrants with all kinds of rope and cordage, from a fish line to a cable. Rope of various kinds constantly on hand, and manufactured to order. He solicits the patronage of a generous and liberal public. m21 3m

GUNSMITHING.

THE subscriber is prepared to manufacture, to order, improved Fire-arms, viz: revolving rifles and pistols; also slide guns, from 5 to 25 shooters. All on an improved plan, and he thinks not equalled this far East. (Father west they might be.) The emigrating and sporting community are invited to call and examine Browning's improved fire-arms before purchasing elsewhere. Shop eight miles south of Kanesville on Musquito Creek, half a mile south of TRADING POINT.

More proof that

SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP

Will effectually cure the Fever and Ague.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, O., March 16, 1848.

Sir:—I am entirely out of the Tonic Syrup. Please send me some as soon as you can conveniently.

I have met with very good success in the use of your medicine. I believe it has cured in every case.

Respectfully yours,

O. B. BEEBE.

TROY, Ia., August 16, 1847.

Having used in my own family, Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, for the cure of ague and fever, or chills and fever, as well as having sold in my neighborhood, upwards of sixty bottles within the last two months, I take great pleasure in stating, that in no case has it failed to effect a speedy cure, either in ague or fever, or chills and fever; and I sincerely recommend it to my friends and the public, as one of the most effectual and innocent remedies that I have ever known used.

R. BATES, P. M.

JEFFERSON CO., Ky., Aug. 4, 1848.

This is to certify that I was afflicted last Summer with ague and fever, and had then had it for three years, and during that time I despaired of ever getting well. I was induced to get Smith's Tonic Syrup, or Vegetable Febrifuge, and by using two bottles I was entirely restored to my usual good health, and have continued so up to this time; I therefore do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and the public, as the most effectual and innocent remedy that has ever came to my knowledge.

The Frontier Guardian.

POETRY.

For the Frontier Guardian.

The Saints.

We go to the land that is far in the West,
To the home of the Saints, with the pure and the blest,
Where the mountains are high, and the valleys are green,
Where Summer, and Spring, are continually seen.
There we'll live in ourhouses like birds in the rock,
Secure from the wirlwinds, and tempests, that shock
The world of the wicked who've driven us out,
With all their authority, mobbers, and rout.
To this Western forest, 'mong savages wild,
The poor, and the sick, with the widow and child,
"Now entire your destruction," these mobbers will say,
"We have driven you out, from Caldwell and Clay.
"But now the wild Indians, will kill you, and more
"For the sake of your plunder, as we did before;
"So, courage, my friends, and soon we'll be blest,
The world from the Mormons will soon be at rest."
But while they're exulting with joy, for our fall,
We trust in the Lord, who redeems us from all
The snares, and the gins, they have laid for our feet,
Will surely entrap them, whenever they meet.
The deeds they have done, stand in dreadful 'array,
To meet them with vengeance, at God's judgment day,
They're sleeping, and dreaming, and fearing no ill,
But trouble shall come, without measure by gill,
Like a thief in the night, it shall come unaware
And seal their destruction, despite of long prayers.
While on mountains we live in glory and peace,
For Zion shall prosper, and spread, and increase.
The light of the Lord her glory shall be;
While his face, the loved Saints, continually see;
Her bulwarks, and towers—are moulded from themee.
Look forward, ye Saints, with joy to that day,
And love one another, while you watch and you pray.
The cup is now filled and judgment is come,
While we cross lore the mountains, to Zion our Home.

Kanesville, April, 1849. S.

MISCELLANY.

The Man who was Suspicious.

A TALE WITH A MORAL.

In a recent number of an English magazine we find the following excellent sketch, written by Alfred Crowquill. Our limits will not permit us to give the long and less interesting introduction; but will simply say, that a moderately wealthy, but very happy and contented, country gentleman has gathered his family and friends around a bright and ruddy fire on Christmas Eve, and, in accordance with his long-established custom, relates the following story:

"You all know the sheep-sheds in our lower croft, by Windy Gap," said he. "Before I built those sheds, when it first came into my possession, I had often endeavored to reclaim it: but after many vain attempts I gave the obstinate bit up in despair, and put it to its present use. It is a desolate-looking nook, and in its appearance carries out to a miracle the scenes of happiness enacted upon its site.

"William Mawby was born there, of parents well to do in the world, with every thing about their farm in a thriving state. As a mere child, he was of a peevish, solitary nature. This I have heard from good authority; for I only became acquainted with him as I entered my first school, and he was just on the point of leaving it.

"Consequently, when I returned home for good to my parents' roof he was a grown man, and I a mere stripling. As so short a distance divided his father's farm from ours, I soon fell over him, and renewed our acquaintance. His occupation was a foreshadowing of his miserable character: he was diligently inspecting a hedge that divided a close from the main road. He thought that he had discovered evident traces of some one having passed into the field through the said hedge.

"I laughed at his wise and serious face, drawn into a look of profound wisdom for so trifling an occasion.

"'My young friend,' said he, 'men are ruined by trifles. It is not the broken hedge I value; but I suspect the trespasser passed through that gap upon some unlawful purpose: but I'll be even with them now my suspicions are aroused.'

"With that he tapped the side of his nose, and went on his way most suspiciously uncomfortable.

"The next day, to the amusement of the village, a large board appeared staring over the hedge, with the announcement of all sorts of penalties and spring-guns to the unwary trespassers. His old father was a merry-hearted, plain old man, who never put himself under the infliction of doubts; for he believed that men were all pretty considerable honest, as the world went, and he had not the slightest idea that he was better than anybody else; consequently, he smoked his pipe in calm contentment, and let the world wag.

"His suspicious son soon disturbed his blissful equanimity; for, much to his annoyance, he found padlocks placed upon things that had hitherto been open to all. His neighbor had to wait for his glass of ale while he found his son, and his son found the key; for he, the contriver, was not always sure where he had hidden it.

"Poor William's principal torment was his suspicion of his father. His lynx-eyes soon fathomed the soft, easy temper of his parent, and saw a thousand ways wherein his disposition might be turned to account by the cunning dealers on market-days, when the ale was uppermost at their simple friendly dinners, in which the old man delighted, and which it had been difficult to wean him from,—as, although yielding and good-natured, he was too tough and independent to be dictated to by any body. Another painful thorn in his side was an aged aunt, to whom the old man took a well-stored weekly basket. She lived on a small stipend in the market-town. She had two daughters. The old man often took his sobering cup of tea with them on his return. He might leave them something comfortable. The thought was tormenting.

"His suspicion carried him every market day to dodge his father, with the show of the most sincere affection; which the unsuspicious old man, with his heart glad, reported to his plain, simple dame, who rejoiced with him over their imagined treasure.

"He was at this time about eight-and-twenty, and, dodge as he would, he could not escape a pair of bright eyes and rosy cheeks that caught him in the before-mentioned market-town on one of his suspicious visits.

"He soon scraped an acquaintance, after having by great assiduity found out that her father was a retired miller, of good fortune, and that she was an only child. He thought this a safe investment. His position and appearance soon gained permission to continue his visits; which were, in fact, continual, for he was always under the apprehension that when the cat is away the mice will play, and that some other might snap up his valuable mouse. He did not feel quite assured as to the old man's positive possessions, so made it his business in a thousand tortuous ways to make inquiries.

"This could not go on so quietly, but it at last reached the old miller's ears, who good-naturedly put it down to the young man's prudent foresight; but, on inquiry, he discovered that it proceeded from a doubt of his respectability and veracity. The miller was a shrewd old man, and determined, before it was too late, to find out whether the young suitor might not be wanting in some of the qualities he thought necessary for the girl's happiness.

"The old banker was a chum of the miller's, through whose instrumentality he had invested large sums in excellent mortgages. He allowed himself to be pumped by Mawby, with connivance of the miller; and, consequently, by winking replies to his inquiries, made out, the miller be little less than insolvent.

"William's affection sank down to zero, although it had for months been burning, according to his own account, like two or three Etnas combined. His suspicions, then, were true. What an escape! thought he. So it was, for the fortunate girl. He proceeded to his intended-one's house. It being dark, he crept over the garden-palings, and sneaked up towards the shutter. Here he vainly attempted to peep through the crevices. Here, while endeavoring to make out a murmured conversation, in which he thought he heard his own name mentioned, he was pinned by the miller's dog, who, poor brute! was cursed with the youth's fault of suspicion, and suspecting that he was a thief, had seized him accordingly. Here was rather an awkward denouement, and he had no right there; the path to the door lay another way. In his anxiety he had trampled down the flower bed. He stammered out some excuse upon his release, and departed home crest-fallen, hoping that they did not suspect his suspicions.

"The next morning he received a polite note from the miller, begging him 'not to repeat his visits, as the dog appeared to have taken a sudden dislike to him, in which he was joined by himself and his daughter. At the same time, to ease his mind as to the state of their affairs, he begged to say that any respectable young man, who pleased his daughter's taste, might have ten thousand down on the wedding-day, and as much more at his death.'

"For once William suspected right, viz: that he had made a sad fool of himself.

Not many months after this, he lost his simple minded mother. Her death gave him plenty of exercise for his miserable fault—for he was continually laying traps for the servants, as if they had been so many mice, to catch them out in their little peculations, until his espionage made all around him so uncomfortable that many of the old domestics left the farm in disgust.

"Whenever he met me he was full of some deeply laid plan to find out some miserable suspected one, and often in the midst of his self-sufficient tale, he would start off on a sudden without any apology, because a suspicion had flashed across his mind that he had not locked his corn-bin or preserve cup-board before he left home.

"His whole occupation seemed to be to find out things that would make him uncomfortable. The food preserved for his own table he constantly dotted or nicked, that he might see, upon their being brought to table again, whether any one had ventured to purloin the smallest particle.

"He had the habit of laying straws in key-holes, that would be displaced upon the slightest attempt to insert a key, and discover the intended thief. I have known him walk to a considerable distance, and then return and push the door, to assure himself that the lock had shot.

"He once got in his own trap. One night late he had an engagement to go to some neighboring dance, so he sent all the servants to bed, and locked the back and front door, and to make all secure, hid the ponderous key. On his return he could not for the life of him think of the hiding place; he therefore had some hours to walk up and down in the night air before day dawn, when the imprisoned servants discovered him feeling about in hencoops and under thatches for the missing key. At last his hiding place struck his memory, and he had the mortification of withdrawing it before the tittering servants, who thus discovered his suspicions, and the retribution on himself in his long night-watch.

"His father, who had now grown too aged to attend to the farm, left it entirely under his control. Here his suspicions had nearly finished him off—for he suspected, during his harvest, that his shocks were pulled and robbed in the night. He therefore hired a clown to sit up as a watchman, armed, with an old double-barreled gun loaded with slugs. The first night his suspicions would not let him sleep. This watchman might be bribed to connivance, and he get laughed at. He was soon dressed and creeping along the hedge, where his suspicions were verified by hearing low murmuring voices. He crawled close in their vicinity, and there discovered that it was the poor fellow's wife, who had brought him something comfortable for his supper. He crept back cautiously, but stumbling over the root of a tree, roused the attention of the watchman, who challenged him immediately. He lay still for a moment, hoping he should escape observation in the darkness of the night, but upon his first attempt to raise himself, he received about a dozen slugs in his arm and back, for his watchman was a better shot than he suspected. The picking out of these by the village surgeon was a positive satisfaction to the many to whom his character had become pretty well known.

"Thus he went on, until his father's death left him entirely alone, for his suspicious mind never allowed him to form a friendship, which can only be true and valuable where there is mutual confidence and an openness of character. He, by his suspicious nature, had locked himself within himself, which is the most fearful of imprisonments.

"His father's wealth enabled him to please his fancy—so to set his mind at ease, he sold the farm, that he might, as he thought, be freed from a host of pilferers. He built himself a house, in the croft I mentioned at the beginning of the tale, the very prototype of himself. It had a most suspicious look—it had but one door, but windows were place so that he could see all that was going on on every side.

"He had only one domestic, an old cripple without relation, who was too lame to go out, and of course had no visiters. It was well known in the neighborhood that he had withdrawn large sums from the different country bankers, where it had been invested by his father, and it was strongly believed that he kept it it in the house, as he suspected that these speculative gentlemen might one fine morning turn out to be insolvent. His walks were confined to within sight of his solitary mansion, the precincts of which he was never known to leave as age crept on him, but wandered about like an unquiet spirit around his self-imposed tomb.

"In the course of time his old domestic was conveyed to the village churchyard, much less solitary than the abode which she had left.

"For a moment the old man stood and gazed after the bearers, his white hair blown about by the cold wintry wind, and his shrivelled hand shading his eyes. He turned slowly from the sight and closed the door.

"Many were the kind offers from the simple people of the village; but all offers he resolutely declined, as he suspected that his age and wealth were calculated upon to a nicety, and a thumping legacy looked forward to as the reward of some trifling attention. Distant relations began to hover round him and make tender inquiries. These he always met on the door-step, which was his only audience-chamber for such callers.

"That solitary old man sat, as long as daylight lasted, at a window overlooking the high road. Here he passed his life in reading and watching. The same window showed a light burning during the hours of darkness, for he always appeared on his guard, as upon any person approaching nearer than usual to the premises, his ears were saluted by the deep growl of his dog, which never left the house any more than his master.

"About two years after the decease of his house-keeper, the nightly light was missed from the window, for it had become quite a guide to many coming to the village. This of course caused some of the more curious to approach the house in the daylight, and reconnoitre. But there sat the solitary, apparently deeply occupied with his book, and also the dog peering through the glass. This satisfied them and they departed.

"A week had elapsed, and the village was alarmed by the appearance of Mawby's dog careering in a wild manner through the village. Upon being noticed, he sped back to the croft. Many followed him, and upon approaching the house and looking up at the window, they perceived the old man still sitting unmoved, although the glass frame had been smashed by the dog's exit. After repeated calls, which met with no attention, they forced their way into the house.

"Everything in the chamber was neat and comfortable. There sat the poor old man in his large arm-chair, dead and alone. Of what value were those riches now which had closed his heart against all the pleasures of this beautiful world, against the possession of wife, children, kindred, friends? There was no will, for he suspected the moment be made it in any one's favor, that would be his last moment of security. It therefore spread itself for more evil, and was split up into forty law-suits, for the benefit of every one but the rightful heirs."

GRAMMER.—"John, parse 'Girls are lovely.'"

"Girls is a common noun, third person, plural number, and objective case."

"Objective case?"

"No, Nominative case."

"Nominative to what verb?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Well, what follows girls?"

"John Dickson followed our girls what we've got to home, last Saturday afternoon."

"Oh! young man! Well I should suppose they were in the objective case."

No-sir-ree! When I seed 'em I should think they were in the possessive case, for he was huggin' 'em like thunder."

"POKER" IN CALIFORNIA.—A chap just from the "diggins" relates the following:

"Four persons had seated themselves in the mines to play a game of poker—the ante, as a substitute for money, being a handful of gold dust. They continued playing for sometime without either side winning much. At length one of the party; who had a good hand, went a handful "better." "I see that, and go a pint better," cried out another, who also had a stronger "hand,—" "I see that," responded the first, "and go a quart better," "Well, I see that, and go you a gallon better," responded the second. This rather disconcerted his adversary for a moment, as "oversizing his pile." But confident in his superior strength of hand, he collected together all the gold dust he had left, and puting it aside, coolly remarked to one of his companions: "Here Jim, watch my pile until I go out and dig enough to call him."

CALIFORNIA GOLD GREASE.—A Yankee down East has invented this specific for the use of Gold seekers. The operator is to grease himself well, lay down on the top of a hill, and then roll to the bottom. The gold, and "nothing else," will stick to him. Price, $10 per box.

Love in a Printing Office.

I once heard an old jour remark, that a printing office was no place for love making, and I have since experienced the truth of his observation—being now perfectly convinced that the flower of love can never bloom in the midst of types, stands and printing ink.

It was my fortune once to sojourn for a few days in the village of ———. Directly opposite the office was a pretty white cottage, with a rose bush clambering around the casement, and I was not long in making the discovery that the aforesaid white cottage with the rose shading window, contained a fair inmate, a flower whose beauty far outshone the roses that clustered around the window. She was the belle of the village. Her name was Mary—sweet poetic Mary.

It was a beautiful summer morning, and I had raised the window to admit the cool breeze from the flower-decked fields, and it was not long before I perceived that the cottage window was also hoisted, and that a sweet little Mary was seated near it, busily engaged with her needle. I worked but little that morning. My eyes constantly wandered towards the cottage window where little Mary sat, and all sorts of strange fantastic notions whirled through my fancy-lightened brain, and I began to think I felt a slight touch of what the poets call love, sliding in at the corner of my heart.

A few days past away, and chance made me acquainted with Mary. O! she was a sweet creature—she had a form that would have shamed the famous Venus de Medicis—a check that out flashed the richest peach—and a lip that would have tempted a bee from its hive on a frosty morning. I thought, as I gazed on her in mute admiration, that I had never looked on one so exquisitely beautiful. She seemed the embodiment of all that is lovely and bewitching.

Well, time passed on, and one day Mary expressed a desire to visit the printing office. Gad, thought I, what a chance! I'll do it there, yes, there in the very midst of the implements of mine art—why should'nt I? Love in a printing office, eh! There was something original in that, and resolved to try it at all hazards.

Well, Mary came to the office, and I explained to her the use of the various implements of the black art—the press and roller, the ink and stand, and the boxes of the A. B. C's. I took an opportunity to snatch her pretty little white hand, she drew it back; knocked a stick-full of matter into "pi."

"I must have a kiss for that my sweet one," said I, and at it I went. I managed to twist my arm around her waist, and in struggling to free herself she upset a galley of editorial, a long article on the Oregon question. Nothing daunted, I made at her again. This time I was more successful, for I obtained a kiss. By St. Paul! it was a sweet one, and the little witch bore it like a martyr—she never screamed once; but as I raised my lips from hers, she lifted her delicate little hand and gave me a box on the car that made me see more stars than ever were viewed by Herschell through his big telescope. Somewhat nettled, and with my cheek smarting with pain, I again seized her waist, "well, if you don't like it, why then just take back the kiss." She made a desperate struggle, and as she jerked herself from my arms, her foot struck the lye-pot, and over it went.—Another galley of editorial was sprinkled over the floor, and in her effort to reach the door, her foot slipped and she fell, and in the effort to sustain herself, her hand—her lilly white hand—the same little hand that came in contact with my ears—oh, horrible!—was stuck by the elbow in the ink keg! Shade of Franklin! what a change came over the beauty of that hand! She slowly drew it from the keg, dripping with ink, and asked me what use I made of that tar! I began to be seriously alarmed, and apologised in the best manner I could, and to my surprise she seemed to be more pleased than angry—but "there was a lurking devil in her eye," that told me there was mischief afloat. As I stood surveying the black covering of her hand, scarcely able to suppress a laugh at its strange metamorphosis, she quickly raised it on high, and brought it down "kerslap" upon my cheek. Before I could recover from my surprise, the same little hand had again descended, and I again felt its inky imprint upon my cheek.

"Why, Mary," I exclaimed, "what are you about?"

"I think you told me you rolled ink in the face of the form," she replied with a loud laugh, and again her hand lit upon my face—taking me a broad slap in the very middle of my countenance, most wilfully bedaubing my eyes. With a light step and merry peal of laughter, she skipped through the door. She turned back when beyond my reach, and with a roguish face peering in the door-way, shouted—"I say, Charley, what kind of a roller does my hand make?"

"Oh," said I, "you take too much ink."

"Ha, ha!" she laughed, "well, good bye Charley, that's my impression, ha, ha, ha!"

I went to the glass and surveyed myself for a moment, and I verily believe I could have passed for a guinea negro without the slightest difficulty. "And so," said I this is love in a printing office. The devil fly away with such love!

The next morning when the editor came to the office, I rather calculate he found things a little topsy-turvy. However that made no difference to me—for I had mizzled long before daylight.

I bore the marks of that scene for many a day, and now when ever I see a lady entering a printing office, I think of little Mary and keep my eyes on the ink keg—and though she were as beautiful as Hebe, I would not venture to touch her with a ten foot pole.

Talk about love in a boudoir, love in a bower, love on a spring-seat sofa, love by moonlight, and I am with you heart and soul—but I pray you, by the ghost of Faust, never talk to me about love in a printing office.

FRAUDULENT LAND WARRANTS.—The New York Tribune, of Wednesday, 7th inst., is informed that in a great number of cases, two land warrants have been obtained in the name of the same soldiers, by fraudulent discharges. This being discovered, more than a thousand caveats have been issued by the Department, annulling the last warrants issued in each case, thus throwing the loss on the public who have bought these warrants in good faith. This course has disturbed public confidence in these warrants, as it is impossible to know whether any warrants will be acknowledged by the Department. Congress will probably be called upon to place the loss of these warrants where it rightfully belongs."

IMPORTANT INVENTION.—The Washington. Union says that a model of a locomotive, which the editor has examined, promises to be a most important invention, because it will enable the locomotive and train to overcome grades as steep as occur on ordinary turnpikes. To accomplish this object, the invention enables the engineer, by mechanical means, to supply any degree of adhesion which may be required at any instant, and to dispense with it, the moment he ceases to need it. And to do this, there are no rack-rails, or cogwheels, or centre-rail; nor is there, by this plan, as much resistance to the progress of the train as would be caused by adding weight to the engine, in order to produce the requisite adhesion. The effective power of an engine is now limited to the adhesion of its wheels to the rails, but by this invention the power of the engine is only limited by its capacity to generate and retain steam. This is very important.

OLD NEWSPAPERS.—The oldest living newspaper in England, is the Lincoln Mercury, first published in 1695. The oldest in London is the St. James Chronicle, of 1761. The oldest paper in Scotland is the Edinburg Evening Courant, of 1704. The oldest in Ireland, the Belfast News Letter, of 1787.

A POWERFUL LENS.—By the use of a powerful lens, the sun's rays may be concentrated into a heat far exceeding that produced by other usual means. Dr. Draper, of New York has one which will melt pebble stones, or cast iron, as easily as sealing wax is melted in a candle.

A DROP TOO MUCH.—The Brunswicker of the 24th ult. says: Last Saturday while tobacco was running up to three dollars and a half a hundred, a German farmer of this neighborhood named Meyer, sold his crop and being elated with his good success, drank freely. The night was one of the coldest during the season, and he was until morning finding his way home, when he presented the most pitiful sight, all his extremities being frozen, and his hands clenched and swollen till they had burst open and been battered and lacerated to the bone, he had fallen on them, every time he tumbled down, on the ice. His knees and face were also much torn and injured by his fall. He is not expected to survive.

A similar case has happened in the eastern part of the county. Two or three weeks ago a one-armed man named Cunningham was returning home drunk as usual from Keytesville, on a bitter cold night. When crossing the ice on the Chariton, some two miles from his house, he fell from his horse and was unable to mount again. He finally crawled home the next morning, all frozen and knocked to pieces, and died in a day or two.

CLERGYMAN MURDERED IN CALIFORNIA.—Among the private letters in this city from the Pacific by the Crescent City, is one, which we have seen, mentioning a painful rumor that Messrs. Newman and Pomeroy, clergymen of the Methodist and Baptist churches, had been murdered in the gold region. The letter is of the latest date, and comes from a highly respectable source. It refers to the statement incidentally, as if it were a well understood fact, but gives no particulars.—[Newark Adv.

ORANGE TREES KILLED.—All the orange trees in Florida have been killed by the late severe frost. On one plantation, that of Capt. Bennet, near Apalachicola, 4000 trees were killed in one night. The loss falls heavily upon the planters.

Why cannot California be admitted as a State? Because the inhabitants are all miners.

Such is the richness of the soil in California that steel pens, if put into the ground over night, are found to be gold ones on the following morning.—[Punch.

A long legged Yankee, on a visit to a menagerie for the first time, while stalking round the pavillion, came upon the elephant; whereupon he turned to the keeper and said with surprise: "Thunder and lightning, mister, what darned critter have ye got here, with a tail on both ends?"

"There, John, that's twice you've come home and forgotten that lard."

"Really, mother, it was so greasy that it slipped my mind."

An old lady walked into the office of a judge of probate in Massachusetts, once upon a time, and said, "Are you the judge of reprobates?" "I am the judge of probate," was the reply. "Well, that's it, I expect,' quoth the old lady. "You see, my father was detested, and he left several little infidels, and I want to be their executioner."

"Well, George, when are you off?" "To-morrow." "How do you go?" "Across the Isthmus to be sure." "Why not go round the cape?" "Too dangerous." "Why surely you, who have such experience in the line, can have no apprehensions doubling the horn."

PROSPECTUS.

ORSON HYDE

Proposes to issue, at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, a Semi-Monthly Newspaper, upon a super-ropal sheet, entitled the

FRONTIER GUARDIAN.

It is intended, so soon as the requisite preparations can be made, to issue the GUARDIAN every week. Mr. H. has procured a new press, new type, furniture and fixtures throughout; and he flatters himself that he shall be able to present to the public the news of those frontier regions, at least, in a respectable form, so far as the mechanical part of it is concerned.

The GUARDIAN is not intended to enter the field of political strife and contention; still, it will reserve the right and privilege of recommending such men to the suffrages of the people as the Editor may think will prove true and faithful guardians of the National peace and honor, and of the PERSONS and property of her citizens. It will be devoted to the news of the day; to the "Signs of the Times;" to Religion and Prophecy, both Ancient and Modern; to Literature and Poetry; to the arts and Sciences, together with all and singular whatever the spirit of the times may dictate. It will strongly advocate the establishing of Common Schools along the frontier, and also in the various settlements in the interior, and will try, by all lawful and honorable means, to accomplish so desirable an object.

Being located on the extreme frontier, the GUARDIAN will be able to give the earliest reliable information from our settlement in California, and in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Intelligence from these quarters will not only be welcome, but extremely interesting to the great portion of our readers in the "States."

As the present is a day of revolution and change—a day in which all things seem to be breaking loose from their usual moorings, by the force of the storms that begin to rise in our political atmosphere—a day in which the vials of confusion and strife seem to be poured upon the nations—the GUARDIAN will endeavor to be a faithful watchman of all these matters, and a true chronicler of all these events and lay them before the Saints, and every body else that may chance to meet them, or come in their way, as warning heralds of that day when Zion's King shall ride forth in His cloudy chariot, and dash in pieces the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw, that it become fine like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and be blown away by the four winds of Heaven. Thus must the nations of this world break in pieces and flee from the face of HIM who sits upon the throne, and who comes to establish His Kingdom with the faithful martyrs who have long cried under the altar, "How long, Oh, Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth, Behold the Heavenly Prince, clad in the garments of vengeance! He treads the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God! Their blood he sprinkles upon his garments, and stains all his raiment, and declares that this is the day of vengeance that was in his heart, and that now the year of his redeemed has come!"

With the rapidity of time are the nations of the earth rushing to this awful crisis! "They have eyes, but they do not see; they have ears, but they do not hear; and they have hearts but they do not understand." These facts should awaken every servant of God, to cry aloud and spare not, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, that the sword of the Spirit, which he is commanded to wield, may be always bright and untarnished, glittering in the sunbeams of the glory and favor of his God.

TERMS.

The GUARDIAN will be published at Two DOLLARS a year, payable invariably in advance. Notes of good and substantial banks in the United States, that are so considered by the community in which they are established, will be received on subscription for the GUARDIAN, if they are not too badly worn or defaced.

All letters to the editor should be directed to Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and POST PAID, or they will not be taken from the office. It is expected that the first number of this paper will be published in November next. ORSON HYDE.

From the Millennial Star.

T. D. Brown's Letter to W. Cunningham, Esq.,

OF LAUGHSHAW, AYRSHIRE.

Author of various works on the Writings of the Jewish Prophets, the Millennium, &c.

"I cannot give you the right hand of fellowship. You have departed from the Lord."—W. Cunningham's Address to T. D. Brown, at Harrowgate, Sept., 1848.

Respected Sir: While I have been writing a portion of the conversation that took place between us, as recorded above, when we accidentally met and so abruptly parted, many wise sayings have presented themselves to my mind; viz "He was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief"—He that judgeth a matter before he heareth it, is not wise"—"Thou art weighed in the balance, and found wanting," &c. Whether these apply to the writer of this letter or to you, let the counsel and the public decide.

Before I proceed further, I would here remark that I do not write this letter under the influence of any contention or retaliatory spirit, neither do I spend so much of my time upon it because you are a rich man so to attract public notice, but that you may, if possible, come to the knowledge of the Truth and the obedience of faith, and that all who read this may be warned, for this is God's hour of warning. I say, if possible, because our Lord said, "It is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God;" but, though hard, it is not impossible. "The poor have the gospel preached unto them," and "the poor amongst men shall rejoice, whilst the rich are sent empty away."

Some five years ago, when I called upon you at a hotel in Liverpool, to ask your opinion of the Latter-day Saints, or Mormons, as they are called, and of the doctrines they taught, you frankly confessed to me "you knew little or nothing of them; you had never read any of their works; and you did not mean to read them, unless they came into your more immediate neighborhood." At the same time you warned me, "neither to receive them into my house, nor bid them God speed."

Whether you thus warned me from having had a revelation from God, or discernment by his spirit as to the character of this people, or from the partial accounts and tales you might have read in the newspapers, I shall not stop here to enquire.

I had been taught by you, both in the Sabbath school and church you established many years ago, when I was yet a little boy, "to prove ALL things, and hold fast that which is good," and "to the law and testimony, and whatsoever is not according to these is not of God." I applied these rules in earnest, searched the scriptures diligently, and asked God fervently and faithfully to guide me into the truth, and save me from all error. And what was the result? Soon after I felt persuaded, and believed that "this people, every where spoken against," were a good people, and that the doctrines they taught, were the doctrines of Jesus Christ, and according to the scriptures. I then resolved to prove the truth contained in this promise of Jesus, reiterated by them—"If any man will do the will of my Father in Heaven, he shall know whether the doctrines I teach be of God."

What doctrines did Jesus teach? One is—that all nations were to be taught—and they that believed what the Apostles taught, and WERE BAPTISED FOR THE REMISSION OF THEIR SINS, should be saved. So also did they teach. Another was, that "he would send the Comforter—even the Spirit from on high—to lead the faithful and obedient into ALL truth, and shew them things to come." I was obedient to the commands of Jesus and of his servants, and soon did I know that what I had believed was true. And I do now know, most assuredly, that "in vain ye call Lord, Lord, and do not the things which Jesus commands."

Before I proceed, allow me to ask you a few plain questions, which, I trust, for the sake of truth and for the salvation of men, you will condescend to answer, either from your pulpit or through the press.

Is it righteous, or like Jesus, to withhold the right hand of fellowship from any man who is sincerely seeking to know the will of God, that he may do it?

You say I have departed from the Lord: will you tell us how you know it? I do not ask what you believe about me and my brethren, but what evidence you have that you know I have "departed from the Lord!" and by what measure did you mete? Was it by a scriptural standard—by the spirit of God (if you have received it,—) or by newspaper stories? (Herein we have been frequently and most scandalously misrepresented.) Would it be just to judge and condemn me and the Saints of God, because the papers or the "christian public!" say we are not a good people, and our doctrines are strange? I think not. Is it not rather more just to say, these are the servants of the Most High God, the brethren of Jesus, and they hold the Truth? Did not the christian or religious public, in the day of Jesus, say all manner of evil against him and the apostles—that he was a wine-bibber—a gluttonous man—a friend of publicans and sinners, and that the superior power he so often made manifest for salvation was of the devil? Yes; and he said, "wo be unto those of whom all men speak well."

Another of the doctrines which Jesus taught was, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; he that believeth not (and consequently is not baptized) shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Does not Jesus here plainly teach that Baptism, as well as Faith, was necessary for salvation? Has he ever anywhere said that this ordinance should be changed or done away, because no longer needed! or, has he ever countenanced the opinions of men, and the now too fashionable doctrine of devils, that "the signs were only given and required in the first ages of christianity, to confirm them in the faith, but are now no longer needed!"

Isaiah, by the spirit of God, saw that a certain "ordinance" should be changed by man; and he tells us in the first six verses of the 24th chapter, the sad and fatal consequences thereof. And Paul also speaks of a falling away—a departing from the faith—when men would not endure sound doctrine, but would heap to themselves teachers, having—or because they had—itching ears—they would turn from the truth and receive old wives' fables instead.

What ordinance, doctrine, or command of Jesus have men neglected, turned away from and changed? That which stands most prominently forward is the ordinance of Baptism. In this the change is almost complete. The mode—the administrators—the subjects to whom administered, and the end or object of this ordinance men have changed; and because that which is well known requires no proof, I shall only say upon man's mode of baptising, it is as various as are men's opinions—dropping, sprinkling, crossing, pouring, dipping face forward three times, plunging, or just as you please. Is this not so? It is. And the administrators may be Catholics, or, as they are sometimes called, Papists—or Protestants of any or every grade, from the Puseyite Church of England Archbishop down to the Methodists of a hundred different names and shades of opinion—Ranters, Shakers, Primitives, Aitkinites, Kilhamites, or Presbyterians, Independents, Relief, Seceders, Burghers, and Anties; in short,

"Any thing that has an —— on,
Dipped in black to make a parson," that has said—whether he has felt it or not—"Wo be to me if I preach not THE (!) gospel."

And the subjects are children generally, but adults occasionally, or at any age if required. The end or object,—"to conform to a long established practice, and in the place of circumcision," or to manifest by an outward and visible sign an inward work." Oh, how easy and accommodating the forms of man—not so the law of God. And here I boldly assert, because I have no fear of successful contradiction—if the scriptures be the book of reference—children never were baptized, either by our Lord, his apostles, or their immediate successors—they took them in their arms and blessed them; and only one priesthood ever did or ever can administer acceptable before God in this or any other matter pertaining to man's salvation in the kingdom of God, even such as have been called, ordained, and sent as was Aaron—by the revelation and spirit of God. The end or object of Baptism anciently was "Salvation," or "For the remission of sins." Jesus says, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved;" and Peter, "Repent and be baptized every one of you for the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost;" and the laying on of hands was for conferring the gift of the Holy Ghost and for healing; and these ordinances in the economy and kingdom of God are like God himself, unchangeable. Proof.—In all the examples of baptism recorded in the bible, children are not mentioned, I know that because "Lydia and her household"—"the jailor and all his house"—and "Cornelius and his household were baptized," it is inferred there must have been children therein, and if so, as the household were baptized, these necessarily would also. This is not so, for the following reasons;—1st. Children are in the kingdom of God, because of the atonement of Jesus Christ; for just as much as they lost by the disobedience and fall of Adam, they gained by the obedience and atonement of Christ. 2nd. Jesus commanded his apostles to go and teach all nations, and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Would they teach children? if so, which of Christ's doctrines or parables, even the simplest, could infants understand or believe? Oh, how easily man doth wander into error, when in the dark and uninspired! Surely, "darkness hath long covered the earth, and gross darkness the people.

Now it must be clear, even if there had been infants in these households referred to the servants of God would neither have taught nor baptized them, because they had no sins to be remitted—baptism being for the remission of sins—because they believed not, being incapable, even if they had been taught, either of understanding or believing; and only those were to be baptized who believed what they were taught, and thus only could such obtain a remission of their sins; but we have already shown infants had no sins, therefore infants never were baptised.

What was the usual mode of baptism?

Paul's sins were washed away. Jesus and John, Philip and the Eunuch went down into the water, and came up out of the water in this ordinance; and we are "to be buried with Christ in baptism, that like as he rose, we also should rise and walk in newness of life,"—we are to be "born of water." From these it is evident men and women went down into the water—they were hid in the element as the child before the birth—they were laid as Christ was buried, not on his face or any how; they arose as Christ arose, and walked as in new life, living no longer after the law of carnal commandments—after the flesh, but after the spirit; and to them there was "now no condemnation." So much for the object and mode or manner of baptism.

Then as to its necessity, we may reply to a question that is very often asked, Can a man not be saved without baptism? or is a man safe if unbaptized? Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and I have no authority to say he that believeth and is not baptised shall be saved, but the contrary. May we not infer, and that correctly too, that the prayers, faith, alms, and piety of Cornelius could not save him, from the fact that Peter, who was to tell him "words whereby he should be saved," commanded that he should be baptized. I admit his prayers were heard, and his alms had in remembrance. In a word—he was a good man. He had good faith and good works, and received the ministration of an angel; but he yet needed salvation, and had a revelation from heaven, instructing him how to proceed that he might obtain it, viz: "send for Peter," who tells him how to enter the kingdom of God, even by baptism—"Can any man forbid water?"

And you, sir, have long admitted that faith alone cannot save a man—it is dead; neither can works alone. There is a beauty in God's plan and order. Faith comes by hearing the word of God spoken by one that is sent. "How can we hear without a preacher, and how can he preach unless he be sent?" Peter said to them who believed his preaching and teaching, "Repent and be baptised every one of you for the remission of your sins."—(Acts ii.) And Paul, in Heb. vi., says he would not again go over the principles or first parts of "the doctrine of Christ;" he would give them stronger meat, that they might go on to perfection, "not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms and of laying on of hands," &c. These were part of the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. But, alas! the doctrines of men how different. Many of Christ's doctrines are not looked at, and what remains of the form is without the power: indeed most sectarians altogether deny the power.

Do you ask what power? I reply, the power of God delegated to man—the PRIESTHOOD—the spirit of God—the gifts of the Holy Ghost—the faith that is of the operation of God. Those that deny this power, say "it is no longer needed." Indeed! Jesus said, "they shall lay hands on the sick, and they SHALL recover: in my name shall they cast out devils." And James says, "Let the sick send for the elders who shall anoint them with oil and pray over them—lay hands on them, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord WILL raise them up; and if they have committed sins they shall be forgiven." Is this power no longer needed? No more devils and foul spirits to cast out? No more sickness in the church? Alas! alas! how many deny the power, whereas we contend for it, and for the faith once delivered to the saints, which was, and is, a principle of power, as Paul shows in his 11th chap. to the Hebrews; and Jesus said, "if a man has even a grain of it, he can say to the mountains be thou removed," &c. And has Jesus ever said all these are done away, or any of them, for they are no longer needed? No; and yet, sir, for receiving, obeying, and contending for these doctrines, gifts, blessings, faith, and powers, the saints withdraw "the right hand of fellowship from us, and tell us we have departed from the Lord!"

The Holy men of old, who wrote and spake as they were moved upon by the spirit of God, have not left us ignorant as to how long God purposed these gifts, blessings, and powers should continue in the church, even apostles, prophets, teachers; miracles, helps, governments, diversities of tongues, interpretation: the words of wisdom—of knowledge; faith, prophecy, discerning of spirits, &c. These were to continue in Christ's church, "till that which is perfect is come"—"until we ALL come into the unity of the faith, &c. —See 1 Cor. 12th chap. They were for the strengthening, healing, and comforting of the members of Christ's body, that there might be "no schism." Need we wonder now at the abounding schisms? No; for these officers, gifts, powers, and blessings have almost been rejected and long since withdrawn, indeed are denied; and "denying the power" is pointed out as a prominent part of the apostacy of the last days.

The gospel of Jesus Christ has in it, and is, the POWER OF GOD unto salvation; and wherever we meet with a church that has not this power, or denies it, saying it is not needed, the gospel of Jesus and the salvation of God are not there. Here then is a true test, and easily applied.

We are often asked, how are the gifts, blessings, priesthood, and power of God received? We reply, by the laying on of hands. The Lord commanded Moses to lay a measure or portion of his honor upon Joshua, and to ordain Aaron and his sons; and Jethro, his father-in-law, counselled Moses also to choose able men of Israel to assist him in the government; and no doubt he ordained them, and ordination implies setting apart by the laying on of hands, and communicating intelligence and powers. Jesus ordained his apostles, and the seventies were sent out, having participated of the like power by the same ordinance. Philip, the deacon, sends to Jerusalem, and the higher priesthood, Peter and John, go down to Samaria, "and when they had come, they laid hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost," which produces the same fruits—peace, power, and intelligence. And when Paul had come to Ephesus, he found certain persons who had been baptized—See Acts xix.—but it was not into Christ; "hearing Paul, they believed," and "were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus; and when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came upon them, and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. I am aware it is urged that the laying on of hands of the Presbytery for ordination, and of the Bishop for confirmation, are still attended to; but tell it, you who know, is it not the form destitute of the power? How else can it be? Can any one impart what he has not received? and are they not of those who deny the power, and say it is no longer needed?

May not any one baptize, seeing that any one can now preach, and if zealous is sure to to get many hearers? That many run who are neither called, ordained, chosen, nor sent, and that men are willingly "heaping to themselves teachers" of all sorts, I admit and have already shown; but they are not sent of God—they neither obey the gospel nor give heed to the commands and doctrines of Jesus; nay more, they exert themselves to prevent them that would, and they shall have their reward. Any man might assume the magisterial power, that he might obtain the fee, and, in form, administer the oath of allegiance to a stranger and alien, and that, too, in the name of the monarch; but would this formal naturalization or citizenship be recognized at head quarters? No; "Depart, I never knew you nor him who introduced you into our kingdom; he has no measure of our authority, we know him not," the monarch would justly say. Of what avail would it be to say, "Why, he observed the proper form, had the proper books, I paid him the usual fee, and he did it in your majesty's name." "We know him not, nor you." So is it in the kingdom of God, Those who administer lawfully in the name of Christ, being the called of God, the sent and ordained, will be recognized in heaven, and their works, as if Jesus himself had done it; but not so with those who assume the power

So then we see that the doctrines and commandments of men, their belief—faith and creeds, can neither satisfy nor save. No more could the penal code of Moses; it was as a schoolmaster to bring to Christ. Only he, his doctrines, ordinances, officers, or priesthood and spirit, can save, heal, restore, bless, and exalt.

Invocation.

BY MISS E. R. SNOW.

O God! thou God that rules on high,
Bow down thy ear to me;
Listen, O listen to my cry—
Hear thou, my fervent plea.

Rebuke the heartless, wicked clan
That fain would do us harm;
Protect us from the power of man,
By thy Almiglity arm.

Let unseen watchman wait around
To shield thy servant's head—
Let all his enemies be found
Caught in the net they spread.

Thy grace, like praisie dews distill'd,
To all his needs apply;
And let his upright heart be filled
With spirit from on high.

The work is thine—thy promise sure—
Though earth and hell oppose;
Roll, roll it onward and secure
Thy prophet from his foes.

O hide him in thy secret fold
When on his path they tred;
Safe as Elijah who of old,
Was by the ravens fed.

Bring his accusers' deeds to light,
And give thy people rest;
Eternal God! gird on thy might
And succor the oppressed.

Yucatan.

"Yucatan is the grave of a great nation, that has mysteriously passed away and left behind no history. Every forest embosoms the majestic remains of vast temples, sculptured over with symbols of a lost creed, and noble cities, whose stately palaces and causeways attest in their mournful abandonment, the colossal grandeur of their builders. They are the gigantic tombs of an illustrious race, but they bear neither name nor epitaph. The conscience-stricken awe with which the Indian avoids them as he relates a confused tradition of a whole people extinguished in blood and fire, by his forefathers—a ferocious and cannibal race delighting in human sacrifices,—are all that even conjecture can say of the manner in which the ancient occupants of Yucatan, were blotted en masse, from the page of existence. The barbarous exterminators remained the masters of the country, and built them rude huts under the shadow of those immense edifices which are still the marvel and mystery of Yucatan. On many of these singular edifices is stamped the blood-red impress of a human hand; a fit symbol of the rule of blood to which it has so constantly been the victim. This "bloody hand" was imprinted with evident purpose on the still yielding stucco of the new-built walls, and presents every line and curve in life-like distinctness, but the explanation of the symbol is unknown.—[From the New York Sun, June 8th.

The writer of the above article on "Yucatan" is greatly mistaken. He says, "Yucatan is the grave of a great nation that has mysteriously passed away, and left behind no history." This is not so. The first great nation that anciently inhabited Yucatan, passed away, about 2,440 years ago; but their prophets left a history, an abridgment of which has been translated into the English called the "Book of Ether," and tens of thousands of copies have been published in the Book of Mormon, and circulated both in America and in England for many years. The last great nation that inhabited that country and passed away, have also left their history which was discovered, translated, and published in the English language nearly 20 years ago by Mr. Joseph Smith, who has since fallen a martyr to the truth, instead of being rewarded by man for having unfolded the ancient history of one half of our globe from the earliest ages after the flood. This seems to be the common lot of the benefactors of the human race. They live and die neglected, or are persecuted to death by their cotemporaries, and their worth is not appreciated until they are gone, and not always then.

The writer, acknowledges the discovery of "vast temples," "noble cities," and "stately palaces," embosomed in "every forest." He then refers to a confused tradition of the indians, who say that their "forefathers—a ferocious and cannibal race delighting in human sacrifices,"—exterminated a whole people by "blood and fire." He supposes that this is "all that even conjecture can say of the manner in which the ancient occupants of Yucatan were blotted en masse from the page of existence."

How correctly this Indian tradition agrees with the history given in the Book of Mormon. Mr. Mormon says, that in the 367th year after Christ, "the Lamanites"—the forefathers of the American Indians—"took possession of the city of Desolation,"—which was in Central America, near to or in Yucatan—"and this because their number did exceed the number of the Nephites"—the Nephites being the Nation who inhabited the cities of Yucatan. "And they (the Lamanites) did also march forward against the city of Teancum, and did drive the inhabitants forth out of her, and did take many prisoners, both women and children, and did offer them up as sacrifices unto their idol gods." In the 375th year, large numbers of the Nephite women and children were taken prisoners, and were also sacrificed unto idols. (Book of Mormon, page 566 and 567.)

Mormon in one of his epistles to his son Moroni, shows their awful wickedness and cannibal-like dispositions. He says:

"The Lamanites have many prisoners which they took from the tower of Sherrizah; and there were men, women, and children. And the husbands and fathers of those women and children they have slain; and they feed the women upon the flesh of their husbands, and the children upon the flesh of their fathers; and no water, save a little, do they give unto them. And notwithstanding this great abomination of the Lamanites, it doth not exceed that of our people in Moriantum. For behold, many of the daughters of the Lamanites have they taken prisoners; and after depriving them of that which was most precious above all things, which is chastity and virtue; and after they had done this thing, they did murder them in a most cruel manner, torturing their bodies even unto death: and after they have done this, they devour their flesh like unto wild beasts, because of the hardness of their hearts; and they do it for a token of bravery. O my beloved son, how can a people like this, that are without civilization: (and only a few years have passed away, and they were a civil and delightsome people;) but O my son, how can a people like this, whose delight is in so much abonination, how can we expect that God will stay his hand in judgment against us? Behold, my heart cries wo unto this people. Come out in judgment, O God, and hide their sins, and wickedness, and abominations from before thy face."

In the 384th year, the occupants of Yucatan and Central America, having been driven from their great and magnificent cities, were pursued by the Lamanites to the hill Cumorah in the interior of the State of New York, where the whole nation perished in battle. During the protracted wars which resulted in the overthrow of a great nation, many hundreds of towns, villages, and cities were burned by the conquerors. Desolation and ruin marked the footsteps of the contending millions. Though fourteen centuries have passed away, these historical facts are still recorded in the breast of the Indian. The cannibal acts of their forefathers—the extinguishing of a whole nation by "fire and blood," and the offering of thousands of prisoners—women and children as sacrifices to idol gods—are events in Indian tradition not easily forgotten. Well might the conquering nation imprint upon the stately edifices of their fallen foe—"the blood-red impress of a human hand!" This truly seems to be a fit symbol of the terrific wars which had drenched that land in the blood of millions. Were it not for the faithful record of Mormon, written in Egyptian hieroglyphics, the history of Ancient America would have remained an untold mystery to all future generations, until the slumbering millions of that vast continent should burst their ancient tombs, and appear with all the assembled nations in judgment.—[Millennial Star.

"Loss of Life by War.—It is estimated that thirty thousand millions of human beings have perished to satisfy the insatiable maw of war. Among the most disastrous of battles upon record, and the numbers slain, are Austerlitz, 20,000; Dresden, 35,000; Waterloo, 40,000; Eylau, 50,000; Borodina, 80,000; Isus, 110,000; Arbela, 300,000; in two of the battles of Cæsar, 700,000; in the siege of Jerusalem more than a million; and at the taking of Troy, more than two millions. The New York Observer says, that in the Russian campaign there perished in six months, more than half a million; during twelve years of the recent wars in Europe, no less than 5,300,000! The army of Xerxes, probably more than 5,000,000, was reduced in less than two years to a few thousands. Jenghis Khan butchered in the single district of Herat 1,600,000, and in two cities, with their dependencies, 1,760,000, and the Chinese historians assure us, that during the last twenty-six years of his reign he massacreed an average of half a million every year, and in the first fourteen years, no less than 13,000,000—31,500,000 in forty-one years by a single hand! Grecian wars sacrificed 15,000,000; those of the Crusades, 49,000,000; those of the Saracens and the Turks, 60,000,000 each; those of the Tartars, 30,000,000!"

If we add to the above the unnumbered millions of the ancient nations of America, who fell in battle, the bloody catalogue will be swelled to nearly double the foregoing estimate. Two of the most numerous and powerful nations of the earth were blotted en masse from the page of existence by war. The history of Ancient America, first published in the year 1830, shows that the same spirit of bloody ambition universally swayed its terrific sceptre over both hemispheres of our globe. War, that fatal curse of fallen beings, has not yet ended its ravages. Not many years hence it will break forth with redoubled fury, spreading desolation and ruin among all nations. The United States, now a flourishing and great nation, shall feel its direful ravages. The North and the South shall unsheath the glittering sword, and in the heat of their anger rush headlong into the opening vortex that has swallowed up nations and generations. While the nations of the Old World will catch the fatal spirit, and drench the soil of Europe with the blood of millions, Asia shall rise up and go forth to the valley of slaughter, where many nations and kings shall perish in one day. War, dreadful war, awaits all nations! Zion alone shall escape! There in her peaceful habitations shall the righteous dwell! War shall not disturb her quiet resting places.—[Millennial Star.

Fulfilment of Prophecy.

There is something so cheering and grand, to the friends of revelation, when a prediction or prophecy, is fulfilled, that they hardly know how to express their gratitude to him that hath brought it to pass in its time. Our Savior said, (speaking of Jerusalem.) "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. * * * * * * For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled * * * * And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." No rational man has been able to gainsay these words: for the Jews were dispersed among the nations, and Jerusalem has been trodden down of the Gentiles almost 1800 years. But there were other prophetic sayings about Jerusalem, which, while they help substantiate revelation, help silence spiritualizing the scriptures and crown Mormonism with the glory of promulgating the truth. Out of many passages, we will only select one, yet future, leaving men to reflect upon the idea that old men and women, and girls and boys, shall yet grace the streets of Jerusalem: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first born." Looking at him whom they had pierced must mean Christ coming the second time.

Who can measure Arms with God? There is some consolation to the Saints, after having labored diligently twelve or fifteen years to warn the world of approaching calamities and woes, amid slander, persecution, assassination, and the stratagems and vilifications of false brethren, to see the work of the lord spread from sea to sea, from nation to nation, and from continent to continent. And more than all this, to witness how admirably the Almighty backs up the words of his servants, with "distress," among the nations; with "divisions" in governments, churches, neighborhoods and communities; and pours out fire, flood, hail storms, and an unappeaseable murderous spirit among all people. Verily, verily, these signs of coming events, and future glory, too visible not to be seen, and two powerful to be resisted, cause poor frail humanity to reflect, to ponder, to marvel, to wonder, to pray, to hush, to awake, to prepare, to wait, to watch, and to, exclaim: Who can measure arms with God?---[Times and Seasons.

The Austrian army is composed of 500,000 men, and will be increased to 700,000 before the war in Italy is over. This is a large force to bring into the field against any power.

The Frontier Guardian.

PUBLISHED SEMI MONTHLY, BY
ORSON HYDE.....Editor and Proprietor.
WEDNESDAY, MAY 16, 1849.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

Cash will be given for a few hundred feet of good seasoned black walnut lumber, if delivered immediately—clear stuff.

Agency.

Elder ISAAC BULLOCK, a young man of fine moral character, and well qualified for the business, has been employed by us as an agent to procure subscribers for the Guardian while he travels the country in the capacity of a Missionary to preach the Gospel, to comfort the Saints and instruct them in all matters pertaining to their duty—the gathering, &c.

His circuit is within the limits of the United States, and we will be responsible for all the money that is paid to him by subscribers for the Guardian, and will forward the papers to them with as little delay as possible. He has the requisite papers to show that he is our authorized traveling agent in the United States.

DAVID JUDY, Mackinaw, Tazwell county, Illinois, is appointed Agent for the Guardian.

RALLY! RALLY!

The place for rendezvous is now determined upon for those who intend journeying to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, near the Buoyo Lake, in the neighborhood of Mr. Hatch's. There is wood, water, and timber, and there we shall attend to the organization of a company so soon as Mr. Gully is ready to start.

It will now be advisable for men that wish to go in this train, to be on the ground and ready to move onward as soon as Friday or Saturday next.

Counsel.

In our community, much is said about doing all things by counsel, and the conscientious among us ask counsel of their presiding officer upon all important matters, and also upon matters not altogether so important.

Some persons among us who fear not God and have little or no regard for truth or honesty, will sometimes say that they are acting by counsel when they may be committing some criminal offence. This they do to make people fear to oppose them, that they may have a good chance to effect, without molestation or exposure, their inquitous designs. The spirit of our course is pretty well understood: but lest it might not be to the fullest extent, we now say to all concerned, that whenever you find any person that is doing wrong, or committing anything criminal in the eye of the laws of the State, or in the eye of the law of God, and claims to be doing it under the sanction of the authorities of the church, you may know that that person is a false one, and that the truth is not in him. Be warned then against all such characters, for they are not only false and corrupt at heart, but enemies to the church and murderers of her authorities by giving them the credit of counselling every wicked thing that they cannot accomplish without stealing the influence of some men in authority. Let all such characters remember that our blessing is not upon them. We are glad to see our friends disposed to listen to counsel; and let it be your constant prayer that just and wise counsels may ever be given you. Our counsel will not cause any person to break the laws of the State nor the laws of the kingdom of God, and whenever you find any person, male or female, doing a criminal thing, and claiming, or even intimating that they are doing it at our instance, know ye that it is your duty to enter complaint forth-with against any such person to us. Be not imposed upon by any such folly and wickedness—neither suffer your humble servant to be the scape-goat of a corrupt and wicked person.

Chaff and Wheat.

Some of our readers think that we are presumptuous in prophecying against evil doers, particularly when it comes to pass so quick: But if it did not come to pass at all, Oh how we should catch it then! Well, we don't know but we are. We will therefore call this prophecying against evil doers, chaff.

The silly goose has sense enough to pick up the wheat and leave the chaff—while some of our would be wise readers seize, with all eagerness and avidity, what we have called chaff and leave the wheat. It is not a little diverting to see them choke, hem, sigh and flounce while they are trying to cram down the dry bearded stuff. While they find fault with us for throwing out these things, they might do well to consider and reflect that Br. Hyde might have done it for a two fold purpose, one of which may be to prove who is as wise as a goose, or as silly as a goat.

If circumstances will possibly allow, we will not prophecy any more about these things which have shocked the nerves of some so sensibly.

Conference.

The Conference at the Tabernacle near Benson's mill, held on Saturday and Sunday, the 5th and 6th inst., was well attended. Though it was stormy on Saturday, and lowering on Sunday morning, a very great number or persons ventured out. Most excellent discourses were delivered by Elders Smith, Benson, and Joseph Young. The saints were greatly edified and comforted. Joy and gladness beamed in almost all countenances.

No particular business done, except the branch at Harris' Grove were instructed to disfellowship Bro. Geo. Cotterell, for vain, wild, and foolish teaching. He is now gone to St. Joseph, Mo., we were told.

ABSENCE OF MIND.—We noticed a case of the above the other day, in which a man, greatly indebted, went on board a ship bound for California to take leave of his friends, and forgot to come on shore again himself; this is something like those who write for the Guardian to be sent them on credit, and forget to pay the postage on their letters.

Business is lively in this town at present. Most kinds of goods meet with a ready sale, and command a lying profit. By our advertising columns it may be seen where goods can be had cheap for cash. They are willing the printer should live as well as themselves. Success to trade.

Our public square is daily filled with wagons, horses, oxen, mules and ponies. Heavy dealing in this property is going on all the time. Property is being sold off at auction. Gold adventurers are daily arriving, and some are backing out and selling off thirity or fifty per cent below cost, &c. Lively times here—but a scarcity of provisions—such as flour and bacon. Farmers, put in grain in the season of it and you will reap your reward.

Boiling Almost Over.

Several persons have been in at our office within the last few days and have told us that they have seen several men from Hancock county, Ill. Among the emigrants for the "Gold Regions," that applied the firebrand to their houses in Lima and on the Green Plains, in Ill. They look upon them with curious feelings, and can hardly be restrained from doing them personal harm. It is extremely agravating to see men now in our midst that have caused us so much trouble, exposure, sickness, hunger and death as some of these men have. The tears of wretchedness and woe which they have caused, are not yet gone dry. But shall any of us become the agents of their misfortune or harm? God forbid it! Let them live and welter under the castigations of their own reflections. If they are hungry, feed them. If they are in trouble, help them if they want help, and when you have done this, you may ask them if they remember burning your houses and wheat stacks. Let God be their judge and our avenger, and it will be done more effectually than any of us could do it if we should undertake it. When fruit is ripe, it will fall off itself, but if you beat it off before it is ripe, it will set your teeth on edge. Our community are all quiet at the present time, and the great majority of the California Emigrants are certainly friendly and honorable men, if we may judge from appearance; and if, for no other reason, we do not wish any disturbance in the place for their sake. Time is hurrying us all into another state of being where all our wrongs are sure to be redressed in a proper way. Let these men alone and not molest them. If they can find peace in paying their devotions at the shrine of the god of this world, do not molest them in their scanty and limited enjoyment. The blood of innocence has stamped upon them the mark of Cain, and let that be their passport to journey through life like unto Cain, fugitives and vagabonds in the earth, and let no man get seven-fold vengeance upon himself for taking vengeance on them.

If any citizen here interferes with any of them unlawfully, that citizen will incur the just indignation of this community. We do not say that those house-burners are not worty of death, but we know of no man here that possesses piety enough to kill them. God can either do it himself or send his angel to slay them all in a night as he used to do sometimes, if he wishes.

We are requested to say that the letters and packages entrusted to the care of Br. A. P. Rockwood, in the Eastern and Middle States were all lost by the sinking of the steamer Dahcota.

Col. Frement.

We will publish in our next No. the account of the sufferings and disaster of Col. Fremont and his party in attempting to cross the Sierra Madre mountains in latitude about 38 deg. 30 min. north, and about 106 deg. 30 min. west from London, at an altitude of more than 12,000 feet above the level of the sea. The Valley of the Salt Lake is in north latitude 40 deg. 30 min., and in longitude west from London 112 deg. The altitude of that place is 4,300 feet above the level of the sea. From the unfavorable accounts given from the regions West and South of the Salt Lake Valley—this severely cold weather and very deep snows; we fear somewhat for the safety of our friends in the Valley. Their not being so high as was Col. Fremont by some 8,000 feet may have proved their salvation. We have received no mail from there as yet, but are in daily expectation of one. We are very anxious to hear from that quarter, yet we are almost afraid to hear lest the very severe winter has seriously affected that infant settlement: Yet we hope for the best.

Should a mail come in from that quarter in a time not to meet our regular issue, we shall publish an extra, giving particulars.

Rush Bottoms.

We would advise the citizens of Pottawatamie county to object to cattle being driven from below to winter upon the rushes above this point. The reasons for this are many.

In the first place, cattle are subject to die, to get mired and to "come up missing" in various ways: then if they are not found, the cry goes out that the Mormons have stolen them. Again, the rushes are in a lonely place where it is very convenient for red and white Indians to commit depredations, when if such a temptation were not placed before them, they might be good Indians.

Again: When the herds are driven down, by some means many of the citizens' cattle are driven off with them. We had a fine fat young ox driven off in Mr. Moody's herd as it passed down a few weeks ago; but, luckily about twelve miles below here some men saw him who knew him and took him out of the herd. They complained that they could not get him out and so drove him along. Several cows and steers were missing about that time. The rushes are a poor excuse for wintering cattle upon, at best, and to avoid trouble, suspicion, difficulty and loss, we do object to cattle being driven up there to winter. Let the citizens of the upper part of the county consider this and remonstrate seasonably, and then if cattle all die, or are all stolen from the rushes, we will not listen to any whining about it.

Tremendous Freshet.

On Wednesday night, the 2nd inst., the small stream that runs through our town, suddenly rose out of its banks and swept along the bottoms with tremendous force, carrying off fences, bridges and tents; driving families out of their houses and stock from their beds. Indeed the sight was grand. It looked not unlike the Missouri river. From this very sudden rise which was not more than fifteen or twenty minutes till it reached its greatest height, some supposed that a cloud had burst and spilt out a flood. No very serious damage was done however, except to the grocery, which we learned was washed out clean.

This was evidently done by the hands of man and if the person who was left in charge is not guilty, he will return and show himself innocent and honorable. We will not accuse any one, for we have no knowledge of the guilty party.

Mr. Thompson, the owner, is a very quiet, harmless man. As a citizen and neighbor, none have occasion to find fault with him, except in his liquor traffic. However much we are opposed to that kind of trade, we are equally opposed to any interference with a man's business in an unlawful way. We saw a number of men wading to and from the grocery, a number of times while we were watching the flood, and we were not a little surprised to see them wading in the way they were. We recognized one of the men by his voice. He has left for the gold regions.

Bacon and Flour.

We hope that a quantity of the above articles will be shipped up here to lessen the price. They are too high altogether, and moreover it is all being taken out of the country by the California emigrants, and they want more than there is in the country.

Californians! A word to You.

When you cross the Missouri river at this point, you find yourselves in an Indian country. You are beyond the bounds of civilization and law, except what you take with you yourselve. Diligence in watching your property by day and by night—wisdom in selecting places to encamp, with proper care of your teams and pack animals—are your principal, and we may say, almost your only safeguard and protection on the journey.

Your own good judgment will doubtless have suggested to you the imperious necessity of a strict military organization in your companies. You cannot safely cross the plains without it: And if a man cannot be in subjection to that organization as perfectly as if he were in the United States' service, he had better tarry on this side the river.

You will find it best to treat the Indians with moderation and kindness as long as you can, but never suffer them to come within the circle of your encampment, and not very near the outside. If they want anything of you, let them signify it by signs, and then let a deputation wait on them outside your camp, not however, beyond rifle shot from the body. Be firm and not suffer them to get in among you. Fifty men, well armed, with a corresponding number of wagons may venture through with all safety if they are watchful, and five thousand would be striped if they were not watchful. Some think it safe to go with less than fifty men. This may be so: But we think that fifty is about the proper number to go, in order to travel with ease, with safety and comfort. It is often the case that one has many little things that another has not, with which he may render many comforts and accommodations to others on the journey, and in turn receive the same himself. When you turn out your cattle, horses and mules to graze, let a few men be with them, and right among them, well armed. Bring them all within the circle of your wagons at night, and place a sufficient guard outside.

You would do well to let your animals graze till bed time if they are well guarded, and then be turned out early in the morning, for the same purpose. If your oxen have traveled all day, they will eat all they care to, and then lay down until morning. In this case it will not be so necessary to tie them at night in the corral; but when they have rested a day or two they should be tied up at night to prevent them straying off. The Indians do not care so much to get cattle as they do horses and mules. The latter should be watched, therefore, with the greater care.

Backing Out.

Some of our friends destined for the "Gold Regions," are beginning to think that this expedition is not exactly what it has been "cracked up to be," and are about to wheel for the East. If they back out at all, now is their time, before they get out on the plains where they cannot get back without a guard which may be difficult to procure in that region. You must then "hang together" or be scalped separate.

We are most agreeably disappointed in the character and appearance of the great mass of Emigrants through this place, destined for the "Gold Regions." They certainly appear to be men of character, wealth, and possess a good share of general intelligence. We have not seen a drunken man among them,—they have good health so far as we can ascertain, and are generally in fine spirits. If all the emigrants to that country are as fair a specimen of honor, of integrity and uprightness as those are that pass through our county, (with a few exceptions,) there must and will be order established and maintained in the mining districts of California. We wish them success and prosperity in their great undertaking. We shall endeavor to give the earliest news from them as they journey across the plains. We have laid in with several persons to write to us from time to time, and we should be glad to be informed of their progress by any one whenever opportunity shall offer for them to send back. Should any good or ill luck happen to any of the companies, we should be glad to hear, and make it public.

Provisions.

Articles of provision that constitute the bone and sinew of life in the West, and are mostly needed for a mountain expedition, such as flour and bacon, are becoming scarce and dear in this section of the country. The people here may be thought extravagant in their prices; but in consequence of the hard winter, there is little or no surplus provisions in the country. What is sold to California Emigrants has to be replaced from Missouri, and it must now be sold at prices that will justify hauling it from below. It is a busy time with farmers and they cannot leave their work to go abroad after provisions at any ordinary price. Had the winter been as mild here as seasons have usually been heretofore, there would have been produce enough for the consumption of the citizens, and to supply the emigrants also.

Our farmers are doing their best to have an abundance on hand another year, both for themselves and for the California Emigration. Extensive crops of wheat are now on the ground, and it never looked better. The country is getting full of swine, and we will try another year to be supplied with every article that the emigrant wants at low prices.

Cholera.

This malignant and fatal disease made its appearance at Council Point, five miles from this town, on Thursday last. It first attacked an old lady from England, who came up the river on the Dahcota that was wrecked. Her name was Binnel, next Mrs. Gee, (a widow lady,) Mrs. Rogers and her son, a young man. These all died very suddenly. There are two or three cases more reported up to Saturday last.

Every person should keep free from fear if possible, as this is a powerful auxiliary to help on the disease. Be temperate in your labor, moderate in exercise, calm in your feelings, and guard against exposure. If you are troubled with diarrhœa, check it as soon as you can, for this almost invariably precedes the more powerful attack. We direct your attention to an article on this subject in another column.

Mr. William Muir, who was unfavorably noticed in our last number, has deposited with Mr. Geo. A. Smith of this place, twenty dollars in good money to redeem that amount of bad money that he passed in St. Joseph, Missouri.

He argues that he sold his mules in good faith for that kind of money, and was resolved to pass it off as such. He is a young man, and most likely the first thing of the kind that he ever did, and we feel confident, that if he gets taken in again himself, he will pocket the loss and not attempt to pass it off upon any one else.

Any persons in St. Joseph having received bad money of Mr. Muir, can have good money in exchange for it by giving satisfactory evidence to Mr Smith, that Muir paid them bad money.

Mr. Merrick and the Stolen Pistols again.

The pistols, we are informed, have been found and identified by the owner. They came to light under circumstances that confirmed the previous suspicions of the community. The six shooter was found by some boys in a hay stack in Mr. Clark's yard as they were throwing off hay to feed with.

Very early in the morning, at a very unusual hour for Merrick, Mr. Clark, the landlord, discovered him coming away from the stack yard and stable where it is believed he deposited the stolen treasure, and being called in question so soon after it happened, he had not time to remove it.

We cannot think that any tale has been manufactured to injure Mr. Merrick. The community, nor no individual of the community has any wish to injure him or his reputation that we know of, as some have intimated. They have no interest in doing it that we can see.

We wish Mr. Merrick no harm, but if he expects to be received in society, and refuse to tell his business or from whence he came, &c. &c., he will be pretty generally disappointed.

ADVERTISING.—Advertising in newspapers has been found to be advantageous and profitable in every business in which it has been tested. It may be appropriately compared to the increase, of sign boards placed above the doors of merchants and mechanics' shops, so that they can be read, throughout cities, towns and counties, by the thousands. The last Missouri Statesman makes the following suggestion on this subject. Though it is a little severe or hard, still it will pass because it is pretty generally understood that Editors are commonly rather hard cases:

"MERCHANT'S SPRING TRADE — Those who have merchandize or other commodities that are worth buying—that are worth having—will not fail to advertise them. The people understand this perfectly well, if some people do not. We speak as unto wise men—let them hear."

Stolen

From the Grocery of Mr. Wm. B. Thompson in Kanesville on the night of the 10th inst. two land warrants. One drawn in favor of Wm. B. Thompson, the other in favor of Charles C. Thompson, in the absence of the owners.

The public are hereby notified and cautioned against buying them. Should any person offer them for sale, it will be remembered that they were stolen; and any information given to Mr. Powers of this place, or to the office of the Guardian, will be most thankfully received. If the person who has taken them will enclose them in a letter to Mr. Wm. M. Powers, and drop it privately at his door, or in the Post office, or leave them at this office, nothing more will be said. The land warrants can be of no use to any person, but to the real owners, except a false oath be taken.

We are told that Mr. Andrew Coulton near the upper crossing on Keg Creek, knows of some ten or fifteen head of emigrants' oxen strayed away, and are in that quarter. He will doubtless give this same information to any one that should go there after them, that he has given here.

Strayed Animals.

Our friends throughout the county should remember that a great number of emigrants are here with their teams. At this season of the year, cattle will wander and stray off. Strangers do not know the country, and cannot tell where their cattle would be most likey to wander to.

Let every man that wishes well to strangers, and that intends to treat them as he would like to be treated himself under like circumstances, take an interest in their behalf; and if you see or know of any stray cattle horses or mules in any part of the country, give information and description as correctly as you can at this office.

Remember that we are all journeying through life, and as we do to others on the road—so it will be done to us. If you help a stranger when in trouble, you may get help when you are strangers and in difficulty. Let no person that professes to be a saint, be indifferent to the intersts of these emigrants. We would say the same to both jew and gentile: but render them all reasonable aid by giving information of all stray animals that you may know of or hear of in this region.

A bright plough and a good newspaper are the cheapest comodities used by a farmer.

DISPATCHES TO CALIFORNIA.—The Baltimore Patriot, of the 7th inst., says: "Major Garnet, an accomplished officer in the Mexican war, and recently a member of the military family of Gen. Taylor, left here this morning for San Francisco, via Chagres and Panama, taking passage on the other side in the steamer Oregon. We have heard it stated that he is the bearer of important dispatches from the Government to Gen. Persifor F. Smith, Governor of California."

EXTRA MILEAGE.—Mr. Greely, of the Tribune, member of Congress from New York, has been engaged in exposing the excess of mileage received by members. We can only give an aggregate of the tables, as published in the Tribune:

Number of extra miles charged by Representatives, - - -	59,030
Number of extra miles charged by Senators, - - - -	18,602
Total extra miles, - -	77,632
Extra mileage of the House	$47,223,80
" " " Senate	$14,881,40
Total extra mileage,	$62,105,20

The excess is made in accordance with the law Ought not such a law to be amended? By the law, as it now stands, members of Congress receive eight dollars for every twenty miles traveled in going to and returning from Congress. When the compensation of Congress was fixed, twenty miles was considered about equivalent to a day's work. The facilities for traveling have increased a hundred fold. Both honesty and economy demand a change.

SLAVE POPULATION.—The proportion of Slaves in the United States to the white population has been as presented in the following table:

In 1800	1 slave	to	5	and 1.5th white.
" 1810	1 do	to	5	" 5.7th do.
" 1820	1 do	to	6	" 1.12th do.
" 1830	1 do	to	6	" 2.8th do.
" 1840	1 do	to	6	" 7.8th do.

It will be seen that the recession of the slave population, in relative proportion, is slow but unvarying in its course.

Many of our California friends, destined for the Gold Regions, are sending back to their friends in the different states copies of the Guardian, containing their names. We are situated on the extreme frontier, and shall spare no pains to get the earliest news from the emigrants as they cross the plains, and when they arrive at the place of their destination also.

We are very eligibly situated to get early news from the mountains and from the plains, and should any of the emigrants be inclined to become subscribers for a year or six months, and send the paper back to their friends we should be happy to wait upon them in this way. Or if their friends in the east should be induced to subscribe, we will endeavor to be punctual and true to their wishes.

We will publish any man's name in any future number of the Guardian, and mail a copy of it to his friends in any part of the world that he may direct us, for one dime, if he will leave us his name and the address of his friends.

CALIFORNIA EMIGRANTS.

We give below a list of the California emigrants. It was impossible for us to get their names in order, so as to give them in all cases under the head of their respective companies. But we have taken them as they arrived and registered their names.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16, 1849.

Notice.—All communications addressed to the Editor, must be post-paid to receive attention.

Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

Help the Cause.—If every subscriber for the GUARDIAN will make it his business to procure, at least, one more subscriber, he will confer a favor on us, and contribute to the advancement of the cause. If he can procure five, ten, or more new subscribers, the favor to us and the cause we advocate will be increased in like ratio. Will you undertake it? New subscribers can be furnished with back numbers if they wish.

Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. Those kindly enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and on receipt will be credited forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, Nodaway, Platte Purchase, Platte City, Weston, Parkville, Platte Purchase, Gardon Grove, or to the Valley of the Missouri by way of any of the above places, will do us a favor by calling on us before they leave. If possible let us know a day or two before they leave, that they would give us a little time to prepare a package.

LATER INTELLIGENCE FROM CALIFORNIA.—Rich Quantities of Gold.—We give below an extract from a business letter received by a respectable house of New York City, engaged in the North West trade, from its correspondent at San Francisco. Though some of the statements seem almost incredible, the letter from which we copy it, vouches for their authenticity, having seen the original letter:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 7, 1849.

You ask me to give you facts as they are. You shall have a plain statement of matters as they exist. At present there is little or nothing doing in the place, in consequence of the immense quantity of snow that has fallen this year.

There are at present two thousand persons at the mines. Some are living in tents and others in log houses. Many have perished from exposure to cold, fevers, etc., but such is the excitement and rage for gold that they undergo the most unheard of hardships, with the hope of passing the winter on the spot, so as to avail themselves of the first opening of spring, which is looked forward to with great hopes.

As regards the richness of the mines, I can only say, that the most exaggerated accounts may be believed. A few days ago a gentleman came down from the mines, bringing with him $12,000 in gold dust, which he took out in the space of six days. This is a fact that you may rely upon. I have it from persons, eye witnesses, whose veracity cannot be doubted.

I myself saw a piece this morning weighing seven pounds, the most curious specimen that has yet made its appearance. The extraordinary richness of this placer, or placers, for there are many, surpasses anything that the world has ever seen. I can hardly realize it myself.

There has been upwards of five millions of dollars of gold exported from San Francisco alone, exclusive of that taken by the miners who have gone to Oregon and the United States, who have all carried from ten to twenty thousand dollars.

All who go to the mines do well, which is the most convincing proof I can give you of their great richness.

IMPORTANT FROM RIO JANEIRO, NAVAL, ETC.—A correspondent of the New York Express writes from Rio Janeiro, Feb. 11, as follows:

"On the night of the 9th inst., a report from a reliable source reached this city, stating that the Buenos Ayreans had entered the city of Rio Grande, the previous night, and committed excesses of the most revolting character. Several robberies took place among the wealthiest classes, houses and stores were plundered and set on fire, the number of inhabitants murdered had not been ascertained, but reported to exceed three hundred men, women and children, most of whom moved in the highest sphere of society.

"The U. S. sloop of war St. Louis, Commander Cooke, from Montevideo, remained at Rio de Janeiro, Feb. 11th, in company with U. S. brig Perry, and the U. S. Receiving Ship Lawrence, Lieut. commanding Frazier—the latter to sail for California in five days. The U. S. store ship Fredonia, Lieut. commanding, Neville, sailed from Rio de Janeiro, February 8th, for San Francisco, via Valparaiso and Callao.

"Our markets, for all description of produce are extremely dull, and the little, if any change in prices, from previous quotations are not worthy of remark."

COL. DONIPHAN.—The St. Louis Republican says that Col. Doniphan, of Missouri, has been appointed commissioner of Indian Affairs, at Washington city, in place of Wm. Medill. In this case, we hope the rumor may be verified, as a more acceptable appointment could not be made. Col. Doniphan enjoys the confidence of the people of this State to an unlimited extent. He is well qualified for the post—his integrity is undoubted, and we have every guarantee which can be given, that the affairs of the Bureau, important and perplexing as they frequently are, will be faithfully administered. We repeat the hope, that the rumor may be well-founded.

Additional Foreign News by the British Steamer Niagara.

The Socialists and Secret Clubs of France—Important from Italy—Arrest of Bishops—War Inevitable—The Pope, &c.

The foreign journals by the Niagara having come to hand, we make some extracts of interest from them. The news from Italy will be found highly important.

The United States' ship Preble is about to proceed to Japan, to bring away the crew of the American whaler Lagoda, recently wrecked on the coast.

We understand the Chinese Viceroy Sue has accepted an invitation to visit the American commissioner, Mr. Davis, on board the Plymouth, about the 15th of February.

It was reported in Vienna on Thursday night, that Schuselka, the late President of the Kremsier Diet, had been seized on the morning of that day, taken before a court martial and shot.

The Austrian Government, anxious to be agreeable to the Bonaparte family, have ordered to place at its disposal the mortal remains of the Duke of Reichstadt, in order that they may be united with those of the Emperor in the church of the Invalids.

A deputation of the clubs and secret societies of Paris, have left for Rome, together with a certain number of retired officers, who are going to drill the new Republican militia of central Italy.

The President of the Republic has dispatched Col. Majocci, one of his orderly officers, on a mission to Vienna, the object of which is to endeavor to induce the Austrian government to consent to some settlement of the Italian question otherwise than by entering the Roman States.

The Socialist journals publish an address to the "Democratic Socialist Republican Electors," announcing a fusion in the different shades of Socialist with the Democratic Republicans, for the purposes of the election.

M. Ledru Rollin, in his speech at the 25 sous banquet of the Rue Martel, declared socialism was making such rapid progress in the army of Paris, that the Government was compelled to abridge the sojourn of the regiments, and to replace them by others from the provinces. The Moniteur, of the 2d instant, declares the statement to be unfounded; and adds, that the Government is under no alarm, the army forming part of the nation, and the nation having, by the election for the President of the Republic, shown that it is resolved to put down the Socialists.

A person named Loiseau, a shoemaker, sent by the committee of Paris to preach Socialist doctrines in the provinces, having attempted to seduce some soldiers of the 42d regiment in garrison at Bourges, was arrested by them.

The French Government continues to receive the respect of all men who desire peace and order, and the homage of the press of England to the peaceful disposition of Napoleon is, perhaps, one of the most significant signs of the times.

The Red Republicans are the only promoters of war in France; and the excitement which they betray as they see their power cut from under them, and the assassins, the instruments of their guilt, brought to the scaffold, threatens some wild outbreak, which we earnestly hope will be vigorously and effectually suppressed.

In Dublin the most noticable signs of the social revolution now going on is the enormous quantity of second-hand plate offered for sale at a very low figure by the chief jewelers of the city. Never before was so much plate to be sold. For furniture and equipages of every kind the price at auctions is ridiculously small. At the sale of various effects, a handsome state carriage, little used, was knocked down for £36.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.—It is calculated that the forces which can be put in motion against the Austrians amount to about sixty thousand men. Prince Augene, of Savoy Carignian, is appointed Lieutenant General of the kingdom, during the absence of the King from the capital. Marshal Radetsky has threatened to lay Milan in ashes, should an insurrection be attempted there. He is said to have at his disposal 100,000 men, 70,000 of whom can be brought into the field.

The Assembly of Rome has voted by acclamation a project of decree abolishing the holy office, and decided that a pillar should be erected on the site of the Palace where it had been installed. In the sitting, on the 1st ult., M. Sterbini announced that the executive government had made every preparation for the war which was about to take place with Austria; for a war there certainly would be, as the government was determined to wait until the Austrians received reinforcements.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has published an address to the European Powers, justifying the proceedings of the Roman Republicans. It concludes as follows: "As long as the Pope showed himself the friend of Italian independence, the Roman people stood by the Pope; but when he deserted that cause, his temporal sovereignty was repudiated. We may ever say proudly and confidently to Europe: 'We have at least done one glorious act; we have destroyed the temporal domination of the Popes.'"

It is thought that Mizzini will be proclaimed Dictator of Rome. The Romans are said to propose to themselves the siege of Ferrara.

At Rome, on the 10th, inst., the Bishops of Gubbio and Orvieto, and the Archbishop Cardinal de Fermo, were arrested. The Archbishop was taken to the Castle of St. Angola, and the two Bishops to the fortress of Ancona. Their offence is that of exciting the people, through the press, to revolt, and calumniating the Republic. Orders were also given, on the 12th, to arrest the Cardinal de Angelis, Archbishop of Fermo.

The Marseilles journals say that Modena has been evacuated by the Austrians, and that the Duke has fled. Radetsky has also evacuated Placenza, Hostilities appear inevitable. Genoa, Turin, indeed all Piedmont, seem ready to fight, whilst the Austrian general, Radetsky, has issued proclamations to his army at Milan, that he accepts the challenge, and the sword must once more decide who shall be the possessor of the fair fields of Lombardy. At Rome, there appears no stability in the perpetually changing ministries.

Immediately after the receipt of the Sardinian intimation that the armistice would end on the 21st, Marshal Radetsky is stated to have ordered several inhabitants of Milan, and other towns of Lombardy, to be seized as hostages for their good behavior to their fellow townsmen. He is also stated to have summoned the Podesta of Milan, and to have shown him the preparations made for laying the city in ashes if an insurrection should be attempted.

Advices from Palermo to the 8th inst. state that the English and French squadrons arrived there on the 6th inst, and that on the following day the admirals had an interview with the members of the Provisional Government. Nothing had transpired respecting the result of this interview.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor has issued a ukase to all the official departments informing them that in the year 1849 they are not to present any petitions whatever for an increase of salary, pecuniary assistance of any kind, because the country will need pecuniary resources for the consolidation of the whole army.

The conduct of Russia is exciting considerable alarm in England. That she has increased her forces on the Prussian and Austrian frontiers there can be no doubt; and the Emperor has declared in a manner not to be misunderstood, that the treaties of 1815 shall not be infringed upon, except with the entire consent of these powers who were parties to that great settlement. Therefore if the Sardinians attempt to wrest Lombardy from Austria, and the Germans persevere in there scheme for detaching the Duchies from Denmark with a full knowledge of the rights of Russia, it is mere self-delusion to expect that Lord Palmerston, however great his talents, can much longer preserve the peace of Europe.

Relief of California Emigrants.

At a meeting of the citizens of St. Clair county, Ill., held at the court house on Friday evening, April 13th, 1849, in aid of the above object, JOHN SHIEL was appointed Chairman, and THOMAS CHALLENOR Sec'y.

The object of the meeting having been stated by John W. Merritt, he proceeded to offer for the consideration of the assemblage the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, by reason of the unprecedented multitudes emigrating the present season from the frontiers of Missouri to California, it is confidently believed that grass and forage for animals will fail; owing to which circumstance many emigrants will be unable to proceed to their destination; and whereas, it is feared, in consequence of this inability, hundreds of our fellow-citizens, espicially women and children, will be left to perish in the sandy deserts between the South Pass and California, unable either to proceed or to return; and whereas, it is believed that the popular excitement in regard to the gold region, has been mainly occasioned by the official reports of Goverment Agents; and whereas, it is regarded as a paramount duty of Government, irrespective of pecuniary considerations, to take all necessary steps for the perservation of the lives of our citizens: therefore,

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, Government should immediately take all proper and necessary measures, by sending in pursuit of emigrants sufficient train or trains, in order to carry to their place of destination all such as may have been forsaken on the plains to perish.

Resolved, That we earnestly invite the attention, and invoke the assistance of Government, to this humane and praiseworthy object,

Resolved, That our citizens throughout the United States be requested to co-operate with us, in expressing their views and wishes to Government on this subject, and they be requested to hold suitable meetings in aid of this object.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions and preamble, signed by the officers of this meeting, be immediately transmitted to Washington, to the President and Cabinet.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting, signed as aforesaid, be published in the newspapers of this town and St. Louis.

JOHN SHIEL, Chairman.
T. CHALLENOR, Secretary.

CALIFORNIA EMIGRANTS.—Every boat that arrives at the wharf is crowded with emigrants for the gold regions. Within the last few days several hundred wagons have come through by land, from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Up to 12 o'clock yesterday, there had been 8,318 persons who had made this a point of departure for the plains; and from what we can learn, we should not be surprised if five thousand more landed here in twenty days. We also learn, that a large number have crossed the upper part of the State, intending to cross the river at the Bluffs—say four thousand persons. We do not think it an extravagant assertion to say that at least EIGHTEEN THOUSAND PERSONS will leave the frontier between this place and the Bluffs; and many persons estimate the number far above this. We have no means of knowing what number will leave Independence, but should suppose that six or eight thousand will depart from that point. This will make some 25,000 persons on the plains in a few weeks. A number of these are destined to perish upon the way, and we fear a large number who have undertaken the trip, have not thought properly upon it. Some who have been accustomed to hardships, may get along without much difficulty, while others who have never undergone any privations, must suffer considerably on the plains.—[St. Joseph Gazette.

FROM THE PLAINS.—By Mr. F. ROBIDOUX, who arrived at this place on the 5th inst, from Fort Laramie, we gather a few items which may be of advantage to the emigrants. Mr. R. left Fort Laramie on the 24th of March, and arrived at Fort Childs on the 18th of April. From Fort Childs to this place, he made the trip in nine days. He states that the grass on the plains is very scarce, and that it is unsafe for the emigrants to leave the settlements for at least fifteen days. He further says that the Pawnee and Sioux Indians are very friendly, and have no disposition to interfere with the whites, if not molested. Mr. R. brought a large mail from Fort Childs, which was deposited in the office at this place.—[St. Joseph Gazette.]

CHOLERA.—Dr. Fenner, of New Orleans, in an article upon this disease in that city, says: As to the character of the epidemic, I think I may safely say that it has not been very malignant. In most instances the attack was insiduous and mild—generally commencing with a looseness of the bowels, attended with more or less griping, and often accompanied with nausea and vomiting. The latter symptoms almost invariably attended those patients who had committed imprudence in eating. Without descending into minutiæ, I may say that the disease almost invariably commenced with some unusual disturbance of the digestive organs. When this disturbance commanded the attention it deserved, it was generally most easily remedied by the simplest means; but if neglected, it seldom failed to lead on to the most disastrous consequences. This, then, is the curable stage of cholera, and almost the only stage in which it can be cured; for if it be permitted to run on until the patient becomes cold and pulseless, ninety-nine in a hundred will inevitably die. By powerful means, reaction may often be established; but the danger is not yet passed—a great majority still die of the consecutive fever. Say what you will about creating panic and spreading alarm among the people, I feel no hesitation in asserting that when epidemic cholera is prevailing, every person who has any unusual diarrhœa, had better believe he is a case and act accordingly. If this simple rule were universally adopted, cholera would soon be rendered comparatively harmless.

The Louisville Medical Journal says: We have seen letters from several New Orleans physicians in all of which it is stated that the premonitory diarrhœa, in most cases, was effectually controlled by stimulants and anodynes, without the aid of any mercurial preparation.

In regard to hygienic measures, the most valuable are temperance in all things, cheerfulness, cleanliness, and ventilation. It has been remarked how the poor suffered from the epidemic everywhere. This is mainly owing to neglect, the disease being permitted to run into the incurable stage before resorting to medicine; but a part is due also to the character of their dwellings. Dr. Christison perhaps goes too far when he says, "cleanliness and ventilation will dissipate any epidemic;" but no one will deny that they are the chief prophylactics against cholera. Every source of impurity ought to be removed from about our houses. The question is often asked, "shall I drink brandy to keep off cholera?" We answer, all sudden changes of habit are hazardous. If you are a brandy-drinker, continue to use it while the epidemic prevails, and then abandon the pernicious practice; if you are not accustomed to its use, then do not begin it. Use brandy just as you would any other medicine. It is a valuable remedy when the disorder is upon you, but possesses no power to avert an attack. Practice temperance, exercise cheerfulness, wait upon your friends and neighbors when overtaken by the disease without any fear of contagion, take medicine, or send for your family physician on the first appearance of diarrhœa—those who pursue this course, we fully believe, have but little to fear from cholera.

RECOVERY OF THE GOVERNMENT JEWELS.—The mystery which has so long hung about the robbery of the Patent Office, was cleared up yesterday by the recovery of all the jewels and other articles stolen. It will be remembered that a short time since officer Boyer arrested at the Jersey City Ferry, the celebrated Jim Webb, one of the most notorious burglars in the country, and who was suspected of being concerned in this robbery. By some means or other, the only benefit the officer derived from this arrest was the credit awarded to him for the ingenuity displayed in making it, as the business was transfered to other officers. Justice McGrath, Officer A. M. C. Smith, and Capt. Magnes of the Sixth Ward, have the credit of arresting the other thieves, and Mr. Stewart, the Clerk of the Police, that of recovering the property. Justice McGrath, with some officers of the old police force visited Washington recently, ostensibly for the purpose of detecting pickpockets who might be present at the inauguration, but in reality to detect if possible the parties concerned in this robbery. Tom Hand, a thief almost as notorious as Webb, was arrested on suspicion, and two indictments were found against him, and after his arrest the officers were put in possession of information which induced them to suspect two others in this city, Henry B. Jones, well known as a boot maker in Ann street, and Philander B. Jones, also well known as a thief. These were both arrested yesterday, and the officers proceeded to search their residences, but although the search was most thorough, no traces of the property were discovered. Mr. Stewart, the Clerk of the Lower police, then went to the residence of Henry B. Jones, in Pike street, in company with him, and after a long conversation, in which he pointed out the certainty of the disgrace which would attach to himself and the ruin which must fall upon his family, he consented to point out the place where the stolen property was secreted. He then led Mr. Stewart, to the upper part of the house into a small bedroom, where in a covered crevice in the wall, neatly covered over, was concealed the bottle of "otto of roses." This he handed to Mr. Stewart, and descending to the cellar he commenced digging under the floor, and finally brought up the packages containing the bars of gold, the pearls, one hundred and forty-six in number, and all the diamonds, amounting to about one hundred and twenty. Mr. Stewart, after a careful examination of the articles, saw that they tallied with the description of the valuables stolen, and took charge of them. Jones was conducted back to prison, and towards evening the jewels together with the depositions made, were sent to Washington.

Wilmer's Liverpool Mail says a new feature in the American Provision trade has occurred. By the Niagara steamer, which arrived, there were received one hundred dead fresh hogs, in ice, which were brought to auction and realised from 32s 6d, to 35s 6d per 100 pounds

DARING AND EXTENSIVE ROBBERY IN NEW ORLEANS.—The New Orleans Picayune, of the 8th, records the commission of one of the greatest robberies ever known in this country. The following particulars are given:

One of the most daring and extensive robberies we have lately heard of, was committed about 9 o clock yesterday morning, at the commercial house of Th. Bailly Blanchard & Co., corner of Bourbon and Custom-house streets. The house transacts the business of several wealthy people, including Madame De Pontalba, and Mr. Blanchard was in the habit of keeping moneys, notes, &c, to a large amount in a "bank box," which he deposited in the bank. For some business purpose, Mr. B. sent to the bank for the box about the time above mentioned, and when it was brought in by a young man, a nephew of Mr. Blanchard, it was by him placed on the counter. The young man at the moment had occasion to step outside the door, and the box was not observed by Mr. B. Immediately after the young man stepped out, three men entered the store, and two of them stepping back to Mr. Blanchard, asked him about some brandy, stated that they wished to purchase a considerable quantity. The two men engaged the attention of Mr. B. in sampling the brandy, while the third, who remained behind, is supposed to have walked off with the box. The two customers soon came to the conclusion that the brandy would not suit them, and they went away. When the young man came into the store again, he asked Mr. B. about the box, and the fact of the enormous loss then came out. The robbers must, we think, have seen the box carried to and from the bank on previous occasions, and watched its entrance into the store on this ocasion. It contained in gold and silver, bank notes, notes of hand, checks, drafts, &c., over $300,000. Altogether, this is one of the most daring robberies ever committed in our city, and considering the time of day when it took place, it is almost a miracle that the scoundrels got off unnoticed. A schedule of the notes, &c., will be found in another column, and it will be seen that Mr. Blanchard offers a reward of five hundred dollars for their recovery. Every precaution has been taken, and we are confident that the robbers will be caught within a few days.

GOLD SPECULATION.—A Yankee transported a couple of hogs to the "diggins," in California to root for "the precious ore," and obtained every night from six to eight ounces of gold from their snouts!

THE well known GRIST MILL belonging to JEROME M. BENSON, situated on "Big Pigeon," about eight miles north of this place, is offered for sale on the most reasonable terms. There are two run of burrs and a bolt for manufacturing flour of the best kind, now in successful operation. This mill has all the grinding it can do by day and by night, and there is also a fine chance for erecting a Saw Mill on the same dam—part of the timber is now on the bank. Connected with the mill, is a fine little farm of about thirty acres under good fence. If any one wishes a great bargain, please call upon the subscriber on the premises.

Song for the Sabbath.

WRITTEN BY A LADY.

Worship, worship, heart of mine,
All thy lowly incense offer,
Though before no sacred shrine,
Still the grateful incense proffer:
Flowing from a contrite heart,
Stealing from the world apart,
Praising, though oppressed by pain,
One who heals the fevered brain.

Worship, worship, spirit mine,
Though the trembling accents falter;
God shall strengthen thee with wine
From the sacrificail altar:
Praise him for his mercies all—
On the faithful Savior call,
Knowing, though oppressed by pain,
He can cool, the fevered brain.

Worship, worship, body mine,
If thine earthly strength's decaying,
Thou shalt not in darkness pine—
Faith's a fair foundation laying.
For thy mansion in the skies;
Upward, then, direct thine eyes,
Knowing, though oppressed by pain,
God can heal the fevered brain.

Yesterday.

BY CHARLES WILTON.

I see it now, through by gone years,
As plainly as of yore!
Though grief and age have worn life's page
And stained its traces o'er,
That fairy home of boyhood's time,
When the world was pure and gay,
Comes sweeping back o'er memory's track
As fresh as yesterday.

I see again the well-known scene—
I tread the path anew
Where lily, rose, and eglantine,
Commingling fragrance threw;
You cannot say I'm weak and old,
Or that my locks are gray—
I'm hale and young—I stand among
The scenes of yesterday!

Thou reverend, old, and hallowed oak,
I hail thee once again!
The stately wave thy branches gave
Is solemn now as then,
When underneath thy charmed shade
I mused the hours away,
Nor thought too bright the dreams I made
In sunny yesterday.

Thou creeping vine, that lov'est to twine
Around the cottage door,
And weave thy slender, netty arms
My chamber lattice o'er—
I've clapped my little hands for glee,
And thought no vine so gay
As the vine that clustered fruits for me
In childhood's yesterday!

Ye tinted flowers of varied hue,
That fringe the walks along—
Ye modest plants that hide from view
Amidst the blooming throng—
I'm bounding down your garden slope
With my long-forgot "Hurra!"
I'm shouting loud the song of Hope
You taught me yesterday!

Alas! alas! that boyish song,
For me, is hushed and still;
The blood that danced so light and long
Creeps slowly now and chill;
My sight grows dim—my limbs grow old—
The vision fades away;
Though bright it seem, 'tis but the dream
Of by-gone yesterday!

MISCELLANY.

A Streak of Squatter Life.

BILL SAPPER'S LETTER TO HIS COUSIN.

LIBERTI, Missury, May 6th 18 forty 5.

Cusin Jim, tha aint nothin' occurred wuth writin about in our settlement fur a long spell, but about the beginnin' of last weak, thur war a rumor sot afloat in town, which kept the wimen for two or three days in a continooal snigger, and it wur half a day afore the men could find out the rights of the marter—seeh another fease as all the gals got inter, war delightful to contemplate. The boys kept a askin' one another what in the yarth wur the marter, and the gals kept a whisperin' and laffin' round town so?—at last it cum out! and what do you think Jim, wur the marter?—you couldnt guess in a week. It aint no common occurrence, and yet it's mighty natral. Little Jo Allen, the shu maker, had an addition to his family, amountin to jest three babbys—one boy and two gals! His wife is a leetle critur, but I reckin she's "some" in countin the census, and seeh another excitement as her little brood of pretty babbys has kicked up among the wimen is perfectly inticin' to bachelors. When the interestin' marter wur first noised about, the wimen wouldnt believe it, but to know the rights of it tha put on thur bonnets and poured down to see Mrs. Allen, in a perfect stream of curiosity; and sure enuff, thar tha wur, three reel peert lookin' children, all jest alike. Bein' an acquaintance of Jo's he tuck me in to see his family, and it wur raaly an interestin' sight to see the little creturs. Thar tha wur, with thur tiny faces aside each other, havin' on the purtiest caps—all made and fixed by the young wimen, as a present to the muther—and thar thur infantile lips jest openin' like so many rose buds poutin', while thur bit o' hands' transparent as sparmacity, wur a curlin about and pushin all doubled up, agin thur little noses, and thur muther all the time lookin' at 'em so peert and pleased, jest as ef she wur feelin' in her own mind tha wur hard to beet—added to which, thar stood thur daddy, contemplatin' with a glow of paternal feelin', the whole unanimous pictur! It aint in me, Jim, to fully describe the universal merits of seeh a scene, and I guess it couldent receive raal jestis from any man's pen, 'cept he'd ben the father of twins at least.

"Gracious me," sed Mrs. Sutton, a very literary womin, who always talks history on extra occasions, "ef that little Mrs. Allen aint ekil to the mother of the Grashi!"

She looked at little Jo, the daddy, fur a spell, and tuk to admirin' him so that she could scarcely keep her hands off on him—she hadn't no babbys, poor woman!

"Ah! Mr. Allen," ses she, "you are suthin" like a husband—you're determined to descend a name down to your ancesters!

I realy believe she'd a kissed him ef thur hadn't ben so many wimen thar. The father of the babbys were mitely tickled a' furst, cause all the wimen wur a praisin him; but arter a spell he gin to look skary, for go whar he would he found some wimen tryin' to get a look at him—tha jest besieged his shop winder all the time, and kept peepin' in, and lookin' at him, and askin' his age. And whar he did cum from, any how, and as soon as he sed Indiana, Dick Mason becum one of the popularist young men in the settlement among the wimen, jest cause he war from the same State.

Things went on this way fur a spell, till at last tha heerd of 'em in the country, and the wimen all about found some excuse to come to town to get store goods, jest a purpose to see the babbys and thur parents. The little daddy wur wusser plaged now, and they stared at him so that he could not work—the fact wur, his mind war gettin' troubled, and some of the wimen noticed the skary look he had out of his eyes, and kept a wonderin' what it meant. One mornin' it war noticed by some of the gals that his shop warn't opened, so tha got inquirin' about him, and arter a sarch he cum up missin'—well, I'm of the opinion thar wur an excitement in town then, fully ekill to the President's election. Every womin started her husband arter Jo, with orders not to come back without him, and seeh a scourin' as they gin the country round would a caught anythin' human,—it did ketch Jo—endhis road to Texas! When they got him back in the town agin, a committee of married men held a secret talk with him, to larn what the marter wur, that he wanted to clear out; and Jo told 'em that the wimen kept a starin' at him, so he couldn't work, and ef he war kept from his bisnes, and his family continued to increase three at a time, he'd git so cussed poor he'd starve, and tharfore he knew it 'ud be better to clear out, for the wimen would be sure to take good care of his wife and babbys.

Old Dr. Wilkins wur appointed by the men to wait on a meetin' of the wimen, and inform them of the fact, that tha wur annoyin' the father of the three babbys, and had almost driven him out'n the settlement. The doctor, accordin' to appointment, informed the wimin, and arter he had retired tha went into committee of the hole upon the matter, and appinted three of thur number to report at a meetin', on the next evenin', a set of resolutions tellin' what tha'd do in the premises, and governin' female action in the particklar case of Jo Allen, his little wife, and three beautiful healthy babbys.

When the hour of meetin' had arriv', Mrs. Sutton's wur crowded with the wimen of the settlement, and arter appointin' Widder Dent to the cheer, tha reported the committee of resolves reddy, and Mrs. Sutton bein' the head of the committee, she set to work and read the followin' drawn up paper:

Whereas, It has been sed by the wise Solomon of old, that the world must be peopled, tharfore, we hold it to be the inviolate duty of every man to git married, and, moreover, rear up citizens and future mothers to our glorious republic; and,

Whereas, it is gratifyin' to human natur', the world in general, 'Missury at large, and Liberti in particklar, that this settlement has set an example to the ancestors of future time, which will not only make the wimen of this enlightened State a pattern fur thur children, but an envy to the royal wimen of Europe, not forgettin' the proud mother, the Lions of England, but will elevate and place in and among the furst families fur ever, hereafter the mother that has shed such lustre upon the sex in general; and,

Whereas, It is the melancholy lot of some to be deprived of doin' their duty in the great cause of human natur', because the young men is back'ard about speakin' out, it is time that some measures be taken inimical to our general prosperity, and encouragin' to the risin' generation of young fellers round town; therefore,

Resolved, That, as married women, our sympathies, like the heaving of natur's bosom, yearns with admiration and respect fur that little womin, Mrs. Allen, and as we see her three little babbys inclinin' upon thur mother's female maternal bosom, our beatin' hearts with one accord wish we could say, ditto.

Resolved, That in the case of Mrs. Allen we see an illustrious example of the internal and external progress of that spreading race, the Angel Saxons; and time will come, when the mothers of the west will plant thar glorious shoots from one pinnacle of the Rocky Mountains to the other, and until that cry of liberti will be hollered from one pint to the next in continooal screetch!

Resolved, That Mr. Joseph Allen the father of these three dear little babbys, shall recieve a monument at his deth, and while he is livin', the wimen shall only visit his shop once a week to look at him, 'cept the married wimen, who shall be permitted to see him twice a week and no offener, provided and exceptin' tha want to git measured for a pur of shoes;

Resolved, Mister Joseph Allen shall hav the custom of the whole settlement for he is a glorious livin' example of a dotin' husband.

Arter these resolutions had been unanimously passed, Mrs. Sutton addressed the meetin' in a stream of elegance, wharin she proved, clar as a whistle, that a family war the furst consideration fur a settler in a new country, and town lots the arter question. "She acknowledged the corn," she sed, "that it was soothin' to look offen at thur neighbor Allen, but his peace of mind war the property of his family, and she hoped the ladies wouldn't disturb it, 'cause the loss of seeh a husband would be a sufferin' calamity to the settlement."

The meetin' adjourned, and Jo went back to work, singin' and whistlin', as happy as usual, and ever since he's had a perfect shower of work for the gals all round the country keep goin' to him to git measured, tha say he desarves to be incouraged.

Your furst cousin, BILL SAPPER.

LIFE LIKE.—A Yankee artist has painted a cow and cabbage so natural that he was obliged to separate them before they were finished, because the cow commenced eating the cabbage!

The Dutchman and the Balloon.

BY FALCONBRIDGE.

A great many curious and facetious things have been told of Æronauts, and their aerial carriages, 'yclept balloons. A balloon making a descent on or near people who have never seen such a flying machine, unquestionably looks a leetle "supernatural-like," and, no doubt, makes their hair rise about as sudden as "bread stuffs" do semi-occasionally.

The Pennsylvanians are great on ballooning, that State having produced about a baker's dozen of aerial experimentalists, whose performances have been attended by no disasters, some pecuniary advantage—to the æronauts—and considerable addition to the general stock of useful science. Some years ago, a balloonist, named West, made several voyages to the upper regions from the town of Lancaster, Lancaster county, Pa. About the same period, a Dutch farmer from the interior of New York State, Dutch as sour krout, took it into his head to pay a visit to some of his equally Dutch frents, in the aforesaid Lancaster county. Nick Morgan was the old farmer's name—simple and honest he was as the day is long—with not ten consecutive ideas beyond the daily routine of his farm; a railroad and locomotive he had never seen, and as to the matter of balloons, they were altogether such contrivances as he had never dreamed nor heard of. Mounted upon his old sorrel mare, with a few edibles, and a clean shirt or two in his saddle bags, old Nick started on his tour to Pennsylvania.

The frow had preceded old Nick some few days in his visit, and he bustled along to join her.

Jogging along quietly and unsuspecting, not far from his journey's end, the old farmer and the old mare were crawling up the slope of a little hill, when a voice bawled out:

"Hurry on, old man! I want to pitch my grapnel into that hill side—hurry, hurry!"

The old sorrel pricked up her ears, and old Nick's eyes "pouched out" considerable, and he screwed and twisted them behind and before, right, left, and down below, yet nothing could he see, when still louder and more stentorian than before, came the same awful voice.

"Come, come, old codger, hang you, ride on, ride on, I say, or I'll pitch square on to you!"

The old man was bewildered, alarmed, horified! He reigned up the old mare, and the poor old "critter," as terrified as her master, trembled like a leaf! Old Nick's eyes fairly hung out in every direction, but upwards—but not the first ghost of a thing could he see, save the hill on which he stood transfixed, and a few old stumps close by.

To these old stumps, West, the Æronaut—who was some hundreds of feet in the air, just over the Dutchman—wished to fasten his grapling iron and stop his balloon, as night was approaching, and no better stop could be easily found, there and then West was extremely anxious to alight. But the old fellow and his horse materially interfered with this arrangement. Time was everything just then—the Æronaut did not wish to hook up the traveller, nor loose his balloon, so getting vexed at the Dutchman's delay, down West throws his grapnel, attached to many fathoms of strong cord, but which proving a leetle too short, just lit upon the hind quarters of the old sorrel, hooked the Dutchman's coat tail, and clamped the back part of the saddle tight as wax! At this critical juncture, a puff of wind bounced the balloon upwards, and lifted the mare clean and clear off her hind legs, and but for the girth parting, the poor quadruped' Dutchman and all, might have been carried bodily off! The old mare turned up her eyes just as the girth of the saddle broke, and, espying the great balloon over head, she bolted as if the veritable "old Nick" himself was after her!

Poor Nick Morgan! his coat tail came out by the roots, and he and the saddle were hitched and hauled forty rods down the hill, where, with all the breath knocked out of his body, the poor old man lay stretched out like a spread eagle.

"There, you infernal old donkey, you," bawled the Æronaut, as he was sailing away, "there you are, cuss you, I knew it!"

Old Nick revived in time to hear this malediction, and get one glimpse of the flying machine, when up he bounced, and after his mare he went ten miles an hour!

On, on he splurged, until not two ounces of vital air filled his breathing apparatus; over the fence of his relative's grounds Nick flew, and up the lane he traveled, bustled into the house, foamed, fumed, and cut up such wondrous strange didoes, that his wife and friends believed he had gone stark mad!

Exhausted quite, the poor old fellow threw himself down upon the bed, and to all the combined efforts of his friends, the tongue of Nick Morgan refused to operate and unravel the mystery. At length his frow essayed—

"Nicholas vat ish de matter mit you? Umph, speak, and tell your wife vot der matter ish, Umph?"

No reply, but turning his head over and looking at his wife and friends with all the subdued tendernes of a dying calf, the old fellow offered up a heavy doleful groan.

"Nicholos! mine tere husbant, vat ish de matter, umph?"

Another look, and another dreadful groan.

"Nicholas, Nicholas, vy don't ye tell me vats de matter?"

The old man rose up a little, stared around, caught hold of his wife's arm to satisfy himself that she was there, real flesh and blood; then, in a voice low and strong, betokening the deep solemnity of his feelings, he spoke—

"I've seen—seen—I—I've seen him!"

The friends all huddled around, the old frow leaned over the bed, and, with a voice of extreme anxiety, asked—

"Seen him! who vos it vot you see'd?"

"I—I've seen him!"

"Who?" cried all the friends.

"Der di-vil!"

"Der di-vil?" echo the whole group of listeners.

"Yaas! an oh! mine got, vot a pig bag he carries on his shoulders!"

Modesty and virtue are the most facinating dress for a female.

Correspondence of Sweet's Epicurean Bulletin.

Family Secrets.

MR. EDITOR.—While ascending the Mississippi, some eighteen months since, on board the steamboat Huntsville, the commander of that excellent vessel related the following anecdote of a couple of disciples of Father Miller. If you think it worthy of a place in the Epicurean Bulletin, pray make room for it.

REUBEN.

Memphis, Ten. Sept. 22, 1843.

In Coles county there lived a man named Isaac Dodson, and his wife, who were both firm believers in the prophecy of Father Miller; and not doubting for a moment the correctness of their prophet's calculations, they set about making active preparations for the day that was to terminate the existence of all sublunary things. After having "set their house in order," the following conversation took place:

Husband.—My dear wife, I believe I have made every preparation for to-morrow. I have forgiven all my enemies, and prayed for the forgiveness of all my sins, and I feel perfectly calm and resigned.

Wife.—Well, husband, I believe I am ready for the sound of the trumpet.

Husband.—I'm rejoiced to hear it. But, my dear wife, I have no doubt there are many little domestic secrets which we have kept hidden from each other, which, had they been made known at the time of their occurrence, might have produced unpleasant feelings; but as we have but one day more to live, let us unbosom ourselves freely to each other.

Wife.—Well, husband, you are right; there are some little things that I never told you, and which I intended should remain between me and my God. But as we have but one day left, I reckon it is right to make a clean breast to each other. I am ready; you begin, husband.

Husband.—No, dear, you begin.

Wife.—No, husband, you begin—I can't.

Husband.—No; you know, my love; Paul says husbands have a right to command their wives. It is your duty as a Christain woman to obey your husband and the father of your children. So begin love.

Wife.—In the sight of God I reckon it's right, so I will tell you, dear husband, our eldest son, William, is not your child.

Husband.—Great God, Mary! I never dreamed of your being untrue to me! Is that so?

Wife (in tears.)—Yes, God forgive me, it is true. I know that I did very wrong, and am sorry for it; but in an evil hour I fell, and there's no help for it now.

Husband.—WILLIAM NOT MINE! In the name of God, whose child is he!

Wife.—He's Mr. Graham's, the constable—the Lord be near your poor wife!

Husband.—So William ain't my child! Go on.

Wife.—Well, our daughter Mary, named after me, ain't yours neither.

Husband.—SALVATION! Talk on, Mary—come right out. Who's Mary's father?

Wife.—Mr. Grider, the man that built the meeting house, and went to the lower country.

Husband.—(resignedly.)—Well, as there is but one day more, I'll bear it; so go on, if you have any thing else.

Wife.—Well, there's our youngest—

Husband.—I suppose Jemmy aint mine?

Wife.—No, dear husband, Jemmy, whom we love so well, ain't yourn neither.

Husband.—MERCIFUL Lord! Is that so? In the name of the Savior, whose is he?

Wife.—He is the one-eyed shoemaker's, that lives at the forks of the road.

Husband.—Well, by heavens!—GABRIEL! blow your horn! I WANT TO GO NOW!

EXPRESSIVE.—The following private letter from a young officer in the army, who went through all the battles of Mexico, from Vera Cruz to the capital, and who was incessantly engaged in them by day and by night, furnishes a graphic description of the difficulties of crossing the Isthmus;

"My Dear G.:—I have just arrived at Panama I thought I 'saw the elephant' in Mexico, but it was'nt there. He lives here.

"Yours affectionately."

Parson Brownlow, the editor of the Jonesborough Whig, writing from Washington, says: "Since it is understood that I am not one of the fifty and large odd thousands of creeping, sycophantic and unfortunate office-seekers, with which the city abounds, I am regarded here as rather a clever sort of man than otherwise."

Going down street the other day we met a long, lank, water-jointed gold digger from Suckerdom. He carried in one hand a quarter section of gingerbread, and under his arm at least a whole section, perhaps as much as a township. Opening the large crevice in his "frontispiece" and raming into it and biting off a "ten acre lot" from one corner of his forty acre tract of "gungerbread," he said to us, the crumbs flying as he spoke,

"Look a-here stranger, aint you the man what prints the papers, the Statesman?" Supposing we understood him, we answered "Yes." "Waal," said he, "my change has gin out and I've gin out gwine to Californy; I seen in one o' your papers that a feller named Sam Francisco (dad drot him) has got all the gold, and its no use for me to go." Giving his "gungerbread" another "rip" and holding out the balance to us he continued, "Won't you take a bite of sweet cake, stranger?" Declining to do so, he went on, "Waal, I wants to be a printer; will you take me?" Seeing there was fun in prospect we asked him, "Have you ever set any?" meaning type of course. "Set," said he, "set! rekon I kin; haven't I set all mammy's old hens, and didn't every one of 'em hatch out every aggs, except old Speck, who went off and left her nest—consarn her old pictur." "You don't understand me; I don't want you to set hens, but type at a stand." "Waal that's square," and in he went again into the sweet cake! "You want me to set at a stand; O yes like them fellers I've seed pickin up them little jigamereers." By this time the crowd pressed between us and we "mizzled," leaving the Sucker to look out some other printing office in which to "set a standin" his "jigamerees."—[Missouri Statesman.]

Sonnet to a Tom Cat.

"Murahas Tomcatus."—ZEPHYR.

Thou midnight chorister, that o'er house-top rambles
With most melodious and mellifluent hymn,
Making night vocal, though the stars be dim,
As in thy mirth thy wanton spirit gambols
O'er shed and fence; with most chamois-like scrambles,
Pavement and chimney-top, alike are thine—
Haunts, where the foot of man can never go—
Loopholes and cocklofts, he can never know,
Echo thy dulcet and translucent whine,
Whose lofty note, like Jenny Lind's shall shine,
Thou very night-engale of school feline,
Prythee, sing on; there's magic mingled in thy song,
I love to linger near thy voice's swelling;
Thy heart seems figured in thy tongue, and telling
Some tale of "folly, falsehood, vice or wrong."
Unto the dreamy world, the lone-night long.

The following is an appropriate inscription for the collar of a dog:

Steal me not! myself and collar
Both are barely worth a dollar;
Puppies should befriend each other;
See me home, then, dearest brother?

Theodore Parker aptly compares some men who grow very rich by trade, to cabbages growing in a violet bed. They smother the violets, but are after all nothing but cabbages.

FRANK COURTSHIP.—An old Count paid his addresses to one of the riches heiresses of Paris. In asking her hand in marriage he frankly said to her—"Miss B., I am very old, and you are very young; will you do me the honor to become my widow?"

PUZZLE.—The following curious puzzle may be read upwards of 4,000 different ways by begining with the centre letter T, and taking the most zigzag course to any of the four corners:

Greenough's statue of Washington, which stands in front of the capitol of the United States, seems to be doomed to a speedy decay. The action of the weather and the imperfect character of the marble, have been the cause of serious mutilations which now disfigure this choice piece of sculpture.

KILLED EITHER WAY.—When the celebrated engineer Brunnel, who accomplished the desperate experiment of Tunnelling the Thames river, was brought before a committee of the British Parliament, he was asked if a speed of eighty miles per hour on a certain railroad would be much more dangerous to travellers upon it than a speed of forty?

"It would be just the same" said he.

"And a speed of ninety?"

"Just the same."

"And a speed of one hundred!"

"Just the same! For," added he, "if the cars should run off the track at the rate of forty miles per hour, the passengers would all go to destruction, and at one hundred miles per hour, they could not conveniently go any further."

LETTER FROM A BALTIMOREAN.

The following interesting extract of a letter from Mr. H. A. Harrison, to his brother in Baltimore, with which we have been kindly furnished, gives the very latest news from Crlifornia, and fully confirms previous accounts touching the wonderful mineral resources of that newly acquired territory:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 3, 1849.

In my former letters, I have sought to give you some idea of this great and fertile country, but I must confess that all I might say would convey but a faint conception of things as they really are; in fact it needs eyes to see, and witness, before belief.

No doubt you have ere this most glowing accounts in every paper, relative to the mineral productions of our mines, which strike wonder and doubt in every mind; but astonishing and incredible as it may seem, all that has been published to the world as yet, is but a weak description, compared to what really exists. New discoveries are being made every day, I may say; within the last month, notwithstanding the bad state of the weather at the diggins, as they are called, new mines have been discovered, surpassing all heretofore in richness and profusion—and it is said that in these new places of deposit, some have dug and washed a thousand dollars per day—and this is not at all improbable, wonderful or surprising, as it may seem. I saw a piece of gold, mingled with white stone the other day, that weighed about 40 ounces, and was purchased by a navy officer for $500; it was really a curiosity, and as such intended for some institute in the States. I have seen other rare and beautiful specimens of pure lump gold of an oval form, the size of an egg—some of these have been lately dispatched to the States. It would seem a strange sight to you to go about in the different stores and see all dealing in this precious metal — the oddity of a leather ponch held by one person pouring out the dust into a scale, and another with a spoon, nicely balancing it. You seldom hear the ring of coin; gold dust is the circulating medium—although within the last month probably more than $200,000 in coin have been brought here from below, for the purchase of dust, by speculators. It is now selling for $15 the ounce, still the dust is the tender. Owing to the inclemency of the season, there has been but little digging at the mines since the early part of December—but at some of the forks they have been digging with great success. In about a month hence the excitement will begin with an increase of some 1500 new comers—representatives of every nation, and they are still coming, all bound for the mines—wives, children and all—to combat with toil, sickness and hardships, and danger, to secure their fortunes; that they may get, cut with the loss of health to enjoy it. It is strange to see what will be endured, what suffering will be encountered for the sake of this tempting dust.

Within the last month upwards of five hundred passengers have arrived here, and are fitting out for the mines—and it is said that numbers besides are on their way in different vessels from Valparaiso, Callao and other ports. The town is literally crammed, and every house private or public is full. Where all get accommodated I do not know, and if there are 30,000 more on their way from the States, as it is reported, it is difficult to say what will be done—but one thing is fortunate, provisions are plenty at present, that is, flour, bread, pork, hams, coffee, rice and teas, but fresh meat and vegetables are very scarce at this time—fresh beef and pork have been out of the market for the last week—the little that is brought in is bought up readily. Beef sold this morning at $20 ℔ quarter; fresh pork 25 cents per pound; butter $1; cheese $1; hams the same; flour $18 ℔ barrel; pork $35 to $40; bread $30; coffee 16 cents; rice 10 cents; teas 60c. to $1 ℔ pound; board $12 ℔ week; washing $8 ℔ dozen; labor 6 to $10 ℔ day; wood $10 ℔ load, about half a cord; bricks $50 to $80 per thousand; lumber $150 per thousand; and town lots sell high, from $6 to $20,000. And notwithstanding these exorbitant rates, every body is doing well; we have no poor folks, and mechanics of every trade are busy—buildings are going up on every side, and indeed it is surprising to see the operations of this place at the present time and compare it with some four or five months back. There are now some twelve or fifteen houses under erection, and, in fact, when all are finished, and the other improvements in contemplation, in the way of churches, warehouses, public buildings, &c., are completed, we shall have as fine a town here as you will see at home—and as for location, will surpass, or at least equal our largest seaports. It will not be long before San Francisco will become one of the wonders of the world—if it has not already become so. It is destined to be unrivalled by any—and the home of the "nabobs."

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM THE PACIFIC OCEAN.—SHIPWRECKS AND LOSS OF LIFE.—A letter from Capt. Brown, of the ship Hannibal, of New London, Conn., published in the New London Chronicle, recently, dated St. George's Bay, December 1, 1848, reports that a terrific gale had taken place in the day sometime previously, and that the shore in that vicinity was completely strewed with wrecks—ships, brigs and cutters; most of them were English vessels. A board with the name "Emma, of New London," was found among the wrecks.

He also states that he had heard there were about one thousand lives lost!

This place is a great resort for the English vessels in pursuit of guano, and there is no safe harbor except under the island of Pavo, where the Hannibal lay, which affords shelter for one or two ships. A fleet of a hundred or more English vessels are frequently on the coast at a time.

Many tons of guano, which had been bagged and piled up, had been destroyed by the gale.

Capt. Brown also reports the Hannibal and her tender, the Sarah Lavinia, all well; with 3,650 bbls. oil, bound to Falkland Islands, wanting 500 bbls. to fill.

Our Government has ordered a survey of a road from Santa Fe to the Pacific.

"I cannot give you the right hand of fellowship, You have departed from the Lord."—W. Cunningham's Address to T. D. Brown, at Harrowgate. Sept., 1848.

(Concluded from our last number.)

Perhaps, sir, you too have heard that we have got a new Bible; we call the record that has been recently discovered, and which was dictated, hid up, brought forth, preserved and translated by angels, and the spirit and power of God, the Book of Mormon, and believe and know it contains an interesting and true account of a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth," who have long dwelt "in the fields of the wood," and have for their promised inheritance, even "to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills"—of a people and country that were till but recently altogether unknown to christian Europe—even America, with its "aborigines" or Indians as they are called. It brings to light what Jesus meant when he said, "other sheep I have which are not of this fold; they, too, must hear my voice"—the appearance and doctrines of Jesus to them—the fulness of the everlasting gospel, also it contains many prophecies of the events of these last days, more fully amplified than we find them in the Bible, which is the "stick of Judah," and this we esteem "the stick of Ephraim in the hands of Joseph," and they agree, being dictated by the same spirit.

Many shut God up in the heavens, and will not let him come out and speak again to his offspring; they say the canon of scripture is full, for we find at the end of the Bible these words, "If any man will add to the prophecies or the sayings of this book, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book," &c.; but surely, you, sir, know better than infer that God thereby forbids further revelations. Some say no, "Let God reveal as much as he pleases, but man is not to add, and your book is an addition by Joseph Smith—a man, he is not God." Every revelation of God has been given through man, for "holy men of God wrote and spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost" in all ages, when God has had a people on the earth, and this was and is the Revelation of God; and if the inspired men that followed after Moses had so understood a similar expression in his writings (Deut. iv. 2, xii. 32.) "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it," &c., there would have been no further revelations after that, consequently we should have had no revelations through Isaiah, Ezekiel, Peter, Paul, or John. John and Moses, led by the same spirit—the spirit of Truth and of God—forbad man, uninspired man, to add to or diminish their writings: how much have sectarian commentators to answer for, who have written volumes to try and prove that God did not mean what he said---that God Zion, Heaven, the Second Coming of Christ, the Millennium, were all spiritual, and not to be understood as they are described, even by the spirit of God, but only as they explain it!

Is the work of the Lord finished on the earth? No. These are but the beginnings of the "times of the restitution of ALL things." And as all things are to be restored to pristine goodness, and even to greater glory, I am at a loss to account for the mode of operation, unless God from time to time reveal his mind, purposes, and plans to man: he has always wrought through the agency of man, and I cannot see how the wicked are to be destroyed—the meek put in possession of the earth, and the Saints empowered to judge the world—unless God frequently reveal his will to man, and restore that order and those officers by whom the people can, as anciently, "enquire of the Lord"—unless his servants can say, "Thus saith the Lord"—then and only then will the righteous be satisfied. How little have the monied schemes and plans of man—missionary enterprises—evangelical alliances accomplished? As they advance, schism and divisions increase, and they go farther into the dark.

God has in every age, when he had a people on the earth, warned them of the judgments he was about to bring on the rebellious and disobedient. Did he not warn Noah, and prepare a salvation for him and all who should hear him and keep the commands of God? Yes; a great deliverance and a great salvation. And see how minute and particular God is in his revelations about the ark—the kind of wood, the length, breadth, size; in fact, he made Noah's course so plain and straight, that he had only to do what the Lord commanded him, and he would be saved with all who should hear him and do as he commanded them. Well, just "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." If Noah had said I believe it, Lord, would this have saved him? No; he knew better, and did what the Lord commanded. This was working out his own salvation, or giving heed to the revelations of God from heaven.

When the cities of the plain were to be destroyed, did the Lord conceal from Abraham or from Lot his purpose? No. He partook of Abraham's hospitality—talked with him, and heard the good old patriarch's reasonings and requests as to the possibility of saving these cities: he walked, talked, and ate with Abraham, and revealed to him certain matters that pertained to his family; and his companions lodged in Lot's house overnight! How different the God of the ancient Saints from bodiless nonentity of modern sectarians! Yes, He was a God that could eat, talk, and reveal plans for the salvation of the faithful and obedient; and yet sectarians say that God is an unchangeable being. I admit it, for, if nothing ever was, then nothing still would be, and of course this would be unchangeable. The God of the Latter-day Saints is an unchangeable God, and Jesus Christ was made in his "express image,"—and if ever Abraham's God warned him of destruction, and showed Lot by revelation how he might be saved he will assuredly do the same in these—the latter days—for as it was in the days of Lot and of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man.

Who, or what is the God of pious modern sectarians? A Spirit, who dwells far away beyond the bounds of time and space, unto whom they are crying continually that they may fall into the bottomless (!) pit; but he heareth them not, for he has no ears; but say they, he has eyes, for "His eyes are on the evil and the good;" although he dwells so far away, he is "every where present;" that is, his centre is every where and his circumference no where. How can he stretch forth his arms to save, when he has neither arms nor hands? How can his fury rise and be manifest in his countenance when he has no face? How can he trample upon the wicked in his fury, and tread the wine press of his wrath alone, and his vesture be dipped in blood, when he has no body, no parts, no passions. How can he? Oh, very well; for to an impossible being—a nonentity—ALL things are possible! and a God without lungs and mouth could very easily breath into the nostrils of man, and so constitute him a living soul!! How absurd.

Are there any other circumstances or features of resemblance between these last days and the days of Noah and Lot? Yes, many: Noah was a preacher of righteousness—told the people to do what was right for their own salvation; viz: to hear him and obey the revelations of God from heaven. Yet but few—very few—eight souls—were saved. So whenever God shall "come out of his hiding place to vex the nations in his sore displeasure," and give a revelation of his purpose to any one or more, but few will hearken to it, and fewer still obey the commands of God thus revealed; but "few men shall be left:" even as it was in the days of Noah, so also was it in the days of Lot; he had two daughters that were married, and he had two that man had never known, when he had a revelation that Sodom or the cities of the plain were to be destroyed, he went and warned his townsmen, more especially his sons-in-law: "Up, get you out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city; but he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law; and when morning came, and he lingered, the heavenly messengers took him, his wife, and his two daughters, that were there, and led them without the city." How few were saved! And why not his sons-in-law and his married daughters? For they rejected the truth—did not believe in this revelation from heaven—would not do what God commanded through his servants on earth—would not accept of salvation and deliverance in God's way. And "as it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man."

This leads me to dwell for a time on God's work in these last days; men want no more revelations from heaven; say they, "We have a Bible; it contains enough for our salvation; we want no more; besides if God were again to reveal his will to man, would he not choose some good christian Archbishop, Bishop, Rev. Dr. or more pious dissenting clergyman?" I reply, if he should now choose some such learned and popular divine, it would be out of his usual course; he has generally chosen the unlearned and weak, and rejected the learned and strong—preferring to "confound and bring to nought the things that are, by the things that are not;" See the unlearned apostles and seventies of Christ's day; also his opinion of the great and lofty church dignitaries of those times—"Whited sepulchres," "Inwardly full of dead men's bones," "Ye scribes and pharisees, hypocrites," "Inwardly ravening wolves," "Would not go into the kingdom themselves, and prevented those that would," "Blind leaders of the blind," "Ye do always err not knowing the scriptures," "Going about to make prosolytes, and making them two-fold more the children of hell." Is there any resemblance in the conduct of the hypocrites of these days—the "teachers for hire and diviners for money"—to that of the ancient sectarians as described by Jesus? They that have the light of heaven—the spirit of God—can see how striking the likenesss. Men generally, and especially the man-made priesthood of former days rejected what they considered necessary innovations; they wanted no ark, for there was no appearance of a flood, and God was merciful; yes, full of mercy. Their plan of salvation was best; they did not feel they wanted God's plan—they rejected revelation, so they did in Lot's day—they wanted no Zoar to flee to, for they did not believe in revelation, saw no appearance of a destruction by fire, neither did the people in the days of Jesus. "He came to his own, and they received him not." Truth has never been popular; and the first to reject God's truth or revelation have always been those who had an interest in propagating error and if this be true, there is more hope, sir, that you may not reject this work from your being a disinterested enquirer after truth; nevertheless it is a true and faithful saying—"It is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." The very fact, that in the wisdom of God, under Jesus, Joseph Smith, a poor unlearned farmer's boy, is placed at the head of the kingdom of God in these last days, and that what we have received of intelligence and power has been received from heaven, through such a channel, even through him, is a great trial for a rich and learned man to acknowledge and submit to.

Did not this apparent inferiority form part of the trial and hindrance in the days of Jesus? "Is not this the son of Joseph: the carpenter? are not his brothers and sisters with us? and yet he calls himself the Son of God! and says he has revelations from heaven!" and what he saw his Father do that did he—"I and my Father are one." Rich and learned men dislike to acknowledge a poor illiterate head, even though of God's appointing; but, say you, here is the obstacle, "Convince me that Joseph Smith is sent of God." I may make make a few additional remarks on this subject ere I conclude this letter, meantime I would here only add, that the above shows God's choice heretofore to have been of such as he, and if any man will do as Mr. Smith taught, he will know of the doctrines he taught—that they are the doctrines of Christ, and that the gifts, powers, and blessings promised by Jesus Christ and by him, follow the obedient believers in this day as in Christ's day.

I shall not dwell upon the image that Daniel saw in a vision, but would remark that we too, like you, believe that "in the days of these kings, the God of heaven will set up a kingdom." We may differ as to our expectation of the manner in which this kingdom will come. John sees an angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to men that dwell upon the earth." If, then, the gospel, or God's plan of salvation had been on the earth, what need to send it from heaven again? What was the condition of "these kings?" like the toes that represent them, they are partly weak and partly strong, and as iron and clay do not adhere, so there is no principle of Union or, strength among them; indeed it is esteemed the perfection of modern government and the palladium of their strength, to be nicely divided into parties—"the balance of power!" that is, one portion pulling one way, the other pulling as much in the opposite direction? standstill governments, continually working, yet doing nothing and worse than nothing, fulfiling the prohecies of Samuel—see 1 Sam. viii. 10—18—ministering to the wants and whims of pampered kings and governors, who are not guided by the revelation of God's will from heaven; who think this altogether unnecessary, and being in the political world as parsons and priests are in the ecclesiastical, interested parties, they too, without doubt, will reject the THEOCRACY—the kingdom of God and the government thereof. Their conduct how unlike the union in the kingdom of God, which is power, all baptized into one body by one spirit, having one Lord, one faith, and one hope—all pulling one way, accomplishing God's purposes, and no "schism in the body."

I have no doubt but many who persecute the church of God in this day, do it ignorantly and from zealous motives, as Saul did, and verily believe they are doing God's service; this resemblance to one who is now called a persecutor is, in my mind, a great and important fact, although many see no parallel, and tauntingly say, "Saul persecuted the followers of Jesus the Son of God, we persecute the followers of Joseph Smith, an impositor and a deceiver." Leave the men and look at the principles and doctrines of the Saints of former days and those of latter days—they are the same, they both teach the same doctrines, insist upon the necessity of attending to the same ordinances, "obeying the same gospel," receiving the same gifts, blessings, and powers by the laying on of hands—being led by the same spirit into all truth; and they are persecuted by the same spirit—a a spirit of falsehood and opposition—by men who esteem themselves the servants of God, as Saul did, but who perhaps unconsciously are teaching the doctrines of devils, and are led by him who is the father of lies, the accuser of the brethren, and the opposing and rebellious spirit from the beginning.

And here I would show what some of the devil,s doctrines are and ever have been.

DOCTRINES OF GOD AND OF THE SAINTS.	DOCTRINES OF DEVILS AND OF SINNERS.
"Thou shalt not eat, for thou shalt die in the day thou eatest."	"Thou mayest eat, and thou shalt not die."
"I know Job; he is a perfect and an upright man, and one that feareth God."	"Put forth thine hand, and touch all that Job hath, and he will curse thee to thy face."
"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only thou shalt serve."	"I will give thee all the kingdoms of the world, if thou wilt fall down and worship me."
"He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved."	"He that believeth shall be saved." "Baptism is a non-essential."
"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Of course, infants cannot hear preaching nor believe, therefore, baptism to them is unnecessary.	"Baptize infants—it is not necessary to preach to them, nor for them to believe—but if not baptized, they must go to hell, even though not a span long, for they are born in sin through Adam."
"These signs shall follow them that believe," — having been baptized.	"No signs shall follow the believer— none are needed now."
"In my name they shall cast out devils."	"They cannot cast out devils, for there are none now to be cast out."
"They shall speak with new tongues."	"There is no need for this gift—let them learn new tongues at colleges."
"They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them."	"They cannot take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall kill them."
"They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."	"They may not lay hands on the sick, for they shall not recover."
"If any of you are sick, send for the Elders: they shall pray over you, and annoint you with oil, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord will raise them up, and if they have committed sins, these shall be forgiven."	"If any of you are sick, send for the doctors, and they shall give you medicines, minerals, poisons, &c., and you may or may not get better; you may pray, but annointing with oil and laying on of hands are unnecessary: go to the penitent form that you may get forgiveness of your sins."
"And the Lord said, write the vision, and make it plain upon tables."—"For the vision is yet for an appointed time, wait, for at the end it shall speak, and not lie—it will surely come." "Thou shalt speak out of the ground—thy speech shall be low out of the dust." "Truth shall spring out of the earth."	"Truth comes from our colleges and pulpits; and the Lord says nothing now: we shall have none of your visions nor writings upon plates; this savers too much of the 'Book of Mormon.' No revelations will come in the end, — certainly not out of the ground, dust, or earth: no, the truth we believe in comes from the lofty head—our exalted seminaries and elevated pulpits."
"And the vision is as the words of a book that is sealed, which neither the learned nor the unlearned can read,"—"and in that day shall the deaf hear the words of THE book."	"There are neither visions nor sealed books now, especially if written on plates: our learned men can read any language, and there is no need for the Lord to aid in translation—that the deaf may hear the book read." Ergo, God and ALL the Prophets are liars!

The Saints of the last days believe, receive, and abide in the above doctrines of God. "Who are the seduced—the deceivers and being deceived, that are teaching these doctrines of devils—that trangress and abide not in the doctrines of Christ, and therefore have neither the Father nor the Son?" Answer—"The enlightened Christains, the sectarians of the nineteenth century." Oh, sir, meditate upon these sayings, and let the 666 different sects now extant reflect and be warned. "If any man, or even an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel than what I have preahed, let him be an accursed;" and they will be destroyed, as they now are cursed, unless they repent and acknowledge God, his kingdom and government, and that speedily. Even "this generation shall not pass away till all these things—and many more of great importance—be fulfilled."

I feel that for the present I have nearly completed my purpose. I might dwell upon many great—very important—matters that pertain to THE gospel, which have been revealed from the heavens and by the Spirit of God in these the last days: for this Spirit, which is received by the laying on of hands, takes of the things of God, and reveals them unto us; yea, the deep things—present, past, and to come. But, sir, I know a more certain way by which you can obtain this superior intelligence; viz., by obeying the gospel—"minding the same things"—receiving the same Spirit, by which you will be led into ALL truth. You will thus understand, even more perfectly than you do, the signs, times, and circumstances connected with Christ's second coming, and his personal reign on this earth—the removal of the curse therefrom—the gathering of the dispersed of Judah—the rebuilding of Jerusalem—the coming forth of the outcasts of Israel, even the ten tribes—and the establishing, building up, and glory of Zion, to which the first dominion shall come, and whence also shall come forth the law of the Lord, at the same time his word shall proceed from Jerusalem—of the deliverance that shall be provided in Zion and in Jerusalem, in the hour of God's judgements—of the locality of Zion, and the gathering of the remnants of Israel to Zion, to which "many nations shall say, Let us go up, that we may learn more perfectly the ways and law of the Lord"—of what these remnants are composed, and how we know these things, even by REVELATIONS from the heavens in our own days; without which, and the Priesthood, "this gospel of the kingdom never could be preached to all nations before the end;" without which the Saints could not judge the world, be saved in the perilous times of the last days, overcome all things, even the powers of darkness, and bring to pass much restitution: by these officers, gifts, and powers will the THEOCRACY be made manifest, even this government of God on the earth, by apostles, prophets, faith, and the power of God; the "hills will be brought low, and the valleys be exalted; Satan and the powers of darkness be bound; this earth be changed and elevated to celestial glory; where among the luminous worlds—without number or end—that are and to be in the immensity of space, it will for ever shine, having need neither of the sun nor moon to lighten it, God being the light thereof."

I send you a catalogue of the works which we receive, believe and recommend—written by "holy men of God, who are moved upon by the Spirit of God"—inspired—to write the things of God, as they are commanded in this our day, as the Saints of former days did. They may be had at "The MILLENNIAL STAR office, 15, Wilton Street, Liverpool." I would respectfully call your attention to these, because they contain intelligence, which is true and faithful, of the origin and records of the aborigines of America—of the priesthood, officers, revelations, and kingdom of God—of the curses and scattering, the blessings and gathering of Israel—of the call, endowments, persecution, sufferings, and murder of Joseph Smith and many more of the Saints of the most High, whom the wicked, now as formerly, think they shall wear out, but they cannot; for I bear testimony, "the kingdom now set up shall not be left to other people, and shall never have an end;" it is the kingdom of God spoken of by Daniel, and "the kingdoms and dominion under the whole heaven will Jesus give to THE SAINTS, and they shall take it, and possess it, even for ever and ever." Amen.

There are hundreds of objections to this work and to these doctrines which have been so often met, that I shall here notice one: "Why lay so much stress on BAPTISM by immersion?" Because God, the eternal Father, and Jesus do, and the apostles anciently did: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Thou must be born again. Except a man—that is, any, every man—be born of water and of the Spirit, he can neither see nor enter the kingdom of God." Although in the same discourse (John iii.) Jesus dwells upon believing and faith for eternal life and salvation as needful, Baptism is as essential; indeed faith without this ordinance properly administered is dead. And that sprinkling, or pouring, was not the plan of God, is yet further evident in this saying: "that John, Jesus and his disciples baptized at Ænon, for there was much water there." (John iii. 22, 23.)

You, sir, believe; and I call upon you to repent, and be baptized by one having authority—received as Joshua and Aaron received theirs—FOR the remission of your sins, and you shall receive the Holy Ghost. If you will, you shall be yet more abundantly blessed; if not, you shall be condemned, and your blood shall not stain my garments. I have warned you as a father, as one whom I love, and to whom I am much indebted; and I would, in Christ's stead, beseech you to be reconciled unto God in God's way, and leave the ways of men to those who make men their stay. Search the scriptures, and pray simply, honestly, and earnestly to God for light and the truth in the name of Jesus, and you will obey the gospel, which is the sincere desire of, sir, your servant for Christ's sake. Amen.

MAXIMS.—Persevere against discouragements. Keep your temper. Employ leisin study, and always have some work in hand. Be punctual and methodical in business, and never procrastinate. Never be in a hurry. Preserve self-possession, and be not talked out of a conviction. Rise early, and be an economist of time. Maintain dignity, without the appearance of pride; manner is something with every body, and everything with some. Be guarded in discourse, attentive and slow to speak. Never acquiesce in immoral or pernicious opinions. Be not forward to assign reasons to those who have right to ask. Think nothing in conduct unimportant and indifferent. Practice strict temperance, and in all transactions remember the final account.

PARALLEL QUALITIES OF THE SEXES.—There is an admirable partition of qualities between the sexes, which the Author of Being has distributed to each, with a wisdom that challenges our unbounded admiration.

Man is strong—woman is beautiful.

Man is daring and confident—woman is diffident and unassuming.

Man is great in action—woman in suffering.

Man shines abroad—woman at home.

Man talks to convince—woman to persuade and please.

Man has a rugged heart—woman a soft and tender one.

Man prevents misery—woman relieves it.

Man has science—woman taste.

Man has judgment—woman sensibility.

Man is a being of justice—woman an angel of mercy.

Mr Vechten of the Tonawanda Democrat has applied for a patent for an invention by which mail and all express matter can be transmitted at the rate of one thousand miles an hour. A tube is formed of a given size and length, and by means of an air pump, a carriage is propelled by a cylindrical form; the air operating on a piston head or driver, which is to be attached in the rear of a train of cars.

A PERTINENT REPLY.—A young buck, be'onging to the Independent drink-or-let-it-alone-just-as-I-please-signing-the-pledge-society popped the question to a pretty girl a short time since, who brought a still deeper blush to his always blushing countenance, by replying that she had, signed a pledge to neither drink or traffic in ardent spirits, she did not feel at liberty to traffic herself off for a hogs-head of brandy.

A Maryland paper gives ninety-nine cheers for the new Postmaster General, because he has regulated the mails in that vicinity, and given the people additional facilities of communication with the rest of the world.

[We hope he will take us into consideration, and grant us a direct communication with the world.]

THE MORMONS.—We wish to call the reader's attention to the new, and most extraordinary condition of the Mormons. Seven thousand of them have found a resting place in the most remarkable spot on the North American continent. Since the children of Israel wandered through the wilderness, or the Crusaders rushed on Palestine, there has been nothing so historically singular as the emigration and recent settlement of the Mormons. Thousands of them came from the Manchesters and Sheffields of England, to join other thousands that congregated from Western New-York, and New-York, and New-England—boasted descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers—together to follow after a New Jerusalem in the West. Having a temple amid the Churches and schools of Lake County, Ohio, and driven from it by popular opinion, they build the Nauvoo of Illinois. It becomes a great town. Twenty thousand people flock to it. They are again assaulted by popular persecution; their prophet murdered—their town depopulated; and finally their temple burned! Does all this persecution to which they have been subjected, destroy them? Not at all. Seven thousand are now settled, in flourishing circumstances, on the Plateau summit of the North American continent. Thousands more are about to join them from Iowa, and thousands more are coming from Wales. The spectacle is most singular, and this is one of the singular episodes of the great Drama of this age. The spot on which the Mormons are now settled, is geographically, one of the most interesting in the Western World.

There is no other just like it, that we recollect, on the globe. Look at the map a little East of the great Salt Lake, and just South of the South-West Pass, and You will see in the North-east corner of California, the summit level of the waters which flow on the North American continent. It must be six thousand feet, perhaps more, above the level of the Atlantic. In this sequestered corner, in a vale hidden among mountains and lakes, are the Mormons; and there rise mighty rivers, than which no continent has greater. Within a stone's throw, almost, of any other, lie the head springs of the Sweet Water and Green Rivers. The former flows into the Platte River; that into the Missouri; and that into the Mississippi; and that into the Gulf of Mexico; and becomes a part of the Gulf Stream, leaving the shores of distant lands. The latter, the Green River, flows into the Colorado; the Colorado into the Gulf of California, and is mingled with the Pacific. The one flows more than 2,500 miles; the other more than 1,500. These flow into tropical regions. Just North of the same spot are the head streams of Snake River, which flows into the Columbia, near lat. 46 degrees, after a course of one 1,000 miles. Just South are the sources of the Rio Grande, which, after winding, 1,700 miles, finds the Gulf of Mexico. It is a remarkable point in the earth's surface where the Mormons are; and locked in by mountains and lakes, they will probably remain and constitute a new and peculiar colony.—Cincinatti Atlas.

MIDNIGHT JUDGES AND SUNDAY MINISTERS.—The older Adams on the last night of his Presidential term, appointed several persons to judgeships. That act, from the date of its commission up to this time, has been a standing theme of fierce denunciation with the present Locofoco party. The term "midnight judges" has been upon every Locofoco tongue, and we see it stated that Mr. Polk himself, while in Congress, tauntingly introduced it into one of his speeches against the Whig party!

And now look at Mr. Polk's own conduct in the nomination of Mr. Hannegan as minister to Berlin. The nomination, it is true, was not, like that of Mr. Adam's judges, make at midnight on the 3d of March, but, far worse, it was made a day later—on the 4th of March, and Sunday at that!

Where henceforth will be the thunders of Locofoco presses and Locofoco orators upon the subject of the midnight judges?—[Lou, Journal.

A bill is before the Massachusetts Legislature for the protection of tradesmen, mechanics and manufacturers, against the forgery and fraudulent use of stamps, brands or marks, with which they designate their merchandise.

PRINTER'S PROVERBS.—Never inquire thou of the editor for the news, for behold it is his duty at the appointed time to give it unto thee without asking. When thou dost write for his paper, never say unto him, "what thinkest thou of my piece?" for it may be that the truth may offend thee. It is not fit that thou shouldst ask him who is the author of an article, for his duty requires him to keep such things to himself. When thou dost enter into his office, have a care unto thyself that thou dost not look at what may be lying open, for that is not meet in the sight of good breeding. Neither examine thou the proof sheet, for it is not ready to meet thine eye, that thou mayest understand it. Prefer the best conducted paper to any other, and subscribe immediately for it and pay in advance, and it shall be well with thee and thy little ones.—[N. O. Pic.

If INDUSTRY is no more than habit, it is at least an excellent one. "If you ask me which is the real hereditary sin of human nature, do you imagine I shall answer pride, or luxury, or ambition, or egotism? No, I shall say indolence. Who conquers indolence will conquer all the rest." Indeed, all good principles must stagnate without mental activity.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30, 1849.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

Emigrants to California are sending back a great quantity of this number of the Guardian to their friends, with most of their names inserted. We here say, that we are very eligibly situated on the extreme frontier, to get the earliest news from the plains—from the gold mines, and from the Salt Lake Valley,—and we shall spare no pains to get the earliest news from these exciting and important quarters.

We have expresses running to and from those regions often, and should any persons to whom this number is sent, be disposed to subscribe for the Guardian, we shall be happy to forward it to them. They will see our ternis on the first page.

The signs of the times are ominous. Battles fierce and bloody in Europe,—passing war-clouds cast their gloomy shadows upon various countries of the old world, while the hollow rumbling of the political elements, say to every observing mind: this is an eventful year.

The cholera, the destroying angel's gastly agent, is raging along the rivers from Pittsburg to this place, and in many parts of the east and west. Boats are disabled by it and are compelled to tie up. Several little towns along the Missouri River, we are told, are nearly desolated. A friend of ours from below told us the other day that his horse died with the cholera, exhibiting all the symptoms of that fatal disease. There were sixty deaths on board the ill-fated "Mary" on her passage from St. Louis to this place. They were mostly emigrants from England and Wales under the charge of Capt Dan. Jones. There have been six deaths in this county, of cholera, among the citizens and six only that we know of. No new cases among citizens or emigrants. The health of all is good at the present time.

The weather is extremely cold and wet. Season backward. Country thronged with emigrants for the gold region. Gold, famine, pestilence and war, are likely to engage the attention of the world this year. We hope soon however for better weather.

INDIANS.

In consequence of so many horses being stolen by the Indians, in this county last year, and some fifteen or twenty head being recently taken from our back settlements, the citizens have become so exasperated and determined, many of them, that they will shoot the Indians if they catch them any where on this side. We do not wish them harmed, and to avoid it, we warn them to keep away, and we hope Major Miller, their agent, will again warn them, as he has repeatedly done, not to come on this side; for some honest Indians might get hurt. Some of the citizens will shoot them if they find them here. Our hints heretofore have been given to frighten them away without hurting them; but they have not regarded them. We now again advise them to keep away. The citizens will bear no longer their thefts and depredations. They will be among us in the day time, professing to be very good and honest, get fed among the citizens, and perhaps the next morning, we will hear of a lot of horses and mules being run off and tracked to the river and the place found where they were rushed in and swum over.

In the hurry to get our extra out several errors occurred which we have corrected for this paper.

The District Court Seal of Pottawatamie County arrived here a few days since, and is now in the hands of Mr. Slean, the proper officer. This looks a little more like the color of generosity than some previous movements of the "powers that be." We went run away with this prairie county.

KANESVILLE, May 23d, 1849.

JOSEPH YOUNG, Esq.,

DEAR SIR: I perceive from a number of the "Keokuk Dispatch," published in September last, that I am made to say, that Orson Hyde showed me a draft upon the Whig Committee at Washington for the sum of $1000. This statement made by the Editor of the Dispatch is false. I have made no statement to any person, or in any place contrary to those made in my letter to the Hancock Patriot in October last.

I am yours very respectfully,
A. W. BABBITT.

If the statement, denying the publication of the "Dispatch," had been made at the time it appeared, we confess that it would have altered the tone of some of our letters in relation to Mr. Babbitt. If an angel from Heaven had declared that we showed him a check on Washington or on any other place or on any person under heaven, for a thousand dollars, we should have been forced to say that he told a falsehood. We borrowed the money to get our press, and we expect to pay it again honorably and fully. We have no feelings against Mr. Babbitt that we are unwilling to lay aside, neither are we disposed to extort, or exact from him the last farthing.

Mr. Babbitt's statement to Mr. Young, puts the veto upon the bribery speculation charged upon the Whigs. In this, Mr. B. has done himself justice has honored the truth, and liberated us from unmerited censure. There were several tributary causes of difficulty between us, arising in a great measure, out of a misunderstanding of each other's position, and the consequences were, a pretty brisk and spirited fire at each other. We have concluded to drop and settle the matter, and be friends so far as the Church is concerned. Yet we confess that we have not made a Whig of him; and we think that he will do us the justice to say that he has not made a very deep democratic impression upon us.

To prevent scattering and wasting the gold dust by paying it out in small quantities, the people in the Valley have collected up all the Kirtland bills they have, and put them in circulation; and when they want any amount of gold dust, they return the bills, and have it weighed out to them. This may call into the Valley all the Kirtland money that was smuggled and stolen. They had better call wolf skins so much, and let these be the currency as wolves are so plenty there.

From Our Extra of Monday, May 28.

42 DAYS FROM Salt Lake City

Our Express arrived here yesterday at 12 o'clock, M., bringing us intelligence up to the 15th of April, and the news from that place will be found in the General Epistle which we publish to-day. Our Express lay by seven days on the road. They met the first California Emigrants about 130 miles this side of Fort Laramie. They were one week in beating their road through the snows of the mountains one hundred miles. Lost only one animal in coming through, and that was drowned. Weather was fine till they arrived near Fort Childs—since then rainy and cold. Emigrants were well generally, particularly after they got well out on the plains. Near the frontier there were a few cases of cholera, but nothing very serious, except four men, they report, having been accidentally shot by taking guns out of wagons with caps on them. They were throwing out their provisions by the way and lighting up. The express say that there is no end to the gold in that country—though none has been found in the Valley, still the regions two or three hundred miles west of it abound in the shining ore. They report plenty of grass on the Plains for usual emigration. Met Mr. Egan, with our express going out, about 70 miles west of old Fort Kearney—all well.

Politics.

Our friends in the Valley have been made acquainted with our course in politics, and though their own political zeal does not seem to run very high; still they want a government there, and we trust their request will be favorably considered at Washington. They are in a little world by themselves,—a world which has its own system of rivers, lakes, &c. Its very formation and locality call for a Government if the Territory is inhabited. They are so far away that they have not caught much of a political spirit. They say in a private letter to us: "With regard to politics and political papers, we care little about them, and you are at liberty to do as you please concerning these matters while you tarry."

Private letters from the Valley say that teams cannot be sent to meet the emigration, and that all should have at least six months provision after they get there.

Much important matter had to be omitted, to give place to the news from the Great Salt Lake Valley.

By the spirit and tenor of the following Epistle, our friends will observe that our counsel and movements are corroborated by the voice of the authorities in the Valley. When they saw Lyman Wight's production, they cut him off and appointed another in his place. Their counsel and feeling about members of our church going to dig for gold are the same as ours. Their view, since the Spring opened, about an extra amount of provisions to be taken, is precisely like ours. They do not recommend people to emigrate to the Valley unless they are well prepared. We have counselled the same. Do not strain the point. Better stay here for the present than go there unprepared.

Our friends in the Great Basin will send on Dr. Burnhyson, as an agent or delegate, with a petition to Congress for a Territorial Government in that quarter. The petition is numerously signed. We may look for him in July.

EPISTLE.

First General Epistle of the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from the Great Salt Lake Valley, to the Saints scattered throughout the Earth; Greeting:

BELOVED BRETHREN: Since the General Epistle of the Twelve Apostles, from Winter Quarters, December 23d, 1847, many events have transpired interesting in their nature as pertaining to the advancement of the Church, preparatory to the coming of the Son of Man; and we cheerfully improve this, the earliest opportunity to communicate to you a brief history of these events, together with such council, as the Holy Spirit shall indite.

The winter and spring of 1848 were diligently improved, by many of the Apostles and Elders, in visiting the churches and brethren in different parts of the States, counselling and setting in order the things of the kingdom, and in endeavoring to procure means for the removal of the Church at Winter Quarters, to the Great Salt Lake City; but, although some of the Saints were liberal according to their ability, yet there was not sufficient collected to defray the expences which the Presidency had previously incurred in searching out a new location and other similar operations for the benefit of the Church, without rendering them any assistance for their contemplated journey, which was finally facilitated by the loan of teams, &c., by the brethren on Pottawatamie lands, and friends in and about camp.

The General Conference, on the 6th, of April, 1848, held at the Log Tabernacle, in Iowa, unanimously acknowledged brother Brigham Young to be the President, and Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards his Councillors; the three constituting a Quorum of the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Brothers Young and Kimball left Winter Quarters in May, and Brother Richards in July, with large emigrating companies for this place, where they arrived in September and October, and found the Saints enjoying almost universal health. Elder Amasa Lyman also accompanied this camp, and about the same time Elder Orson Pratt, left Winter Quarters for England. Elder Woodruff took his departure for Canada, and Elders Hyde, Geo. A. Smith, and Ezra T. Benson located with the Saints on Pottawatamie Lands. Brother Richards left Winter Quarters entirely vacated: many of our cattle having been destroyed by the Indians, and many horses stolen on both sides of the river. A portion of brother Kimball's camp was fired upon at the Elk Horn river by a band of the Otoes and Omahas, and three of the brethren were wounded, two of whom are maimed for life.

On the 30th of November we received a mail from Kanesville, Iowa, by the hand of Capt. Allen Compton and three other brethren, giving us the cheering intelligence that many of the Saints who were unable to proceed further on their journey had settled in various parts of Pottawatamie county, and been exceedingly blest in raising grain esculent roots, vegetables, flocks and herds, and in preparation generally for future emigration, and that union and brotherly love prevailed.

By the same mail we also learned that the unparalleled prosperity of the work had increased the Church in England, and the British Dominions adjacent, more than 7000 souls during the previous year; while the power of God, with the power of the devil opposing, had been made manifest, as in days of old, to the great joy of the Saints.

Lyman Wights' manifesto was received at the same time, which clearly demonstrated to the Saints that he was not one with us, consequently the church dis-fellowshipped him, and all who shall continue to follow him.

On our arrival in this Valley, we found the brethren had erected four forts, composed mostly of houses, including an area of about 47 acres, and numbering about 5000 souls including our camp. The brethren had succeeded in sowing and planting an extensive variety of seeds, at all seasons, from January to July, on a farm about 12 miles in length and from one to six in width, including the city plot. Most of their early crops were destroyed in the month of May by crickets, and frost, which continued occasionally till June; while the latter harvest was injured more or less by drouth, by frost which commenced its injuries about the 10th October, and by the outbreaking of cattle; the brethren were not sufficiently numerous to fight the crickets, irrigate the crops and fence the farms of their extensive planting, consequently they suffered heavy losses; though the experiment of the past year is sufficient to prove, that valuable crops may be raised in this Valley, by an attentive and judicious management.

The winter of 1847—8 was very mild, grass abundant, flocks and herds thriving thereon, and the earth tillable, most of the time during each month; but the winter of 1848—9 has been very different, more like a severe New England winter. Excessive cold commenced on the 1st day of December, and continued till the latter part of February. Snow storms were frequent, and though there were several thaws, the earth was not without snow during that period, varying from one to three feet in depth, both in time and places. The coldest day the past winter was the 5th of February, the mercury falling 33 degrees below freezing point, and the warmest day was Sunday the 25th of February, mercury rising to 21 degrees above freezing point, fahrenheit. Violent and contrary winds have been frequent. The snow on the surrounding mountains has been much deeper, which has made the wood very difficult of access; while the cattle have become so poor, through fasting and scanty fare, that it has been difficult to draw the necessary fuel and many have had to suffer, more or less, from the want thereof. The winter commenced at an unusual and unexpected moment, and found many of the brethren without houses or fuel, and although there has been considerable suffering, there has been no death by the frost. Three attempts have been made by the brethren with pack animals or snow shoes to visit Fort Bridger, since the snow fell, but have failed: yet it is expected that Cumpton will be able to take the mail east soon after April Conference.

In the former part of February, the Bishops took an inventory of the bread-stuff in the Valley, when was reported a little more than three-fourths of a pound per day, for each soul, until the 9th of July; and considerable was known to exist which was not reported. As a natural consequence some were nearly destitute while others had an abundance; the common price of corn since harvest has been two dollars; some have sold for three; at present there is none in market at any price. Wheat has ranged from four to five dollars, and potatoes from six to twenty dollars per bushel, and though not to bought at present, it is expected that there will be a good supply, for seed, by another year.

Our public works are prosperous, consist of a council house, 45 feet square, two stories, building by tithing; also a bridge across the Western Jordan at an expense of $700, and six or seven bridges across minor streams, to be paid by a one per cent property tax; also a bath house at the warm spring.

A field of about 3,000 acres, has been surveyed South of and bordering on the city, and plotted in five and ten acre lots, and a church farm of about 300 acres. The five and ten acre lots were distributed to the brethren by casting the lots, and every man is to help build a pole, ditch, hue a stone fence, as shall be most convenient, around the whole field in proportion to the land he draws, also a canal on the east side for the purpose of irrigation. There are three grist mills, and five or six saw mills in operation, and several more in contemplation. Mill stone equal to French burr is found here.

The location of a tannery and foundry are contemplated, as soon as the snows leave the mountains.

The Forts are rapidly breaking up, by the removal of the houses on to the city lots; and the city is already assuming the appearance of years, for any ordinary country; such is the industry and perseverence of the Saints.

A winter's hunt, by rival parties of one hundred men each, has destroyed about 700 wolves and foxes, 2 wolverines, 20 minx and pole cats, 500 hawks, owls and magpies, and 1,000 ravens, in this Valley and vicinity.

On the return of a portion of the "Mormon Batlalion," through the northern part of Western California, they discovered an extensive gold mine, which enabled them by a few days delay, to bring sufficient of the dust to make money plenty in this place for all ordinary purposes of public convenience, in the exchange the brethren deposited the gold dust with the Presidency who issued bills, or a paper currency; and the "Kirtland Safety Fund" re-signed is on par with gold.

Elder Addison Pratt arrived in company with a part of the Battalion, on the 28th of September, 1848, and found his family in health, from whom he had been absent about five years, on a mission to the Society Islands, where has been baptized about 1200 souls. Elder Grouard, who still remains at the Islands, having baptized about 620 at Aua. The confidence of these native Saints is very great in the work of the Lord, and they seek for counsel in all their ways, insomuch that Elder Grouards' labors became insupportable, and caused him to risk a voyage of 300 miles in an open boat, to bring brother Pratt to his assistance; and, although he was shipwrecked on this voyage, yet he was prospered; was taken up by a passing vessel, accomplished his mission, and returned to Aua with brother Pratt; thus by the labors of Elder Rogers, who returned and died some two years since, and elders Pratt and Grouard the gospel has been planted on some 12 or 15 of the Western Islands.

On the 1st of January, John Smith Uncle to the Prophet Joseph Smith, was ordained Patriarch for the Church, holding the keys and powers thereof same as Father Joseph Smith and Hyrum.

On the 12th of February, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and Franklin D. Richards, were ordained members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, to fill the vacancies occasioned by the removal of three to the First Presidency, and Lyman Wight disfellowshipped. The names of the members of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, now are, in their order as follows: Orson Hyde, Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and Franklin D. Richards.

Of the Presidency of the Seventies, Zera Pulsifer, Levi W. Hancock, Jedidah M Grant, and Henry Herriman are in this Valley. Joseph Young and Benjamin L. Clapp are in Pottawatamie county, and Albert P. Rockwood is on a mission to the Eastern States. Joseph Young is the presiding officer of the Seventies.

Immediately after filling the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, the First Presidency, assisted by the Twelve present in the Valley; proceeded to organize a Stake of Zion at the Great Salt Lake City; Daniel Spencer, President; and David Fulmer and Willard Snow, Councillors.

The High Council consists of Isaac Morley, Phineas Richards, Shadrach Roundy, Henry G. Sherwood Titus Billings, Eleazer Miller, John Vance, Levi Jackman, Ira Eldridge, Elisha H. Groves, William W. Major, and Edwin D. Woolley.

John Young is President of the High Priests' Quorum, with Councillors Reynolds Cahoon and George B. Wallace.

John Nebeker is President of the Elders Quorum, with councillors James H. Smith and Aaron Savey.

The Valley is settled for 20 miles south, and 40 miles north of the city. The city is divided into 19 wards; the country south into three wards, and north three wards, and over each is ordained a Bishop with his Councillors with Newell K. Whitney, President of the Bishops Quorum, Presiding; who has been instructed to set in order all the lesser officers.

About thirty of the brethren have recently gone to the Utah Valley, about 60 miles south, to establish a small colony for agricultural purposes; and fishing, hoping thereby to lessen the call for beef, which at the present time is rather scarce at an average of 7 and 8 cents per pound, but will improve with the vegetation.

The wards of the city, generally, consist of nine blocks, each three square, and each ward will be fenced by itself this season, on the plan of a big field, for the purpose of saving time for cultivation.

In consequence of Indian deprepation on our horses, cattle and other property, and the wicked conduct of a few base fellows who came among the Saints; the inhabitants of this Valley as is common in new countries, generally, have organized a temporary government, to exist during its necessity, or until we can obtain a charter for a Territorial Government, a petition for which, is already in progress.

There have been a large number of schools the past winter, in which the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, German, Tahitian, and English languages have been taught successfully.

Last fall the brethren had liberty to cut all the timber within thirty miles of the city, provided they would haul it into the city in the course of the winter. They have been dilligent and done the best they could, but have made but a small beginning towards securing what there is within fifteen miles.

The month of March, and April to the 4th, was very mild and pleasant, and many small crickets have made their appearance, but large flocks of plover have already come among them and are making heavy inroads in their ranks.

For the future, it is not wisdom for the saints to leave the States or California for this place, unless they have team and means sufficient to come through without any assistance from the valley; and that they should bring bread stuffs sufficient to last them a few months after their arrival; for the harvest will not be gathered, or the grain ready for grinding. The inhabitants of the valley will be altogether dependent on the crop of this season for their support; and will have no time to leave their tillage with their teams, to bring in emigrating camps as they have hitherto done; beside, quite a number of men, professors and unprofessors, whose God shines best in gold, have left, and are about leaving, for the gold mines, to spend the season; the natural consequence of which will be a decrease of labor here in raising grain, while many of their families, remaining, the number of consumers will not decrease in proportion to the laborers. There are an abundance of nutritious roots in this valley, so that we have no fears of starvation, yet all the time that is expended in digging for roots, will diminish the agricultural labor, and be a loss to the next harvest.

The scarcity of grain since the settling of this valley, has caused the slaughter of a multitude of cattle, which leaves room for a fresh supply as fast as opportunity shall present; and the emigrating brethren will do well to remember that they are liable to loose many on their journey: also their cattle are good property after their arrival, and there is no fear of their bringing too many cows, young cattle, sheep, oxen, or the choicest breed of stock of any kind, to this place; for any of these articles here are better than gold, for they will purchase what is to be purchased here when gold will not do it; as will also geese, ducks, turkies, pea-fowls, guinea hens, domestics, dry goods, groceries, window glass, nails, (mostly 6, 8, 10, shingle and a few fourpenny,) cotton yarn, a variety of dye stuffs, particularly dye setts, paints, gums myrrh, copal and shellac, spirits of turpentine, paper, books, saws, files, screws, and sheet tin of the best quality, hardware, cutlery, iron suitable for mills and all kinds of farming utensils, sligo sheet iron, steel of various kinds, copper and brass sheeting, crockery, glasses, looking glasses, shoe leather, harnesses, harness trimming, mill saws, mechanics tools, wire of various sizes, door locks, and trimmings, cupboard and padlocks, all of which are better than cash in this city; crockery and glass of any description had better be packed in cotton, for safe conveyance, and the cotton will be very useful here; a variety of shoe leather is particularly wanted this season, and a large amount.

There are an extensive variety of grain and seeds already in the valley, but that should not prevent the saints from bringing choice seeds from any part of the earth, for every thing good that can grow here is wanted, and a large amount of the osage orange, cherokee rose tree, and English hawthorn seeds, are needed this year for hedges, and the potatoe or hill onion for eating, also lobelia, mulberry and black locust seed; any amount of unadulterated silesia or French sugarbeet seed would be useful here this season.

The brethren in Pottawatamie, who cannot fit themselves out this season, as we have suggested, will do well to continue where they are, striving for the same object the next year; and the saints in the United States, Canada, Europe, Asia and Africa, will continue to gather on the Pottawatamie lands, and prepare for their future journey agreeable to our previous instruction. Notwithstanding, if there are young or single men, or men of families, (who can leave them comfortably provided for to come on next season,) who can be spared from Pottawatamie, to come on here this season, and raise grain, build houses, &c., it would be well for them to come; for one such man here can do more in providing for the future arrival and wants of the saints, than three can, in tarrying in Iowa; but if they have a golden God in their hearts they had better stay where they are. Let all these things be decided in wisdom, by the council which is among you.

The Twelve at Pottawatamie will see that copies of this epistle are forwarded to the saints in all the Eastern Nations.

Elder Amasa Lyman is delegated to carry this epistle to the saints in Western California and cause it to be circulated among the brethren in the Western Hemisphere, as far as possible; not forgetting the Society Islands, whither Elder Addison Pratt with his family and other Elders are expecting to repair the present season.

We would remind the saints in Western California, who are not coming hither this season, that they have it in their power to do much good, by forwarding to this place their tithing and donations, to the extent of their ability, and the more liberal they are in this thing, this season, the more they will have to bring with them when they come: for their offerings are now needed by the poor saints, and the Lord has put it in your power, to help them and your stewardship will be required at your hands; and as you give so it will be given unto you.

Several Elders have already received their appointment on foreign missions, to the Western Islands, England and various nations, but wisdom dictates that their labors be retained here, at least until after the approaching harvest.

Brothers Parley P. Pratt and John Taylor, as well as Amasa Lyman and those of the Twelve recently ordained, are in this place, and are laboring night and day to do good to the church, and locate their families comfortably, so that they can again have the privilege of going forth to the nations and preaching the gospel. If the saints abroad want to see the Elders from this place, let them send us their means according to their ability, that the hands of the faithful may be let loose; that the cords with which they are bound, may be severed; and that the Elders of Israel may feel themselves free as air, and with joyful hearts leave their families and kindred and all that is dear to them here, and soar away as on eagles wings to the nations, proclaim the gospel of salvation, the day of deliverance to the oppressed; gather the outcasts of Judah, and the remnants of Ephraim from the four winds, to the place of their inheritance; that Zion may be built up, Jerusalem re-established, and the glory of the Latter Day fill the earth.

We have often told the saints, that those who came to this place, should be fully determined to keep the commandments of God, and work righteousness, otherwise they could not expect the blessing of Heaven to rest upon them; for there is nothing here which need to hinder any man from doing right, and knowing as we do the temptations and designs of the enemy of all good in endeavoring to lead men astray from the path of duty, we are constrained to say to the saints that those whose hearts are not fully set in them to work righteousness and follow the council of those whom God has appointed to lead His people in these the last days; but those who love a little shining dust, or filthy lucre, and care more to gratify their own covetous propensities, by running hither and thither, after they have arrived at this place, like the wind upon the mountains, they had better keep away; such saints are not wanted here; God has no use for them, neither have his servants, for the Kingdom of Heaven can easier be built up without them than with them.

The saints need not suppose, that, because they cannot all gather to this stake of Zion at the present time, there is nothing for them to do. Let the Elders preach the gospel every where, as they have the opportunity, and let all saints every where watch and pray without ceasing, lest they be found sleeping, as at midnight, and the bridegroom should make his appearance and close the door against them, for there never has been a time, since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, when there has been a wider field opened for the exercise of faith and good works, with a prospect of success therein than at the present.

The public buildings, and other public works necessary for establishing a Stake of Zion at this place, will require a great amount of means, besides labor, and many materials, such as window glass, nails, door trimmings and fixtures, fastenings and trimmings of various descriptions will be wanted before they can be manufactured here; all of which will require means to purchase and transport; we have therefore appointed Elder Orson Hyde our agent in the United States, generally, to receive and gather tithing and donations; we have also appointed Elder Wilford Woodruff our agent to receive and gather tithing & donations in Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick & adjacent islands, as he shall have opportunity; we have also appointed Elder Orson Pratt, of Liverpool, our agent to receive and gather tithing and donations in England and the British Islands and from all the Saints adjacent, and we invite all the saints in the east, to be faithful and diligent in making their remittances to these our agents, that we may speedily have means to procure such materials as are necessary to prosecute the work the Lord has given us to do; and our agents will keep an accurate and detailed account of all such tithing and donations, and appropriate the same only to our order.

On the 4th of April there was a heavy snow storm in the Valley, but the earth was clear again by mid-day of the 5th; some rain on the 6th, caused an adjournment of the Annual Conference of the church till the 7th, and the day was spent in preaching and teaching, and conference closed on Sabbath, P. M., having been attended by a large assembly of the Saints who unanimously acknowledged the several officers mentioned in this Epistle.

To Elder Parley P. Pratt has been assigned a mission to the Western Islands, whither he is expecting to go before another winter; it is also expected during the same period that Elder Charles C. Rich will enter on the mission assigned him by locating himself and family some where in Western California.

That the saints may be faithful in every good word and work, and be diligent in all things, and yet not by haste and waste, which bringeth destruction; and, inasmuch as they cannot be prepared to come to this place, this season, let them be persevering in making preparation, and wait their time in patience, and it shall be well with them; for the Holy Spirit will dwell with them, which will cause gladness of heart and cheerfulness of countenance, so that every burden will be light and every yoke easy, which is the prayer of your brethren in the New and Everlasting Covenant and your servants, continually, for Christ's sake: Amen.

Great Riot in New York.

NEW YORK, May 11.

A terrible riot occurred last night at the Astor Place Opera. The police were in occupation of the building in force. At an early hour the mob assembled on the outside. Upwards of twenty thousand people were assembled. The mob attempted to break through the doors and windows. The police ejected water on the rioters, who still persevered in their efforts. A company of horsemen arrived on the ground, but they were saluted by a shower of missiles and driven from the field. A company of infantry then arrived, accompanied by the Governor and the city guard. They were also received with a shower of stones and missiles from the mob. A portion of the regiment under Col. Duncan, and a portion of the artillery were finally ordered out. The riot act was read by Recorder Talmadge—notwithstanding which, the mob still continued to pelt the soldiers, several of whom were badly wounded and carried off.

Order was finally given to fire, which was done mostly with blank catridges. One or two were killed, and several were wounded. The rioters still not dispersing, a second, third, and fourth round were fired with balls, by which some ten or fifteen were either killed or mortally wounded, and about twenty others were wounded. Among the killed and wounded were several citizen spectators, and one or two women at a considerable distance from the scene of action. The military kept possession of the Theatre all night, and this morning are throwing up entrenchments about the building. The whole city is very much excited. The Theatre was several times on fire last night, but it was fortunately extinguished. The rioters still threaten the theatre. Many rumors are afloat, but we forbear to mention them. Among the rioters arrested is Ned Buntline.

Additional About the Riot.

NEW YORK, May 11, 9 P. M.

The Mayor issued a proclamation this afternoon, calling upon the citizens to preserve peace, and expressing a firm determination to sustain the laws. Several additional military companies have been ordered out. At 7 o'clock, this evening, the crowd commenced gathering again, and a meeting composed of several thousand persons was held in the Park. Capt. Rynders, of the Empire Club made a speech, exhorting the club to abstain from acts of violence. Mike Walsh made a very inflammatory speech, condemning the acts of the city authorities, and ridiculing the Mayor's proclamation. He advised the people to arm themselves, and should the military again interfere, to give them battle. Tremendous cheering followed this speech. The rioters are evidently gaining ground, and it is impossible to tell the worst. Mr. Macready (about whom the difficulty originated) left the city in the morning.

NEW YORK, May 12.

RIOT.—The coroner is holding inquests on the slain. Much excitement prevails. The investigation will not be finished to-night, owing to the number of witnesses to be examined. There were nineteen of the rioters killed, and thirty-three wounded.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30, 1849.

WANTED—A few bushels of lime wanted immediately, for which the highest price will be paid. Also brick wanted immediately. Apply at this office. [my 16 4t] JOHN GOOCH, Jr.

☞ Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. These nicely enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and on receipt will be responded to forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

Some person or persons have shot one old Indian and wounded another on Musquito Creek, we learned, a day or two ago. They are said to have been a band of poor innocent Pawnees, begging their living, but were probably mistaken for a band of Omahas on a horse stealing excursion. It is said that those who did the act are gone to the West. It should be the last resort to take the life of any human being; and when it becomes actually necessary, care should be taken to spare the innocent. But the Indians had better keep away, for the citizens are now jealous that they are all after horses. We say to every body, take care of your horses, mules and cattle, and keep your eyes open. It is now hunting time with the red men, and they will have horses if they can get them.

QUESTION.—Why will some men sell valuable property for cash, and then pay that cash for old rags, bits, remnants, odds and ends at an auction sale? He that will buy what he does not need will be very apt to need what he cannot buy.

Some of our exchanges say that the Whigs are disappointed in Gen. Taylor. He turns out better than they expected.

Revenge, robbery, and many other things two numerous to mention, are threatened to be visited upon us by a Mr. Thompson, because his grocery or rum shop happened to be visited in his absence by, most likely, a portion of his old customers in the character of the light fingered gentry. We are told that the concern was completely cleaned out. We sent word to Mr. Thompson before he left that he had better not go away and leave his affairs in the hands of a miserable little dissipated fellow, for we thought if he did, more than likely there would be a fire up in some way. Mr. T. got the word in time, but did not regard it at all.

The place has been celebrated for drunkenness and gambling, and that too on the Sabbath day, to the great annoyance of religious meetings. The public know these facts too well, both members of our church and other people likewise. Some of the members of our church were drawn away into that snare, and did gamble there for money on the Sabbath, and confessed it to us in private, and offered to go upon their knees if we would forgive them. We have used all the reason and argument that we were master of to have that shop discontinued in a quiet and honorable way, and we have labored faithfully and diligently with some men who have a name with us to persuade them to keep away from that grog-shop. Sometimes they would promise reformation, and then again shun us and be offended, till we have considered them hopless cases.

Now Mr. Thompson charges this community with every mean and disgraceful thing, because he has been robbed in his absence. The man whom he left in charge of the grocery has run away with his money, we are told, and with what else we do not know. He threatens to go into Missouri and make a stir, and then again to bring a party of Sioux Indians into our settlements to rob and plunder, and many other great things. Revenge, he declares that he will have.

It is our candid opinion that some of these very men who have gambled at his table—drank from his cup, and vomited on his floor, are the very men who robbed his grocery and are gone to the gold mines; and if he will just go on too after them, he will confer the greatest favor upon us that he ever did. He well knows this community have been against its members patronizing his establishment; and now that these characters have gone away, he wishes to brand this community with stealing his goods, and if we don't cash over to him in thirty days for all the loss he has sustained, he is going to bring all Missouri up here, and bring all the Sioux nation down; and perhaps drown us out by turning the Missouri river on to us. Dreadful things he will do! He may thank himself for all his trouble, and we have just about as much fellowship for those characters that have laid drunk about his grocery as we have for him. He inspired them with his spirit contrary to our wishes, and we believe they robbed his grocery contrary to his wishes, but have cleared out from our society quite agreeably to our wishes. His land warrants have been recovered. Our window was hoisted a little the other night and they were slipped through.—We found them on the floor under the window on entering the office. He can have them by paying for our editorial notice.

The Knoxville Company, taking in several other small companies and increasing their own, left this town to cross the Missouri river on Tuesday the 22d inst. This is a very fine company. The members of it appear to be honorable, whole souled men. We could say the same of many others also, that have passed through here. That portion of this company that are from Fulton county, Ills., under the command of Major J. R. Parker, left in good spirits and in good health, and we presume all the rest of the company did likewise: but we happened to see Major Parker just as he was going out of town an exchanged the last words with him. If we are not much mistaken, he is the right sort of a man to go to that country. He is like salt that has not lost its savor.

From California.

NEW ORLEANS.—Dates have been received from California to the 3d of March. Fifty vessels had arrived at San Francisco during one week. Their cargoes had overstocked the markets with all kinds of merchandise, which was selling at New York prices.

The steamer California had been deserted by her crew the next day after her arrival at San Francisco, and she was unable to return to Panama for the want of hands.

Gold still holds out as plenty as ever, and a placer is reported in Lower California, rivalling those on the Sacramento.

The steamer Oregon touched at Mazatlan on the 14th March. A schooner had arrived there from San Francisco with 15,000 ounces of gold.

CALIFORNIA EMIGRATNS.

We publish the Constitutions of several companies bound for the Gold Region, with the names of the persons belonging to them. Also, the names of some that have attached themselves to companies across the river. Many of the emigrants have sent back a copy of our paper to their friends. Nearly all that have arrived here are on the plains on their way to the Eldorado. All left in good spirts, we believe, and with full hopes of reaching the place of their destination.

The following names were handed to us promiscuously:

C. H. Eastman, Ogle co., Ill.; John Coburn, Linden, whitesides county, Ill.; Joseph A. Ferrington, do. do.; Capt. Bell and John Van Allen from Canada west. The following Constitution was adopted by the above company:

ARTICLE—I. Be it known to all men that we the undersigned do hereby form ourselves into a band or company, for the purpose of mutual protection from Council Bluffs to California, and we do hereby pledge sacred honor, that we will abide by the following rules and regulations.

ART. II. The officers of the company shall consist of one captain, one first and one second lieutenant.

ART. III. It shall be the duty of the Captain to take charge and superintend all movements of the train, and direct the movements of the company.

ART. IV. It shall be the duty of the Lieutenants to assist and carry out the orders of the Captain, and in case of sickness of the Captain, the First Lieutenant shall take charge of the train, and in case of sickness of First Lieutenant, Second Lieutenant shall take charge of the train.

ART. V. We pledge ourselves that we will sustain good moral conduct and order, and in case of any misdemeanor by any member of this company, it may be settled by the company that he belongs to; and in case it cannot so be settled, it shall be referred to the superintendent of each company.

ART. VI. The officers of this company shall be elected by the captains or their representatives, and the captains of the small companies may at any time by a two-thirds vote elect other officers for this company.

ART. VII. The captains of the several companies that compose this train or their representatives may determine the number of wagons that the train shall consist of, and it shall be their duty to inspect each wagon, team and provisions, and they shall determine whether the teams and provisions are sufficient for performing the trip and they shall have full power to accept for reject wagons and teams.

ART. VIII. If any member of this company shall be so unfortunate as to loose their teams or provisions, we pledge ourselves that we will not leave them on the plains to suffer, but will take care of the unfortunate.

Constitution and By-Laws of the Knox County Company, Illinois.

For a more perfect organization of the above named Company, we mutually bind ourselves to observe in the strictest manner the following Constitution and By-Laws:

ART. 1. The officers of this company shall consist of one Captain, one Lieutenant, four Sergeants and one Clerk. To hold their offices until the arrival of the company at its destination, to be elected by ballot, by a vote of a majority of the compnay.

ART. 2. It shall be the duty of the Captain to take the command of the company and direct its movements—determine the number of men to be detailed on guard—direct as to the time of turning out—herding and yoking cattle, and see that all the provisions of the constitution are strictly complied with.

ART. 3. It shall be the duty of the Lieutenant to perform the duties of the Captain, in case of his absence or inability.

ART. 4. It shall be the duty of the 1st Sergeant to keep an alphabetical roll—call the same each morning, and detail the guard and sergeant of the guard for the following night.

ART. 5. It shall be the duty of the clerk to prepare a roll of the company for the First Sergeant and record the proceedings of the company.

ART. 6. A committee of three shall be elected whose duty it shall be to inspect all the teams, wagons and outfits of the company before leaving the Missouri river, and none shall be permitted to start with the company unless found sufficient in these respects. It shall also be their duty to report to the captain any abuse or mismanagement of teams whil: on the route.

ART. 7. No one shall be considered a member of this company until his name is signed to this Constitution and code of By-Laws

ART. 8. Other persons may become members of this company by a vote of a majority of the same, and signing the Constitutiution and By-Laws.

ART. 9. This Constitution and By-Laws may be altered or others substituted in their place by a vote of two-ihirds of the company.

BY-LAWS.

ART. 1. No fire-arms shall be discharged within forty rods of camp, except under the directions of the sergeant of the guard.

ART. 2. No loaded guns with caps on shall be permitted in camp except by the directions of the Captain, and never in wagons while travelling.

ART. 4. No spirituous liquors shall be used in the company except as a medicine.

ART. 5. The Captain may call a meeting of the company at any time—and it shall be his duty to do so upon the request of five members of the company.

ART. 6. A horse shall be furnished for the use of the guide by the company—to be ultimately disposed of or the benefit of the company.

ART. 7. For the first wilful violation of any of the provisions of the above Constitution and By-Laws by any member of the company, he shall perform extra duty in the discretion of the Captain. For repetition of the same offence—for refusal to obey orders or intoxication, any person may be expelled from the company by a vote of majority of the same.

ART. 8. Any person selling for giving spirituous liquors to an Indian shall be expelled from the company.

At a meeting of the Company on the 12th of May, this Constitution and code of By-Laws were adopted and the following persons elected under it, as provided by the Constitution, viz: Asa Haynes, Captain—Cephas Arms, Lieutenant—Thomas Shannon, First Sergeant—Edward Doty, E. N. Taylor and Charles B. Mecum, second, third and fourth sergeants—R. C. Price, Clerk. Committee of Inspection—J. L. West, F. S. Kellogg, and J. R. Parker.

California Express Company.

Agreeable to public notice a meeting was held at Kanesville, on Saturday, May 19th, 1849, of emigrants intending to push through. Col. J. B. Witt was appointed Chairman, and B. L. King, Sec'y.

On motion it was resolved that a committee of five be appointed to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for their rule and government, and to report on Monday the 21st inst.

Whereupon, J. B. Witt, E. H. Phetterplace, John M. Worcester, B. L. King and John Morrison were appointed said committee.

On motion, meeting adjourned to meet on Monday the 21st inst., at 2 o'clock, P. M.

J. B. WITT, Chaiman.
B. L. KING, Secretary.

Met on Monday the 21st inst. agreeable to adjournment. Meeting was called to order by the chairman.

Whereupon, E. H. Phetterplace in behalf of the committee made the following report.

We the undersigned bound to California for the mutual protection and well being of all, unite ourselves into a body under the name of "Express Company" and appoint officers to carry out the wishes of the general company and adopt the following Constitution.

ART. 1. The officers of the Company shall consist of one Captain, one 1st and one 2d Lieutenant, one orderly Sergeant, one Surgeon, one 1st and one 2d Corporal, and an Executive Committee of three.

ART. 2. It shall be the duty of the Captain to direct all the movements of the company, and the other officers to carry out the orders of the Captain.

ART. 3. It shall be the duty of the surgeon in all cases to administer to the sick, using the medicine from the pack of the sick, free of charge, or if it is necessary from his own with a reasonable charge for the medicine, and he shall be exempt from all other duty.

ART. 4. In case of vacancy of the office of Captain, or inability by reason of sickness, or absence of the Captain from the duties of his office, the command shall devolve on the 1st Lieutenant and in like succession of rank with all the other officers.

ART. 5. It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee to examine and determine the amount of provisions each man shall take and the power and ability of his animals to carry the same,—to hear and adjudicate all charges or complaint made against any member of the company—power shall be invested in them, to cause to be brought before them any person or persons against whom complaint shall be made, and for that purpose they shall issue process directed to any of the officers, whose duty it shall be to execute the same. The trial by a jury of six shall be granted to all persons claiming it.

ART. 6. A majority of the members of the Company may call a meeting of the company for the transaction of business by giving two days notice of the same.

ART. 7th. Two-thirds of the members of the company may alter or amend the Constitution or By-Laws, by a vote of two-thirds of the members.

ART. 7. The Commanding officer may call a meeting of the company at his discretion.

On motion, the report was unanimously adopted.

The Wisconsin and Iowa Union Company.

The Wisconsin and Iowa Union Company of Emigrants, organized at Winter Quarters, near Council Bluffs, on the 23d of May, 1849, adopted the following Constitution:

We the undersigned emigrants to California, in view of the dangers attending the expedition, and for the security of our lives and property, and for our safe advancement on the journey, adopt the following rules of government.

ART. 1. This company shall be called the Wisconsin and Iowa Union Company.

ART. 2. This company shall be commanded by a Colonel and two subordinate officers to be called Lieutenant Colonel and Adjutant.

ART. 3. It shall be the duty of the Colonel to take full control of the company, both judicial and military, to determine upon camping grounds, order halts, and make all other orders necessary to the advancement of the company.

ART. 5. It shall be the duty of the Lieutenant Colonel to assist the Colonel in carrying into effect his orders, and in case of disability of the Colonel by sickness or other cause, he shall take command and exercise all powers conferred on that office.

ART. 5. It shall be the duty of the Adjutant to assist the Lieutenant Colonel in all his duties, and to perform the writing of this company.

ART. 6. The Colonel, Lieutenant Colonel, and Adjutant shall be elected by ballot, and the person having a majority of votes shall be declared duly elected and shall hold their offices for the term of the journey except removed by a vote of a majority of the company. And in case of vacancy of either of the above named officers by removal, resignation or death, the commanding officer shall order an election to fill such vacancy within twenty-four hours from the time of such vacancy.

ART. 7. Each primaty company of which this brigade is composed shall elect one of their number as Captain whose name shall be given to the Lieutenant Colonel, whose duty shall be to see that his company promptly obey orders of commanding officers, and in case of disobedience to report the person or persons to the Lieutenant Colonel or other general officers.

ART. 8. The Captain of the primary companies shall constitute a legislative body to enact By-Laws under this Constitution, to be approved by the Colonel and his assistants.

Art. 9. All teams entering this company single shall form themselves in companies of five teams and shall then be considered as a primary company, and shall elect their captain as required in Art. 7th

ART. 10. All teams and members of this company that have been received, in case of misfortune in loosing teams, or sickness or any other accidental cause, shall be taken by the company as far as the same shall go under this organization—except they shall choose sooner to stop.

ART. 11. An election for the removal of any of the three first named officers may be called at any time by written notices signed by a majority of the Captains of the primary companies, which shall be publicly read to the company by the Lieutenant Colonel, twenty-four hours before the election.

ART. 12. All mock war-whooping and unnecessary firing of guns or pistols after sunset shall be strictly prohibited by the commanding officers.

ART. 13. The members of this company shall observe the Sabbath while upon the journey, so far as to abstain from traveling and secular labor unless under circumstances rendering it absolutely necessary.

ART. 14. The members of this company shall abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and gaming shall not be tolerated in any form.

ART. 15. Each and every one whose names are hereunto subscribed, do solemnly pledge our honor as men, to strictly and promptly obey reasonable orders of the commanding officers and to use our influence in preserving harmony, and discountenancing all rangling in camp or train.

ART. 16. No alteration or addition shall be made to this Constitution unless by a two-thirds vote of the company.

The following persons were chosen officers.

J. S. Kirkpatrick, Colonel; W. W. Ferguson, Lieut. Colonel, A. M. Blackman, Adjutant.

THE STEAMER MONROE.—A letter from Jefferson city, dated on the 11th, gives the following particulars in regard to the mortality of this ill-fated boat:

"The steamer Monroe has stopped about a mile below town. Three persons have been buried from her, who died of cholera—the pilot, engineer, and a Dr. Stephenson, of Jeffersonville, Indiana. The bar keeper and a passenger are lying dead in town—five are dead on the boat. The watchman and steward are on the boat dying. Some eight or ten others are very ill in the town, and all dangerous. No medicine seems to have any effect upon them. The cases are very sudden, and nearly all fatal. It is remarkable, that not a death has occured on the deck of this ill-fated boat. All the sickness, so far, has been confined to the cabin passengers, and some Mormons who occupied the boiler deck.

Not one of our citizens have been attacked, so far.—[St. Louis Republican.

KANESVILLE MARKET.

KANESVILLE, May 30, 1849.

The market has been entirely unsettled for the past month, prices varying according to the demand, and the demand for flour, bacon, pork, corn, and other articles, which the emigrants for the West require, have commanded very high prices. Flour, week before last varied from five to ten dollars per hundred, but since that time the prices have settled down some, both for flour and bacon: say flour at $3 50 @ $4 50 ℔ hundred pounds; bacon to 6 @ 8c. ℔ lb.

The market will probably be better supplied with breadstuffs and provisions, and prices will consequently decline to medium rates; and we venture to say that flour will decline to $2 50 @ $3 00 ℔ hundred, and remain in that position till harvest The country has been nearly swept clean of provisions and breadstuffs, of all kinds, and there will be barely sufficient remaining to supply our own inhabitants until harvest.

Corn is very scarce and commands 50c. ℔ bush.

Potatoes are plenty, and the market steady at 35c.

Butter does not come in very freely. We quote sales at 8 @ 10c. ℔ lb.

The following are the range of prices:

Flour, per hundred,		$3 00 to $5 00
Beef,	"	$4 00
Pork,	"	$6 00
Bacon, per lb.		7 @ 8c.
Green Hides, per pound,		2½ cts.
Dry do,	"	4½ "
Potatoes, per bushel,		35 "
Corn,	"	50 "
Wheat,	"	80 "
Flaxseed,	"	35 "
Tallow, per pound,		8 "
Butter,	"	8 "
Cheese,	"	6¼ to 8 "

POETRY.

The Old Arm Chair.

I love it ! I love it ! and who shall dare
To chide me for loving that old arm-chair ?
I've treasured it long as a sainted prize—
I've bedewed it with tears, and embalmed it with sighs—
'Tis bound by a thousand bands to my heart ;
Not a tie will break, not a link will start.
Would ye learn the spell ? A Mother sat there !
And a sacred thing is that old arm-chair.

In childhood's hour, I linger'd near
The hallowed seat with listening ear ;
And gentle words that mother would give,
To fit me to die, and teach me to live ;
She told me shame would never betide,
With Truth for my creed, and God for my guide ;
She taught me to lisp my earliest prayer,
As I knelt beside the old arm-chair.

I sat and watch'd her many a day,
When her eyes grew dim and her locks were grey,
And I almost worshipp'd her when she smiled
And turned from her bible to bless her child,
Year's roll'd on, but the last one sped,—
My idol was shattered—my earth-star fled ;
I learnt how much the heart can bear,
When I saw her die in the old arm-chair.

'Tis past ! 'Tis past ! but I gaze on it now
With quivering breath and throbbing brow ;
'Twas there she nursed me ! 'twas there she died !
And memory flows with lava tide ;
Say it is folly, and deem me weak,
While tears of affection bedew my cheek,
But I love it ! I love it ! and cannot tear
My soul from a mother's old arm-chair.

COL. FREMONT AND HIS PARTY.

AUTHENTIC PARTICULARS.

Letters have been received from Colonel FREMONT covering the two months (from the last of November to the 2d of February) that he was not heard of, and giving terrible events of that time.

"I have now the unpleasant task of telling you how I came here. I had much rather speak of the future, (with plans for which I am already occupied,) for the mind turns from the scenes I have witnessed and the sufferings we have endured; but as clear information is due to you, and to your father still more, I will give you the story now, instead of waiting to tell it to you in California; but I write in the great hope that you will not recive this letter. When it reaches Washington you may be on your way to California.

We left the Upper Pueblo on the 25th of November, with upwards of one hundred good mules and one hundred and thirty bushels of shelled corn, intended to support our animals in the deep snows of the high mountains, and down to the lower parts of the Grand river tributaries, where usually the snow forms no obstacle to winter traveling. At Pueblo I had engaged as a guide an old trapper, well known as "Bill Williams," and who had spent some twenty-five years of his life in trapping in various parts of the Rocky Mountains.

"The error of the expedition was committed in engaging this man. He proved never to have known, or entirely to have forgotten, the whole country through which we were to pass. We occupied (after passing the mountain) more than half a month in making the progress of a few days, blundering along a tortuous course, through deep snow, which already began to choke up the passes, and wasting our time in searching the way. The 11th of December we found ourselves at the mouth of the Rio del Norte cannon, where that river issues from the sierra San Juan—one of the highest, most rugged and impracticable of all the Rocky mountain ranges, inaccessible to trappers and hunters, even in summer. The cold was extraordinary. At the warmest hours of the day (between one and two) the thermometer (Fahrenheit) stood in the shade, of a tree trunk, at zero, and that was a favorable day the sun shining and a moderate breeze. Judge of the nights and the storms!

"We pressed up towards the summit, the snow deepening as we rose, and in four or five days of this struggling and climbing, all on foot we reached the naked ridges which lie above the line of the timbered region, and which form the dividing heights between the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Along these naked heights it storms all winter, and the raging winds sweep across them with remorseless fury. On our first attempt to cross we encountered a pouderie—(dry snow driven thick through the air by violent wind, and in which objects are visible only at a short distance)—and were driven back, having some ten or twelve men variously frozen—face, hands, or feet. The guide came near being frozen to death here, and dead mules were already lying about the camp fires. Meantime it snowed steadily. The next day (December—) we renewed the attempt to scale the summit, and were more fortunate as it then seemed. Making mauls, and beating down a road, or trench, through the deep snow, we forced the ascent in defiance of the driving pouderie, crossed the crest, decended a little, and encamped immediately below in the edge of the timbered region. The trail showed as if a defeated party had passed by—packs, pack saddles, scattered articles of clothing, and dead mules strewed along. We were encamped about twelve thousand feet above the level of the sea. Westward the country was buried in snow. The storm continued. All movement was paralyzed. To advance with the expedition was impossible: to get back, impossible. Our fate stood revealed. We were overtaken by sudden and inevitable ruin. The poor animals were to go first. The only places where grass could be had were the extreme summits of the sierra, where the sweeping winds kept the rocky ground bare, and where the men could not live. Below, in the timbered region, the poor animals could not get about, the snow being deep enough to bury them alive. It was instantly apparent that we should loose every one. I took my resolution immediately, and determined to recross the mountain back to the valley of the Rio del Norte, dragging or packing the baggage by men. With great labor the baggage was transported across the crest to the head springs of a little stream leading to the main river. A few days were sufficient to destroy that fine band of mules which you saw me purchase last fall on the frontier of Missouri.

"In this situation I determined to send in a party to the spanish settlements of New Mexico for provisions, and for mules to transport our baggage. With enconomy, and after we should leave the mules, we had not two weeks' provisions in the camp; and these consisted of a reserve of maccaroni, bacon, sugar, &c., intended for the last extremity. It was indispensable to send for relief. I asked for volunteers for the service. From the many that offered I chose. King, Brackenridge, Creutzfeldt, and the guide, Williams, and placed the party under the command of King, with directions to send me an express in case of the least delay at the settlements. It was the day after Christmas that this little party set out for relief.

"The party for relief being gone, we of the camp occupied ourselves in removing the baggage and equipage down the side of the mountain to the river in the valley, which we accomplished in a few days. Now came on the tedium of waiting for the relief party. Day after day passed, and no news from them. Snow fell almost incessantly in the mountains. The spirits of the camp grew lower. Life was losing its charm to those who had not reason beyond themselves to live. Proue laid down in the trail and froze to death. In a sunshine day, and having with him the means to make a fire, he threw his blanket down on the trail, laid down upon it, and laid there till he froze to death; We were not then with him.

"Sixteen days passed away, and no tidings from the party sent for relief. I became oppressed with anxiety, weary of delay, and determined to go myself, both in search of the absent party, and in search of relief in the Mexican settlements. I was aware that our troops in New Mexico had been engaged in hostilities with the Spanish Utahs and Apaches, who range in the valley of the Rio del Norte, and the mountains where we were, and became fearful that they (King and his party) had been cut off by these Indians. I could imagine no other accident to them. Leaving the camp employed with the baggage, under command of Vincenthaler, with injunctions to follow me in three days, I set off down the river with a small party, consisting of Godey, his young nephew, Preuss, Saunders (colored servant.) We carried our arms and provisions for two or three days. In the camp (left under the command of Vincenthaler,) the messes only had provisions for a few meals, and a supply of five pounds of sugar for each man. If I failed to meet King my intention was to make the Mexican settlement on the Colorado, a little affluent of the Rio del Norte, about half a degree above Toas, (you will see it on my map,) and thence send back the speediest relief possible to the party under Vincenthaler.

"On the second day after leaving the camp we came upon a fresh trail of Indians—two lodges with a considerable number of animals. This did not lessen our uneasiness for our long-absent people. The Indian trail, where we fell upon it, turned and went down the river, and we followed it. On the fifth day (after leaving the camp) we surprised an Indian on the ice of the river. He proved to be a Utah, son of a Grand River chief whom we had formerly known, and he behaved towards us in a friendly manner. We encamped near them at night. By a present of a rifle, my two blankets, and other promised rewards when we should get in, I prevailed on this Indian to go with us as a guide to the Little Rio Colorado settlement, and to take with him four of his horses to carry our little baggage. The horses were miserably poor, and could only get along at a slow walk.

"On the next day (the sixth of our progress) we left the Indian lodges late and traveled only some six or seven miles. About sunset we discovered a smoke, in a grove of timber, off from the river, and, thinking perhaps it might be our express party (King and his men) on their return, we went to see. This was the twenty-second day since that party had left us, and the sixth since we had left the camp under Vincenthaler. We found them—three of them: Creutzfeldt, Brackenridge, and Williams—the most miserable objects I had ever beheld. I did not recognize Creutzfeldt's features, when Brackenridge brought him up and told me his name. They had been starving! King had starved to death a few days before. His remains were some six or eight miles above, near the river. By aid of the Indian horses we carried these three with us, down to the valley, to the Pueblo on the Little Colorado, which we reached the fourth day afterwards, (the tenth after leaving the camp on the mountains,) having traveled through snow, and on foot, one hundred and sixty miles.

"I look upon the feeling which induced me to set out from the camp as an inspiration. Had I remained there, waiting the return of poor King's party, every man of us must have perished.

"The morning after reaching the Little Colorado Pueblo, (horses and supplies not being there,) Godey and I rode on to the Rio Hondo, and thence to Toas, about twenty-five miles, where we found what we needed: and the next morning Godey, with four Mexicans, thirty horses or mules, and provisions, sat out on his return to the relief of Vincenthaler's party.

"On the way he received an accession of eight or ten horses, turned over to him by the orders of Major Beall, of the army, commanding officer of this northren district of New Mexico. From him I received the offer of every aid in his power, and such actual assistance as he was able to render. Some horses, which he had just recovered from the Utahs, were loaned to me, and he supplied me from the commisary's department with provisions, which I could not have had nowhere else. I find myself in the midst of friends.

I remain here while Godey goes back; because it was necessary for me to remain and prepare the means of resuming the expedition to California as soon as he returns with the men left behind. I expect him on Wednesday evening, the 31st instant, this being the 17th.

"At the beginning of February (Godey having got back at that time) I shall set out for California, taking the southern route—the old route—by the Rio Abago, the Paso del Norte, the south side of the Gila, entering California by the Aqua Caliente, thence to Los Angeles, and immediately to San Francisco, expecting to get there in March, and hoping for your arrival in April. It is the first time I have explored an old road, but cannot help it now. I shall move rapidly, taking with me but a part of my party. The survey has been uninterrupted up to this point, and I shall carry it on consecutively.* As soon as possible after reaching California I shall go on with it. I shall then be able to draw up a map and report of the whole country, agreeably to our original plan. Your father knows that this is an object of great desire with me. All my other plans remain entirely unaltered. A home in California is the first point, and that will be ready for you in April.

"Evening.—Mr. St. Vrain and Aubrey, who have just arrived from Sante Fe, called to see me. I had the gratification to learn that St. Vrain sets out from Santa Fe on the 15th of February for St. Louis; So that by him I shall have an early and sure opportunity of sending you my letters—the one I now write, and others after the return of Godey, and up to our departure for California. Lieut. Beale left Santa Fe on his way to California on the 9th of this month. He probably carried on with him any letters that might have been in his care, or at Santa Fe, for me.

"Monday. January 29.—I am anxiously waiting to hear from my party, and in much uneasiness as to their fate. My presence keep them together and quiet: my absence may have had a bad effect. When we overtook King's famishing party, Brackenridge said to me 'He felt himself safe.'"

So far the extracts from the first letter, and they are mournful enough. The next, written after the return of Godey, with the survivors of the party, will be still more so. Though written with rapidity, and confined to events—the mind recoiling from the description of scenes and the details of woe—it is still too much for this night's paper, and must be deferred till our next.

COL. FREMONT AND HIS PARTY.

FURTHER AND FINAL ACCOUNT.

"TAOS, NEW MEXICO, Feb. 6, 1849.

"After a long delay, which had wearied me to the point of resolving to set out again myself, tidings have at last reached me from my ill-fated party.

"Mr. Vincent Haler came in last night, having the night before reached the little Colorado settlement, with three or four others. Including Mr. King and Mr. Proulx, we have lost eleven of our party.

"Occurrences, since I left them, are briefly these, so far as they came within the knowledge of Mr. Haler: I say briefly, because I am now unwilling to force my mind to dwell upon the details of what has been suffered. I need reprieve from terrible contemplations. I am absolutely astonished at this persistence of misfortune—this succession of calamities which no care or vigilance of mine could foresee or prevent.

"You will remember that I had left the camp (twenty-three men) when I set off with Godey, Pruess, and my servant in search of King and succor, with directions about the baggage, and with occupation sufficient about it to employ them for three or four days; after which they were to follow me down the river. Within that time I expected relief from King's party, if it came at all. They remained seven days, and then started, their scant provisions about exhausted, and the dead mules on the western side of the great Sierra buried under snow.

"Manuel—(you remember Manuel—a Christain Indian of the Cosume tribe, in the valley of the San Joaquim)—gave way to a feeling of despair after they had moved about two miles, and begged Vincent Haler, whom I had left in command, to shoot him. Failing to find death in that form, he turned and made his way back to the camp, intending to die there; which he doubtless soon did.

"The party moved on, and at ten miles Wise gave out—threw away his gun and blanket—and a few hundred yards farther, fell over into the snow and died. Two Indian boys, countrymen of Manuel, were behind. They came upon him, rolled him up in his blanket, and buried him in the snow, on the bank of the river.

"No other died that day. None the next.

"Carver raved during the night—his imagination wholly occupied with images of many things which he imagined himself to be eating. In the morning he wandered off, and probably soon died. He was not seen again.

"Sorrel on this day (the fourth from the camp) laid down to die. They built him a fire, and Morin, who was in a dying condition, and snow-blind, remained with him. These two did not probably last till the next morning. That evening (I think it was) Hubbard killed a deer.

"They traveled on, getting here and there a grouse, but nothing else, the deep snow in the valley having driven of the game.

"The state of the party became desperate, and brought Haler to the determination of breaking it up, in order to prevent them from living upon each other. He told them that he had done all he could for them—that they had no other hope remaining than the expected relief—and that the best plan was to scatter, and make the best of their way, each as he could, down the river; that, if he was to be eaten, he would, at all events, be found traveling when he did die. This address had its effect. They accordingly separated.

"With Haler continued five others—Scott, Hubbard, Martin, Bacon, one other, and the two Cosumne Indian boys.

"Rohrer now became despondent and stopped. Haler reminded him of his family, and urged him to try and hold out for their sake. Roused by this appeal to his tenderest affection, the unfortunate man moved forward but feebly, and soon began to fall behind. On a farther appeal he promised to follow, and to overtake them at evening.

"Haler, Scott, Hubbard, and Martin now agreed that if any one of them should give out the others were not to wait for him to die, but to push on, and try and save themselves. Soon this mournful covenant had to be kept. But let me not anticipate events. Sufficient for each day is the sorrow thereof.

"At night Kerne's party encamped a few hundred yards from Haler's with the intention, according to Taplin, to remain where they were until the relief should come, and in the mean time to live upon those who died, and upon the weaker ones as they should die. With this party were the three brothers Kerne, Capt. Cathcart, McKie, Andrews, Stepperfeldt, and Taplin. I do not know that I have got all the names of this party.

"Ferguson and Beadle had remained together behind. In the evening Rohrer came up and remained in Kerne's party. Haler learnt afterwards from some of the party that Rohrer and Andrews wandered off, the next morning and died. They say they saw their bodies.

"Haler's party continued on. After a few hours Hubbard gave out. According to the agreement he was left to die, but with such comfort as could be given him. They built him a fire and gathered him some wood, and then left him—without turning their heads, as Haler says, to look at him as they went off.

"About two miles further Scott—you remember him; he used to shoot birds for you on the frontier—he gave out. He was another of the four who had covenanted against waiting for each other. The survivors did for him as they had done for Hubbard, and passed on.

In the afternoon the two Indian boys went ahead—blessed be these boys!—and before nightfall met Godey with the relief. He had gone on with all speed. The boys gave him the news. He fired signal guns to notify his approach. Haler heard the guns, and knew the crack of our rifles, and felt that relief had come. This night was the first hope and joy. Early in the morning, with the first gray light, Godey was in the trail, and soon met Haler and the wreck of his party, slowly advancing. I hear that they all cried together like children—these men of iron nerves and lion hearts, when dangers were to be faced or hardships to be conquered. They were all children in this moment of melted hearts. Succor was soon dealt out to these few first and Godey with his relief, and accompanied by Haler, who turned back, hurriedly followed the back trail in search of the living and the dead, scattered in the rear. They came to Scott first. He was yet alive, and is saved! They came to Hubbard next; he was dead, but still warm. These were the only ones of Haler's party that had been left.

"From Kerne's party, next met, they learnt the deaths of Andrews and Roher; and, a little further on, met Ferguson, who told them that Beadle had died the night before. All the living were found—and saved—Manuel among them—which looked like a resurrection—and reduces the number of the dead to TEN—one-third of the whole party which a few days before were scaling the mountains with me, and battling with the elements twelve thousand feet in the air.

"Godey had accomplished his mission for the people; a further service had been prescribed him, that of going to the camp on the river, at the base of the great mountain to recover the most valuable of the baggage secreted there. With some Mexicans and pack mules he went on; and this is the last yet heard of him.

Vincent Haler, with Martin and Bacon all on foot, and bringing Scott on horseback have, just arrived at the outside Pueblo on the Little Colorado. Provisions for their support, and horses for their transport, were left for the others, who preferred to remain where they were, regaining some strength till Godey should get back. At the latest they would have reached the little Pueblo last night. Haler came on to relieve my anxieties, and did well in so doing; for I was wound up to the point of setting out again. When Godey returns I shall know from him all the circumstances sufficiently in detail to understand clearly everything. But it will not be necessary to tell you anything further. You have the results and sorrow enough in reading them.

"EVENING.—How rapid are changes of life! A few days ago, and I was struggling through snow in the savage wilds of the upper Del Norte—following the course of the frozen river in more than Russian cold—no food—no blanket to cover me in the long freezing nights—(I had sold my two to the Utah for help to my men) uncertain at what moment of the night we might be roused by the Indian rifle—doubtful, very doubtful, whether I should ever see you or friends again. Now I am seated by a comfortable fire, alone—purusing my own thoughts—writing to you in the certainty of reaching you—a French volume of Balzac on the table—a colored print of the landing of Columbus before — me—listening in safety to the raging storm without!

"You will wish to know what effect the scenes I have passed through have had upon me. In person, none. The destruction of my party, and the loss of friends, are causes of grief; but I have not been injured in body or mind. Both have been strained, and severely taxed, but neither hurt. I have seen one or the other, and sometimes both, give way in strong frames, strong minds, and stout hearts; but, as heretofore, I have come out unhurt. I believe that the remembrance of friends sometimes gives us a power of resistance which the desire to save our own lives could never call up.

"I have made my preparations to proceed. I shall have to follow the old Gila road, and shall move rapidly, and expect to be in California in March, and to find letters from home, and a supply of newspapers and documents, more welcome perhaps because these things have a home look about them. The future occupies me. Our home in California—your arrival in April—your good health in that delightful climate—the finishing up of my geographical and astronomical labors—my farming labors and enjoyments. I have written to Messrs. Mahew & Co., agricultural warehouse, New York, requesting them to ship me immediately a threshing machine; to Messrs. Hoe & Co., same city, requesting them to forward to me at San Francisco two runs, or sets of mill stones. The mill irons and the agricultural instruments shipped for me last autumn from New York will be at San Francisco by the time I arrive there.

FEBRUARY 11.—Godey has got back. He did not succeed in recovering any of the baggage or camp furniture. Every thing was lost except some few things which I had brought down to the river. The depth of the snow made it impossible for him to reach the camp at the mountain where the men had left the baggage. Amidst the wreck I had the good fortune to save my large alforgas, or traveling trunk—the double one which you packed—and that was about all.

"SANTA FE, FEBRUARY 17, 1849,—In the midst of hurried movements, and in the difficulty endeavor to get a party all started together, I can only write a line to say that I am well, and moving on to California. I will leave Santa Fe this evening.

Gold Seekers Manual.

A King's College Professor having come forward with a seasonable work under the above title, Punch begs leave to enter, against the learned Professor's volume, his own "Directions for the Diggins."

What Class ought to start for the Diggins.—Persons who have nothing to lose except their lives; and it would be as well they should start without these, if it were possible, as they are not unlikely to lose them in California.

Things you should not take with you to the Diggins.—A love of comforts, a taste for civilization, an appetite, a conscience, and a respect for other people's throats, and a value for your own.

Things that you will find useful at the Diggins.—A revolving pistol, some knowledge of treating gun-shot wounds, a toleration for bedfellows, a determination to hold your own, and grab at every body else's, and the power of eating, drinking and wearing gold dust.

The sort of Society you will meet with at the Diggins.—Those for whom the United States are not big enough; those for whom England is too hot; those who come to clean out the gold, and those who come to clean out the gold finders.

What is the best thing to do when you get to the Diggins.—Go back again.

How gold may be best Extracted.—By supplying, at exhorbitant prices, the wants of those who gather it.

What will be the ultimate effect of the Discovery of the Diggins.—To raise prices, to ruin fools, to demoralize a new country first, and settle it afterwards.

SPIRIT OF THE AMERICAN PRESS.—We copy what follows from one of our exchanges. The comments of the several papers, at every point of the compass on a beautiful and most touching passage from Scripture are characteristic of our country and its people:

KISSING ALMANAC.—Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice and wept.—[Scripture.

If Rachel was a pretty girl and kept her face clean, we can't see that Jacob had much to cry about.—[N. Y. Globe.

How do you know but that she slapped his face for him?—[N. O. Delta.

Weeping is not unfrequently produced by extreme pleasure—joy—happiness; it may have been so in Jacob's case.—[Whig.

Gentlemen, hold your tongues. The cause of Jacob's weeping was the refusal of Rachel to allow him to kiss her again; she was of the opinion, that it was rather dangerous for young ladies and gents to indulge too freely in this angelic diversion.—[Taylor Flag.

It is our opinion Jacob wept because he had not kissed Rachel before, and regretted the time he had lost.—[Age.

The only plausible reason we can see for Jacob's weeping, is that the saucy jade must have bit his lip.—[Memphis Appeal.

No! No! The reason why he wept was because Rachel did not say to him "put that back, sir, where you got it!"—[Mo. Statesman.

The only correct reason was, that Jacob contemplated the long time it would be, before he could get another without stealing it.—[Frontier Guardian.

ADAGE.—Don't touch the lute when drums are resounding. A wise man remains silent while fools are speaking.

Sophistry is like a window-curtain: it pleases as an ornament, but its true use is to keep out the light.

Every thing great is not always good, but all good things are great. Except good small potatoes.

So, so!—If a man may reap "whatsoever he soweth," and it seams fair that he should, what a harvest of coats and breeches the tailors will have, one of these days!

The Literary Gazette gives from Hamlet a motto for emigrants to California:

"A pick-axe, and a spake, a spade;
Aye, and a winding-sheet."

Dow's Sermon on Debts.

TEXT—"Owe no man anything"

Keep out of debt. Avoid it as you would war, pestilence and famine. Shun it as you would the devil. Hate it with a perfect hatred. Abhor it with an entire and absolute abhorrence. Dig potatoes, break stones, peddle tin-ware, do any thing that is honest and useful, rather than run in debt. As you value comfort, quiet, independence, keep out of debt. As you value good digestion, a healthy appetite, a placid temper, a smooth pillow, sweet dreams and happy wakings, keep out of debt. Debt is the hardest of all task masters, the most cruel of all oppressors. It is an incubus on the heart. It spreads a cloud over the whole firmament of a man's being. It eclipses, the sun, It bolts out the stars, it dims and defaces the beautiful blue of the sky. It breaks up the harmony of nature, and turns to dissonance all the voices of its melody. It furrows the forehead with premature wrinkles, it plucks the eye of its light, it drags all nobleness and kindness out of the heart and bearing of man. It takes all the soul out of his laugh, and all stateliness and freedom from his walk. Come not under its accursed dominion. Pass by it as you would pass a leper, or one smitten with the plague. Touch it not. Taste not of its fruit, for it shall turn to bitterness and ashes on your lips. Finally, I say to each and all, but espicially to you, young men, keep out of debt.

"What have you got there, Joe?" "I've got a ham." "That ain't a ham, its nothing but a shoulder." It's a ham, I tell you but not an ultra ham."

LETTER FROM ELDER ADDISON PRATT.

LATE OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Dear Brother Smith: Having learnt by my wife that you have written me several letters since I left Nauvoo, and notwithstanding I have received none of them, I will write to thank you for your kindness. I suppose that you have been apprized of our proceedings among the Society Islands by way of our letters up to the time I left there for the Paumotu group. This cluster lies between Tahiti and South America, and on account of their being low coral islands, they are very dangerous to sail among, and of course not much known to navigators. Chain Island, or Aua, is the metropolis of that group, the inhabitants of that Island have conquered the whole group, they carried on a war of extermination for more than twenty years, and their mode of warfare was to depopulate every island they could conquer. They not only butchered the inhabitants, but cut down all the cocoanut trees, so that if any two ever get back, they would have nothing to live upon. But now the remnants of the vanquished are permitted to return and plant cocoanut trees and build houses upon their lands, and some of those Islands are now getting tolerably inhabited.

But it is even now distressing to see their "morais" or places of human sacrifice. I visited one that I paced off and found that I could trace it 18 paces when it was lost among the roots of the cocoanut trees. This place was prepared by setting up curb-stones in a trench wide enough to receive a human skull, and in this trench they were deposited touching each other, and were then covered with two or three inches of dirt. Every war chief had one or more of these "morais." And when they went to war with the neighboring Isles, after their battles were fought, they would take off their heads, and take off the under jaw, for then the head can tell no tales—cook and eat the bodies; and the heads they would tie by the hair and string them on to a rope and tie it to the masthead, frequently having enough to fill the rope, these they would carry home, make a feast, have a war dance, offer the heads as a sacrifice to their gods, and then bury them in the trench. It was among those people that I went to assist Br. Grouard, after I left the pleasant Island Tubuai. The reason of my leaving Tubuai, was on account of Br. Grouards starting after me in a native canoe, and was cast away on a small Island called Metia, 60 miles to the north-east of Tahiti. He left there in a French vessel and arrived at Tahiti, and sent for me to meet him there, or he would come after me in his open canoe, when it was repaired, and if he was lost in the attempt his blood should be required at my hands, and as Tubuai is 300 miles south of Tahiti, and no land between I made all possible dispatch to hinder his hazardous undertaking, we left Tahiti, in a French ship, bound on a pearl diving voyage among that group of Islands, which afford the richest pearl fishery that I have heard of in the Pacific. We arrived there in February of 1846. The people were overjoyed to see us, and expressed it by inviting us to every town on the Island, where Br. Grouard had organized branches which were five. They feasted us on cocoanuts, fowls, fish and hogs neatly dressed—and roasted whole.

Those Paumotu Isles have but few vegetables aside from cocoanuts, but these grow in the greatest abundance,—coral reefs seem to be the fittest place for them. After we had visited all around, we were much anoyed by the contentions of the governors of the various villages to see which of them we should live at. I told Br. Grouard, I saw no other way to stop that, but to divide the Island into two circuits, he to take charge of one and I of the other, and then spend a week in a place. We did so and that put an end to all controversy—he took two towns and I took three. Those islands are of a curious formation, are of an oval shape. Aua, or Chain island is some fifteen miles in length, averages about one mile wide, forming an oval circle around a body of water, some six miles wide and thirteen long with various places where the tide ebbs and flows into it. This you see forms a curious inland sea, called Lagoon, and is one of the finest places to take a pleasure ride in a sail boat, and my circuit required much of that exercise, and consequently (as I was a man of dignity) it required a dignitary to wait on me, and one of these war chiefs, who owned one or more islands that he had conquered in the "tau hetene" or times of heathenism, volunteered his services to wait on me, and would not probably have attained to this "honor," had he not owned a new and commodious canoe with an excellent cotton sail, therefore he was permitted to be my boatman. He was a very large and stout man, and as often as we arrived in port on the ebb tide and the canoe could not reach the landing place because of shallow water; you would see him trudging off with me on his back with all the magnificence of his office, and would set me down upon terra-firma with the heartfelt satisfaction that he had [illegible] the people, and in the midst of an anxious multitude who were as anxious to get the first opportunity to shake hands with me, as he was to be the honored bearer of their long looked for guest.

Before Br. Grouard left there to come after me, he had often told them of me, and they would enquire every particular concerning me, and when they found I was an elderly man, they inquired if my teeth were good so that I could live on cocoanuts, for said they, white mens' teeth decay much sooner than natives do. He told them that I had some missing ones, but still he thought there was enough left to grind cocoanuts. And when their canoe was repaired and came to Tahiti, after Br. Grouard, I had got there before them to their great joy. They gathered around me with great curiosity, and as I was busily engaged with them, Br. Grouard was standing a little way off diverting himself with our interview, when all of a sudden he burst out in a loud laughter, and when I asked an explanation, "why, said he, they are looking in your mouth when you laugh, to see if you have teeth enough left to eat cocoanuts."

After we had baptized near 200 more, and had arranged matters on the island, Br. Grouard, took a notion that he could be spared to go on a mission among that group, and that I could take charge in his absence. I told him I had come to help him do the work that he was not able to do alone, and now we had enlarged the field he wished to leave me in charge of the whole! Oh! said he, you have a better faculty to preside than I have, and I like to pioneer better than you do," and after more persuasion I consented. He left me about four months and returned so as to attend the October Conference at Aua. [illegible] should return to America, and get my family and a recruit of elders. They wished for 5 to a 100 sent to them, so that they could have a supply. Br. Grouard, visited some eight or nine islands and baptized in all 116 souls, left some native elders to preside. In November I prepared to leave; I went round, by request, to each town to preach and bid them adieu, and as is customary each town made me a feast, sometimes roasting three or four good sized hogs whole, they are roasted underground, and I think the best way to roast pork I ever saw. It is done by excavating in the earth a cavity large enough to receive the quantity of food they wish to cook, some wood is then laid across the hole, and some stones of a convenient size are laid on the wood, and it set on fire. As the wood burns out, the coals and hot stones fall down together, and with a stick or spade, most of the hot stones are taken out, then some bounded banana stalk is spread over the coals for a two-fold purpose; first, to keep the food out of the ashes; secondly, it affords an abundant supply of well flavored juice, which raises a steam as the food is cooking, on to this is laid a layer of food, perhaps meat, and then a layer of hot stones, then a layer of vegetables, and then of hot stones, and so on in conical pile, till it is all deposited, then it is all matted over with large green leaves that those Isles' produce for the purpose, and then the whole is covered with a thick layer of dirt. Here it remains till it is well cooked, and then it is carefully taken out in the nicest manner. Each parcel is carefully wraped in leaves before it is put in. And I can assure you that food cooked in this way is the sweetest and most delicate you ever tasted.

They also made me many presents of mats, [illegible] hens and cocoanuts. And when I took [illegible] leave of my friends, I obtained passage free of cost, on board of a vessel belonging to some American merchants living at Tahiti, of which Mr. Chapman, American Vice Consul at Tahiti, was one.

I had a pleasant passage to Tahiti, where I found my friends well and in good spirits, for business was brisk and money plenty. There were several men of war lying there; one frigate of 64 guns, several sloops of war and some cutters, under the French flag, one steam frigate, the Salamander, and a cutter under the English flag; one Danish frigate, and a number of English, French and American merchant and whaling vessels. But the war between the French and natives was still raging. But in December of '46 the French conquered and peace was restored, and as there was no vessel bound direct to California, I commenced preaching to the natives on Tahiti, and soon began to baptize. I organized a branch there of 27 members, all natives, and in March, I obtained a passage for San Francisco, where I arrived in June, touching on our way at the Sandwich islands. I staid in California one year, and then started for Salt Lake City. I arrived in the Valley the 28th of September, where I found my family; they had arrived one week before me. To find them all alive and in good health, was a blessing that I felt was from the hand of the Lord. But I will not try to describe the sensations of our meeting, after a separation of five years and four months. But let those that feel curious on that point, try it, and they will then know for themselves. We have spent the winter very pleasantly among our friends here. I devoted a part of it in teaching a Tahitian school, for the benefit of those that expect to be sent on that mission. Among my scholars was your brother John, and he has made good proficiency, and I expect he and his wife will be among the number that will be sent there, and I could gladly wish that you were here to go with us, as I hear such hints dropped, that one of the Twelve, are to be appointed to preside over all missionary operations in the Pacific Ocean. If you were on hand I should have fond expectations it would fall to your lot.

You see that my paper is getting pretty well used up, and I must taper off. My [illegible] to the friends there, I wish to see and here from them.

I, as ever remain your brother and fellow laborer in Christ
our Elder Brother.

An Acrostic on the Great Mormon Prohet.

Jehovah's voice let every nation hear!
On mighty winds, his chariot wheels doth roll!!
Sing loud his praise, and let the heathen fear
Earth tremble—heaven inspire the holy soul
Proclaim his will as now to me tis' giv'n,
Heaven's last direction in the way to heaven!

The Spirit cries come to my standard, come,
Haste all ye pilgrims, fill our fertile plains
Enlarge our borders,—find with us a home,
Gain Peace and joy, where heavenly pleasure reigns!
Reject the creeds, that long have kept you bound,
Enter our sanctum, Nauvoo's holy ground.

Attend ye nations to his great command!
The time is now when men must rise or fall,
Proclaim his will—the judgment's near at hand!
Regain your freedom and obey this call—
On Zion's shore doth hope and virtue dwell,
Peace to the righteous that no tongue can tell!

Hosanna to the Lord who guards our host—
Encamped with gospel armour purely bright,
'Tis with the sword of truth we conquer most,
Our foes shall perish, when they dare to fight.
Fierce bigots with their creeds dare not contend,
They fall beneath the truth and find their end.

Hold fast ye Saints, and keep your eyes on heav'n—
'Ere long, you'll hear the mighty trumpet sound!
Woe to the men who are not then forgiv'n,
Each cries for pardon, when it can't be found.
See cloud on cloud in august grandeur roll!
To judgment come, to judgment every soul!!

Earth's mighty Mountains then shall disappear,
Rivers and seas to mingled blood shall turn,
Night's awful reign is now approaching near,
Each saint rejoices while the wicked mourn!
[illegible]
In Christ believe and [illegible] who dwells on high;
Repent and pray your sins may be forgiven;
Escape the death that's never doomed to die,
On wings of faith your souls shall soar to heaven—
Farewell to earth—now joys immortal rise,
Sing loud hosannas' as you mount the skies.

Almighty Power! protect our little band,
Increase our faith, our virtue and our love,
Nor let our foes e'er get the upper hand,
To drive our people from their chosen land—
Surround us with a HALO from above.

Keys.

This may be thought by some to be rather a singular caption for a religious article, but when duly considered, it is presumed, that persons of candor will reflect upon it as an expression, or as a term, when used in the revelations of God, conveying the meaning of power, authority, and knowledge: The symbolical meaning of the word "key" or "keys" pertaining to the priesthood of the Son of God, cannot, or will not be fully defined to the present generation, because the world is unworthy of the information.

The first important passage in the bible, relating to this matter, is found in Isaiah; the which, with some other very curious knowledge unexplained, we will quote:

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah:

And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand: and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.

[illegible] in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house.

And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the vessels of flagons.

In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed and be cut down and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off; for the Lord hath spoken it."

Now, permit us to read our translation of the two first verses from the Hebrew of Michaelis: And it shall be in that day that I call unto my servant, through Eliakim, (Hebrew, God raises up) the son of Hilkiah; that I will cause him (my servant) to be clothed with thy robe, (i. e. Isaiah) and to be strengthened with thy girdle, &c., &c., and he (i. e. the servant) shall be a father to Jerusalem and to the house of Judah.

The next verse, the 22nd is fully expounded by John in his Revelations on the Isle of Patmos. And shows that Jesus Christ is the "servant" spoken to in the two previous verses, and that he holds the "key of David."

"The nail fastened in a sure place," remains a mystery to the world, and will, but the wise understand. As to the "offspring and issue of his father's house" being appended to Jesus Christ, the Latter-Day Saints believe that—but if any man believes that the 25th verse is a true translation and explanation of the "nail," he is welcome to his opinion; he knows nothing of the key of David, and little about the keys of the kingdom.

As Nephi said, it supposes us that the "keys" of the kingdom of heaven, spoken of in Matthew 16, 19, was a symbolical expression which conveyed to the Saints then an idea similar to the "horns of Joseph;" at any rate, power, authority, knowledge, and the assurance of eternal life, seems to be locked or unlocked by these "keys" as much as the prisons of the dead, or "death or hell" are opened and shut by the keys that are held by the resurrected Savior.

That great phrase—I have all power in heaven and on earth delivered unto me, coupled with "follow me," let him [illegible] commandments has often passed through the mouths of holy men, and they have spoke as moved by the Holy Ghost: but unaccountable and mysterious as it may appear to some, the "key" or "keys" come from the Son of God of his own good will and pleasure. For it is written in Jeremiah 1, 5, "Before I formed thee in the belly, I knew thee, &c., and sanctified thee and ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." There are other instances to show that God ordains his servants, before they take upon them flesh, but let this suffice. The power or keys, conferred by such ordination, is made manifest by the Holy Ghost,—of which, "John was filled from his mother's womb," and went forth in the spirit and power of Elias.

But we have said enough on this subject, and will conclude that in all ages, whenever a messenger or, we will say a prophet of God, has graced the earth, his own works has been the evidence of his power, authority, and knowledge,—keys. Abel's offering was accepted.—Enoch was translated. Noah built the ark.—Moses brought the stone tables. Elijah was translated. Jesus showed Peter, James, and John the transfiguration. Joseph Smith brought forth the Book of Mormon: and what was the reception these holy men and many others met with, holding the keys of light and knowledge? With a few exceptions, the answer is MARTYRDOM in the most hellish sense of the word.—And what has been the reception of those who said they were apostles, and were not? They have built cities and towers, and been honored by the world for shedding blood, because the devil loves his own. And even the great Anti Christ of the last days, who would feign to make the world believe, (the saints know better) that he is "my servant Branch holding the [illegible] being to place for war." Wisdom will be justified of her children.

Building of the Temple at Jerusalem.

BY A JEW.

If it is asked why has not Judaism preached against Christianity, when Christianity has, for 1800 years, been incessantly preaching against Judaism, the answer is this: Our cause is in greater hands; in good time, the Lord will open the eyes of all who would confer on a mortal the attributes of His divinity; he will give to the world the unmistakable evidence that He alone is the Great Redeemer, and this salvation is alone with Him. Our unwillingness to preach against Christianity grows out of the fact, that in pulling down the land-marks of that faith, we should assail and endanger many of our own cherished principles and doctrines; and although disbelieving the divine attributes claimed for Jesus of Nazareth, we could not deny or reject His principles, for they were our principles, and He always avowed the faith which we avow.

Without wishing to unsettle any of the principles which sustain the Christian religion, we have asked what would be the effect of separating from the character of Jesus of Nazareth the divine characteristics claimed for Him? The world would become Unitarian Christians, and we are the head of the Unitarians; men would openly become converts to that belief with sincerity, as their hearts would be thereby released from harrassing and perplexing doubts; and Christianity would still be Christianity, in all its high moral attributes. There is enough in the character of Jesus to give Him a rank among the highest practical moralists, divested [illegible] faith in His divine attributes; more, much more than in the character of Mahomet, who claimed none of these attributes. Jesus declared that "God was a Spirit, and those who worshipped Him must worship Him in spirit and truth;" we declare no more.

We must watch these changes closely as they occur; whatever doubts may shake the faith of Christianity, those doubts can never reach us—we are now as we ever have been, as we ever hope to be, one God, one faith, one people. We have no mysteries, no revelations which are not natural and reasonable. In this position we have stood for ages, and it is a platform which will endure forever, and on which all religions can stand. We must seek, however, to take advantage of the times and the changes throughout the world, as they may relate to our temporal prosperity. We cannot at this moment tell what important results may grow out of this permission to build a magnificent Synagoge in Jerusalem. One right conferred, one prejudice removed, leads to the enjoyment of other rights, to the removal of other prejudices, and finally the nation begins to lift up its head; education completes the great work; and the Jews of Jerusalem, the great defenders and expounders of the law, become enlightened and liberal citizens, qualified to be intrusted with higher powers.

Let us not believe that, although our faith is admited to have a divine origin, salvation is for the Jews exclusively. Salvation for the Gentiles is equally included; He who made the whole earth will protect all the children in it. We are the altar of the sanctuary, on which it is said, a fire shall burn which never shall be extinct; but that fire shall animate and revive all creation alike—the Gentile shall stand before its light, and rejoice in the warmth which it imparts. Had it not been for Christianity and Mahometanism, which sprung up upon the ruins of our nation, and raised aloft our prostrate banner, Paganism would still have flourished; every god would have been worshipped but the true and living One; the heathen would have triumphed at this very day, and all would have been darkness and desolation. From among a few of our own people God raised up a new sect, which with the descendants of Joshua maintained in part his divine attributes, and did not surrender his divine precepts. This intermediate power, though intolerant and persecuting, has still stood between us and utter destruction, and now eight millions of the chosen people—the same people who were at Sinai, at Babylon, and at Zion, stand forth in the presence of all the earth, the miracle of God's Providence; and Christian and Mussulman will march before them in the great advent of the restoration, surrendering their trust, giving up their guardianship, and crying aloud with our great prophet, "prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight in the desert a highway for our God," and this advanced guard will bear on their banner, as they pass beneath the triple walls of Jerusalem, that verse from scripture which has ever been our guide, "Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt know no God but me: for there is no Savior beside me." Oh, children of Israel, you know not the great destiny which is in store for you! Study to deserve it, study to meet it, and to merit it by the practice of many virtues, by toleration and good faith, mercy, charity, and forgiveness.

The world calls us a proud people. If there is a nobility on earth; it pure and unadulterated blood, descending from such ancestors as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Moses, David, and Solomon, which courses through our veins, gives us a claim to a national distinction, we have a right to be proud of such ancestry; but that pride should be limited to imitating their wisdom, and cultivating among ourselves that nationality which alone embraces the elements of our restoration. The designs of the Almighty are brought about by human agency; He inclines the hearts of men to execute his great purposes on earth; wars, revolutions, [illegible] tion of the people, the light of knowledge, the march of science and the triumph of liberal opinions, are all His work, through his inscrutable decrees.

This permission to lay a corner-stone once more in Jerusalem, to erect a magnificent temple to His honor and to His worship, by His ancient and faithful people, and which we are this day called upon to aid, is another great sign of His divine power and will, foreshadowing the great promises hereafter—the assurances that we shall yet be independent, and worship Him on Zion in freedom and tranquility.

But I have often heard my co-religionarians say painfully heard them say, that the promises of restoration, though repeatedly made, are surrounded with many difficulties; that the land so remote would never repay the sacrifices in re-assembling the people from the four quarters of the earth; and that when assembled, bringing them with the languages and usages of many countries, it would be greatly embarrassing to organize the government, and we should be subjected to neighboring wars and internal difficulties—in short, that we were content with our present condition, and required no change. Such sentiments I know do prevail, but not among all; it is the fruit of toleration, of comfort, of ease, of wealth; but there are hearts which are yet to be touched with the pure love of liberty, and hands strong enough and willing enough to strike a blow for that liberty, when the time arrives. But the work is not to be accomplished by us; our will, our wishes, our doubts, and our scruples, are empty and evanescent; there is a higher power, and a stronger arm, which will direct the movements of the great advent, which will shew us the path; [illegible] of His chosen people, has He not passed us, when shadowed beneath his protecting mantle, and punished when we sinned, separated and dispersed us when we forgot His holy ordinances, and do we not await His promises of final national regeneration! How can we doubt the future, in contemplating the past? Has he not said, "I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better for you than at your beginning, and you shall know that I am the Lord!" Has He not said, "for I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you from all countries, and will bring you into your own land!" But you shrink from the desolation of Judea, and fear that the land will forever wither under its ancient curse. Even there we have been anticipated by the mercy of divine forgiveness. "I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine, and they shall say, this land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it." Shall we ourselves become infidels, and doubt the promises of the Almighty? God forbid. Let us therefore prepare for that great change, which will fill the whole world with wonder and astonishment. Other nations, in breaking the yoke of the oppressors, and becoming rulers in their own land, bring with them their national characteristics. An ignorant people cannot make an enlightened government; but when the trumpet sounds for us on Zion, every country on earth will give up its great men among the Jewish people, and a combination of talent, wealth, enterprise, learning, skill, energy and bravery will be collected in Palestine, with all the lights of science and civiliration, and once more elevate those laws which Moses had consecrated to liberty and republican form of government. Let us commence the great work, an leave its consummation to our great Shepherd and Redeemer.

I hope you will agree with me, that it is a privilege to be permitted to contribute our mite to the erection of this great Synagogue, near the site of the temple, that all Israel should aid in its completion. It will possess one advantage—it will be orthodox. The Jewish religion should never change its original form or type. Reforms create schisms, and promote divisions, beside impairing the unity of our faith. Religion is of the heart; there must be the sent of devotion; forms and ceremonies are all empty without sincere piety.

I must confess that I should like to see some changes in our ritual and ceremonies: while admiring the beauty and sublimity of the Hebrew language, I should still be gratified, if we could introduce in our prayers a portion of the language of the country, in order that we may better comprehend the great responsibilities of our faith. We might also curtail many repetitions, and introduce some beneficial changes; but where are the limitations and boundaries to these reforms, when we once introduce the pruning knife? Where is our authority to change or modify those forms and ceremonies, the native purity of our faith, which we have sustained for four thousand years through the severest sufferings and privations? There are great dangers in all innovations on an established religion; and it is preferable to pursue the plain beaten paths so long adopted by our ancestors, than to venture upon unexplored regions, and carry out reforms, which finally efface the landmarks of our ancient faith. Yet if this is pursued by other congregations, we shall be gratified to know, that there is one congregation in Jerusalem, which will never change its ancient laws and customs: and therefore we can more cheerfully and more liberally extend our aid in the erection of this new Synagogue, under the conviction that it will be founded on a rock which will last for ages. The accommodations to the pious, which a new and extensive place of worship will afford, will attract a greater number of our people to Jerusalem from the surrounding countries. Admonished by the signs of the times, and by the expectation of important events, we find the aged Jews with [illegible] from the means, coming down the Danube, Circassia, journeying toward Jernsalem, there in holy meditation and prayer, to spend the remnant of their days, and to sit under the wall of the temple, and pray for the peace of Israel, and when they die surrounded by the learned and pious, to be buried in the consecrated earth, near the ashes of the great prophets, the sublime psalmist, and the illustrious of our fathers and ancestors. If there is any consolation in the last hours of life among the truly pious of our faith, it is in knowing that they are to be buried under the shadow of Mount Zion; to be near when the trumpet shall arouse the quick and the dead, at the day of Great Atonement. I never hear the name of Jerusalem, without thinking of that mighty man, whose consecrated fingers struck the wires of his ravishing harp, and gave alarm to the hosts of Heaven—that beloved of God, that warrior, poet, king—stern in his friendships, sublime in his orisons, he whose whole heart melted in his love and adoration of the Lord—the good, the great, the illustrious David. Who can read his Psalms without feeling all the pride of religious faith in knowing that he too was a Jew! What a privilege it is to stand by his tomb—what a blessing to lie near him even in death!

I have said that the building of this new Synagogue in Jerusalem would be considered, throughout the world, as a remarkable sign, particularly among a people, who, though separated and dispersed in the four quarters of the world, are united by the most extraordinary bonds of sympathy: like the magnetic shock, it reaches every extremity, like the flash of electricity which conveys intelligence in every direction the Jews will hear of it and will see the hand writing on the wall. We have been [illegible] great and startling events; God's dealing with his people have been most wonderful; we have passed through the promised punishments; shall we not enjoy the promised blessings? When and how this great advent is to be brought about, is still in the heart and hand of that great Spirit, who depresses and raises up, who breaks down thrones and elevates the oppressed and persecuted; as the great French historian has said, "Providence moves through time, as the gods of Homer through space—it makes a step, and ages roll away."—To the Christian world, which has a common origin with us, and still clings to the Jewish nation as the favored and the chosen people of God, this little expressive sign will not be without its impression—it is one blast of that silver trumpet; which at the dawn of day was sounded from the eastern portals of our temple. Here is the church of the Holy Sepulchre, in which Christians offer up their pious orisons to the memory of him, who, while on earth, deserved all that the best feelings of the heart could bestow; there the minarets of the mosque of Omar, built on the site of our temple; and there, in simple grandeur, in one corner of Mount Zion, is the new Synafiogue of the jews—the parent and his children, all were happy on the same spot, all wafting to the orisons to that Heaven where sits in divine majesty the Lord of Hosts and the God of Israel.

It is not the least curious in the erection of this new edifice in Jerusalem, that we can direct the builders to the spot where all the materials of Herod's temple yet lie in silent grandeur. Beneath the mosque of El Aksa, the great chambers, the immense granite pillars, the magnificent marble columns with exquisitely carved tops and bases, and the richly ornamented gates, the reservoirs still filled with water, in which the Priests and Levites bathed, are at this day to be found, not crumbling in ruins, but erect and majestic, and have been explored within the last two years by one of our people, now a resident of this city, proving, beyond doubt, the error of that prediction, which declared that not one stone of that temple shall stand upon another. At this particular crisis of affairs in Europe, this small sign will arouse the Jews in every direction. They have been busy amid these revolutions. It was not to be expected that a people of their literary, political, and commercial influence—the bankers of Europe, the merchants of England, the statesmen of France, the philosophers of Germany, the agriculturists of Poland, the poets of Italy, the artists, mechanics and soldiers everywhere, could see these mighty events developing themselves on the Continent, without participating actively in their progress and results. They too will hear the distant sound of that trumpet, whose notes will float around the horizon, and will know who is moving in the great work.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new temple will attract an immense number of the faithful to Jerusalem to witness the ceremony; it will not be built as the old one, on the return of our people from Babylon, with the sword in one hand and the trowel in the other. The building and the builders will be protected and assisted by all religious denominations. For many years I have cherished the hope that I might have it in my power to visit the Holy City—that my country would enable me to say to my people, with the prophet Isaiah, "Hail to the land shadowing with wings, which lies beyond the ruins of Ethiopia, which sendeth ambassadors by sea in vessels of bulrushes," hail to the house of the Jew as well as the Gentile.

It would be to me the proudest day of my life, if I could be present at laying the corner-stone of the new temple of Jerusalem—if I could realise all the associations which spring from the spot where Daniel and Solomon lived—where Isaiah prophesied, and where Maccabees conquered.

Friends and brethren, will you not contribute a small portion of that wealth which God has blessed you with, to aid in the erection of the new building on Zion? Will you not assist our poor brethren in Jerusalem, who are looking to you for aid in this interesting project? Will you not give a trifle, that you might have the gratification of saying, "I assisted to erect this edifice dedicated to the Most High in his own—his cherished city of Jerusalem?" I know you will: when was an appeal made to the charitable feelings of the Jew to aid his brethren, that it was not cheerfully, liberally responded to? All have an interest, an inheritance in Jerusalem: Jew and Gentile; all expect to unite [illegible] on that day when the mustard is to be gathered together. The honored messenger, now here, the Rabbi Echiel Cohen, who is to convey the fruits of your bounty to the Holy Land, will be, I hope, enabled to say, "I met my people in the western world, with hands that had hearts in them—who felt and who prayed for the peace of Jerusalem, who gave me the gold of Ophir, as we gave Solomon of blessed memory to erect the temple which yet lives in our hearts, and the prayers and blessings of the faithful await them." Send him not away to the banks of the Jordan without purse and without scrip. Let us give our mite, no matter how small. I know full well, my friends, how many claims you have upon your bounty—strong and natural ones; engraft this one upon the rest; you will not feel its pressure; but it will be to you a grateful, pleasing remembrance, that when this contemplated edifice is completed, that you have had an interest in its erection, and your names will be impressed upon the hearts of a people whose lives are devoted to piety, and whose prayers are offered for our temporal happiness and eternal salvation.

EXPEDITION TO THE GREAT SALT LAKE.—We understand, that the expedition for a trigonometrical and nautical survey of the Great Salt and Utah Lakes, and the surrounding country, lying in the nothern portion of Upper California, is now being fitted out in this city. It has been organized by Col. J. J. Abert, of the Topographical Bureau, and the command given to Captain Howard Stansbury, assisted by Lieut. J. W. Gunnison, of the Topographical Engineers—a corps which may well be called the workingmen of the army.

The point of departure in the special examination of this part of the great and mostly unexplored basin, is Fort Hall, on the Lewis Fork of the Columbia river, and thence directly south, by a new route to the Salt Lake, which forms so remarkable a feature in that interesting valley between the Sierra Nevada and the Wahsatch and Timpanozee Mountains, now chiefly held by the Utah tribes of Indians, and in which the Mormons have made a settlement, on the inner edge of the basin near Utah Lake. The survey will particularly develop the agricultural resources of the country, with a view to supply our Forts and troops stationed in that country, as also to embrace the astronomical, meteorological and other purposes which shall give a complete view of its physical geography; and then explore another new route, on the return of the expedition, by which access may be had to the great basin.

The St. Louis Union says that they are pleased to learn that all of our city Insurance Companies, except two, will meet their liabilities promptly. The two exceptions to which we refer, will pay from fifty to seventy per cent. The foreign agencies are generally prepared to adjust their polices on presentation. This will mitigate the calamity to a considerable extent. Many of our wealthy citizens have promptly tendered houses for the poor, and handsome contributions in money.

The Quincy Bank of Boston was robbed on the 23d, of $5000 in bills of that Bank.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

ATTENTION, SECOND TRAIN!!

Emigrants to go in the last train to the Valley of the Salt Lake with Bros. Smith and Benson, are hereby notified to assemble at the old rendezvous on Buoyo Lake, near Br. Hatches, forthwith, preparatory to an organization for the journey. Come now if you intend going this year.

The Destroyer Already Rideth upon the Face of the Waters.

This is a season of much disaster to our friends that have journied on the great internal thoroughfares of the American waters. Scores of our brethren have fallen by the cholera, one of the plagues and scourges of the last days, a most inveterate enemy of human flesh and blood. This may check the zeal of the naturally timid and fearful about venturing to come to us,—some may almost conclude or fear that God has forsaken his people and given them up to be destroyed: While the sons of perdition, the reprobate, and those who, before, were ordained to a just condemnation, will seize, with eagerness an avidity, this misfortune of the Saints the present year, to tantalize and reproach the church with being rejected of God.

There are certain favors and frowns that are shared alike by all mankind. "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." In time of famine, the people that happen to dwell where it is, suffer most whether saint or sinner. When floods or conflagrations visit any place, they are common evils that must be shared by all classes, whether just or unjust. The cholera is that "desolating sickness that should cover the land," predicted by the prophet, Joseph Smith, on the 9th day of March, 1831, and recorded in the Book of "Doctrine and Covenants," 1st edition, page 129.

In another place, speaking of the plagues, the judgments, and the calamities of the last days the Lord says: "My Saints shall hardly escape." (See Book of D. & C.

Judgment must begin at the house of God, and from thence extend through the world. Since mobocracy began in Jackson county, Missouri against the Saints, it has repeated from time to time, its painful and desolating work upon us, till it became sufficiently skilled in the work of destruction and death to step out from us and visit Philadelphia, New York, Cincinnati and many other places on a small scale; but at length, it ripened into revolutions of states, kingdoms, and empires. Its bloody wave has swept over the nations of the earth, carrying away thrones and royalty on its crimsoned flood, [illegible] things that are coming on the earth, papal throne is shaken, and the HOLY SEE disgraced. These great and important movements are destined to open and prepare the way for the kingdom of Heaven to be established on earth. Lift up your heads and rejoice then, ye way-worn pilgrims in Zion's cause whose locks are bleached by the frosts and storms of many a winter's exposure. Although you suffered by mobocracy at an early day, yet that will be over-ruled for your good.

This cruel agent, which knows no mercy, and which is destined to overthrow all earthly powers and governments, was introduced through you to your pain and sorrow in these times, yet to your everlasting joy will the honor and glory, to be achieved by the introduction of the kingdom of God, rest on your storm beaten brows as a reward of your suffering, toil, exposure and pain. The chastening rod of the Great Ruler, under the strokes of which the Saints have mourned, repented and wept, while wicked and apostate spirits have jeered, tantalized and reproached, will, like Aarons' rod, bud and blossom with blushing wreaths and unfading laurels in the mansions of our God and our King.

But the voice of wisdom would say to the Saints while journeying to this place, when the cholera or "destroyer" is riding with such sway on the turbid waters of the Missouri River. Venture not in large numbers on any craft that may attempt to ascend its impetuous current. Flee back into the country and do the best you can until this scourge has spent its violence. Keep off the rivers while the "Destroyer" rides upon their face. See Revelation given through Joseph, the prophet, in August, 1831, contained in Book of "Doctrine and Covenants, 1st edition, page 200. The following is an extract. The Missouri river is the waters particularly referred to.

"Behold I the Lord in the beginning, blessed the waters, but in the last days by the mouth of my servant John, I cursed the waters: wherefore, the days will come that no flesh shall be safe upon the waters, and it shall be said in days to come, that none is able to go up to the land of Zion, upon the waters, but he that is upright in heart. And as I the Lord in the beginning cursed the land, even so in the last days have I blessed it, in its time, for the use of my Saints, that they may partake the fatness thereof. And now I give unto you a commandment, and what I say unto one I say unto all, that you shall forewarn your brethren concerning these waters, that they come not in journeying upon them, lest their faith fail and they are caught in her snares. I the Lord have decreed, and the destroyer rideth upon the face thereof, and I revoke not the decree.

Imposition.

We are told that certain persons have been abroad through the country, representing great quantities of Gold in the Bluffs here, and have tried to raise money on the strength of it in order to work the mine.

If there was gold here in the Bluffs, this would be a sufficient guarantee to captalists near by us, to make all necessary investments. There is no native gold here that we know of, and the pretence is all a hoax, and the source from whence that deception came, cannot be responsible for a dollar in our opinion.

Br. W. I. Appleby and his family arrived here safe on the 9th inst., alive and well. The report of his death by the Cholera we are glad proves to be untrue..

To the Friends and Patrons of the Guardian.

Will our friends abroad, to whom the Guardian has been sent without their particular request, be so good as to signify their wishes to continue the paper, (if such be the case,) by forwarding to us, so soon as consistent, the amount of their desired subscriptions.

We now wish to lay in our stock of paper, ink, &c., for the year, that we may not be under the necessity of stopping the Guardian for want of materials to continue it, at a time perhaps when fall or winter has closed up the communication between this place and St. Louis. A little help now would be very acceptable. We feel resolved to do our part so far as our abilities will allow us, towards the continuation of the Guardian; and if our friends at home and abroad will do their duty towards its continuance, according to their ability, we trust they will not be the losers by their investments, but gain the credit of sustaining a news paper on the extreme western borders of our wide-spread Republic.

We have a good supply of the back numbers on hand, and every emigrant to the Valley of the Salt Lake should provide himself with a number of regular files from the beginning. Almost every citizen there would readily pay for them if he could get them; and if you will take along several volumes each, you will gratify the friends in the Valley, and obtain no loss yourselves, and materially aid the establishment.

MARRIAGE.

Among all the other duties that man is brought under obligation to perform, is that of taking to himself a wife at an age when youth is ripening into manhood—when the warmest sympathies and affections of the heart, uncorrupted by time, naturally reach forward after the very object that nature's God has created for that very purpose. By a longer delay, the brilliancy and lustre of the souls' soft and tender emotions become tarnished, neutralized, or deprived of their charms. Many argue, we know, that it is better for young people to postpone marriage to a more advanced age in order to acquire an experience suitable for that union. But Father Adam and Mother Eve had but a very short experience before they were blest or married, and commanded to multiply and replenish the earth. They were married before they sinned and fell, and thrice blissful would be the marriage union of their children if they would honorably marry before the monster sin had thrust his poisonous and too fatal sting to their hearts.

How often is it the case that men prefer a single life to the married life! Some neglect to marry because they love their money better than they do a woman. Men possessing this vitiated taste, are in the right not to marry; for they are unworthy of a wife. They are worse than blanks in creation—drones in the hive of nature: not linked in the the great chain of existence; but are broken disconnected fragments that are passively thrust aside like so many drossy scales from under the smith's refining hammer.

Others more criminal, neglect to marry because they wish to come under no restriction—but indulge in sensuality, without the cares and responsibilities of a family. Such men are incurring a fearful obligation. They are closing up the avenues of mercy to them—corrupting their own ways before God and man, and inviting the wrath of an [illegible] protected These ill [illegible] sount—their sins and forgetfulness of those who are victims to their unbridled passions. Let such beware lest they burn in torment and afterwards be forced to go through another state of probation in the African slave, or in some other way equally degrading, before they can begin to ascend towards the celestial gates.

Others neglect marriage because they are fearful that they may come to want, or that they may not be able to supply themselves with the necessaries and comforts of life. This is foolishly distrusting the kind care of a wise and merciful Providence whose will it is to provide for those who fear his name and honor and respect his ordinances. In the line of duty there is no real cause of fear; but out of it, there is fear, torment and a snare.

We would therefore say to all men that may feel to place any confidence in our counsel, that it is your duty to marry, if you have not already done so, and thereby get honor to yourselves—become the partner and protector of her whom the Great Ruler of all has made dependant on your more rugged, hardy and athelctic form. Bend all your energies towards her support and honorable maintenance,—lessen the amount of crime, dry up the fountain wretchedness—check the tributaries of infamy; and let it be your constant aim to fill the measure and purpose of your creation in all things, and glorify God with your body and your spirit which are his Progress of the truth.

We learn from Elder Felt of St. Louis that great accessions are made to the church there in the midst of fire, cholera and death. From Bro. Bird near Cleveland, Ohio, that he is all the time preaching and baptizing; from Elder Woodruff, Presiding Elder of the Church in the Eastern States, that the work in that quarter is decidedly looking up. Elder Woodruff complains much about the imposition practised by Sidney Roberts.

Roberts has proven himself a grand rogue. He has never been sent by [illegible] means for the poor. By dint of craft he has procured the names of some honorable men in and about Iowa city to his publication: but he is not entitled to a particle of confidence by such as know him.

If he will be saved, let him come here and go to work with his hands, and pay the widow and orphan that which he has meanly wronged them out of. Till he does this, let no member of our church nor anybody else who is a friend to goodness, virtue, honesty and truth, harbor or countenance him for a moment: for he is a base impostor, a corrupt and wicked man. We have the vouchers for this, and our own eyes and ears have convinced us that what we state is true. He has some friends in the church of respectability. We are sorry for their sake, that he disgraces himself thus, and mortifies his friends.

Emigrants will eat about one pound of bread stuff per day on the road to the Salt Lake, besides milk, butter, beans, dried fruit, bacon and various other little comforts if they can get them. Say one hundred pounds of bread stuffs for one person, old or young, on the road, and two hundred pounds to a person after he gets there, to last him six months. In all, three hundred pounds of best breadstuff to a peron to start from here with, besides all the cows he can take, and as many little necessaries and comforts as he can procure and haul.

Br. Orson Spencer's company left here last week for the Salt Lake. Messrs. Kinkade & Livingston with a large stock of goods left about the same time. They are destined for the Valley.

What is to be Done!

There is a detention of the mail at High Creek, near Linden, one week, between this town and St. Joseph, Mo. This has caused us to send our Eastern mail by private conveyance to St. Joseph in order to avoid this detention of a week which would throw us a week behind the time. This is a disadvantage that we also labor under in receiving our mail. It is a week behind the time. This is occasioned by the upper and lower routes not meeting at High Creek at the proper hour.

We signed a petition to the department sometime since, praying for an alteration in the arrangements, so that the mail could come directly through without this delay, but we have not heard from it since.

The wants of the country require a direct line of mail from this place to St. Joseph, and it should be carried in a coach, or under cover. The travel between this place and St. Joseph, is great for a new country, and it is increasing every day. The mail is now carried on horseback on this line, and it would require one pack horse to carry out the mail from the Guardian office—alone. The government has not bags nor facilities for taking half our mail out; we are therefore under the necessity of sending it to St. Joseph by private conveyance for this reason and to avoid the detention.

Elder Nathaniel H. Felt of St Louis is our general agent. Any deposits of money made with him in our favor will be duly acknowledged by us, and faithfully accounted. [illegible] money will be a sufficient voucher.

If subscribers leave St. Louis for this place, before the amount of their subscription expires, an order from Br. Felt for the remainder of the term for which they have subscribed, will be required to insure the delivery of the papers here.

Our traveling agents, or any other agents, or individual persons will be safe in making any deposits with Elder Felt for the Guardian, by taking his receipt therefor.

The steamers St. Croix and Mustang were at our landing on Sunday last with frieght and passengers for this place. Thanks to their clerks for late papers.

We have just received a letter from Elder Gibson of Philadelphia, containing five dollars cash, in which he says: "On the 16th of October last, I sent you thirteen dollars for the Guardian and marvel that we have not received the paper." The letter containing this amount, never reached us. This is another proof among the many, that some postmasters are theives and robbers. We have had about as many such testimony as we care to have.

Henceforth, all monies sent to us by mail must be at the risk of those who send it. We can only be responsible for the money that reaches us. We will be responsible for any monies paid to our agents whose names are in this paper, and they will send it by safe private conveyance, or retain it in their hands subject to our order. Most of the money sent to us comes safely. Elder Felt of St. Louis is our General Agent where any deposits can be made. Agents will please forward the names and address of subscribers as early as possible. Persons in this county by whom money has been sent to us would do well to call and pay it over before they see their names in the Guardian. We know who they are.

Mails.

Much complaint is being made by some of the citizens in relation to mails, letters, &c. The great complaint is that some hundreds of dollars sent by the mail from the Eastern country to persons residing in this county has never reached the persons to whom it was sent.

Is every post-office conducted according to law? Is every person sworn that is permitted to handle letters before they are delivered to the owners? Is the mail opened in private according to law? We have suffered more than any others that we have heard of in the loss of letters and money. Complaints are coming in to us almost daily in regard to these delinquencies. If the department would send some agent through in cog. to see how things are managed, and find out if possible where the evil is, it might be a good thing.

We would like to have our postmaster state in what order his mails come in, and how they are sent out. There is an evil somewhere which must be remedied, or the people will do something. We feel charged with indignation, but we know not where to direct our fire. Our columns are open for reasonable complaint, and also for any apology, defence, or justification. There must be intentional wrong or unpardonable neglect on the part of some postmasters between this and St. Louis. Frequently our most valuable exchanges are detained, and finally not come at all, and we do know and can prove that they are regularly mailed at St. Louis. Won't the department turn out a little on the route from St. Louis here, particularly if it can ascertain who the delinquents are?

Early Rising.

This is the season of labor, industry and toil; and every person that does not like to be pinched with want, should rise with the sun, if he or she is in health, and earn their breakfasts before they eat it. How pleasant it is to hear the notes of the feathered songsters greet the ear, as the king of day bursts from his Eastern temple and throws his radiance over the [illegible] makes labor most agreeable and easy at that hour. Try it. If you have nothing to do, let your inventive genius plan some business that will aid yourself or somebody else. Never be idle, for the idle person, with him that wastes his time unnecessarily in bed, cannot have the spirit of religion, and consequently cannot be saved, though he be rich in in this world's goods. The faithful laborer shall have his storehouse filled, while the sluggard must feed on chaff, husks and air.

School.

We are glad to hear that our old and tried schoolmaster, friend Grant, is about to engage again in our town. We shall expect something done now. The way he tutors his scholars is the right way. He does not whip much, but makes them mind—makes them learn, and keeps them in order. We heartily wish him success in his undertaking, believing him worthy of a liberal support. We understand that he commenced on Monday last.

We hear that an express has gone on to Fort Childs for the purpose of having Hickman arrested for the alleged crime of killing an Indian. This is right, and it would have been equally right also if some measures had been taken to demand the surrender of the Indians that shot Weatherbee, and also those who drove off a lot of our cattle from the camp on the Horn last year, and killed one of our men and wounded another while they were attempting to recover the cattle.

Equal rights and equal protection; we ask no more.

For the Frontier Guardian.
Cedat Qui Vult.

The stomach is the throne of life, the great centre from which the vital energy is generated. While the stomach retains its power it continues to generate the vital energy, necessary to sustain healthy action throughout the system. The stomach is the fire place of the system, and food is the fuel that furnishes the heat upon which life and motion depend.

During the prevalence of Cholera some years since, in those attacked with it, the digestive functions were so completely prostrated in many cases, that the patients died without any re-action—continuing cold and cramped from the commencement of the disease to its termination in these violent cases—the functions of calorification and enervation, or the power of generating heat and nervous energy were suspended. The treatment that proved most effectual in curing this fatal disease was the application of the vapor bath, emetics of the third preparation of lobelia and the free use of cayenne and other powerful stimulants. This same plan of treatment is adapted to the cure of all violent attacks of disease, as it constitutes the most effectual means for sustaining the vital energies and for evacuating the stomach of undigested food and other morbific matter, and restoring its lost power.

Exposure of the feet to dampness and cold is a very common source of disease. Dampness operates as a conducting medium by which the caloric vous fluid escapes, not only fro. the lower extremities but from the stomach, and all the viscera of the abdomen through the medium of the nerves, which form a connected chain of conductors or channels throughout the system. When the nervous fluid escapes faster than it is generated in the system, the vital functions over which it has control become enfeebled or deranged.

The treatment should consist first in the use of the vapor bath, medicated with relaxing herbs, such as spearmint, catnep, or even lobelia if necessary, injections of the same with cayenne or ginger, and friction of the surface with stimulants. Teas of composition, spearmint; peppermint, or some other diffusive stimulant must be given weak and in small quantities during the steaming. They will generally be rejected at first, especially if they are strong or given in large quantities but give them as above directed, and persevere till relief is obtained. Sometimes it is necessary to keep the patient on the cot bath from four to six hours together.

L. JOHNSON.

Home Regulations.

It is our intention hereafter to put up and send subscribers' papers to the following places in this county, viz: To Jonathan Browning's on Mosquito Creek—to Trading Point—to Council Point—to Benson's Mill—to Cooley's Mill—to Downs' Mill—to the Indian Mill—to Rocky Ford—to Harris' Grove—to Highland Grove—to Springville Branch—to Ferryville—to the Old Agency Branch—to Carterville—to David Maggard's and to Davis' camp; and if there are any other places to which papers should be directed, we will attend to it if we are informed.

All such as are interested in these various places should agree together and designate some man to be your neighborhood Postmaster to receive the papers for you. There are complaints made by some that they do not get their papers, and we have been up the mail, [illegible] possible for us to remember all these little particulars, and we have therefore recommended the above course. Hereafter, when you call for papers, tell us where you wish them sent, as we are making a new Mail Book, and we will try to accommodate you.

Counsel.

As there are some emigrants that are disposed to take poor persons with them to the Valley in order to assist them on the road in driving teams, cooking, and in general assistance; and so soon as they get there, they want to turn these poor persons off on to the hands of some others. This is wrong, and cannot be suffered. The people in the Valley have all they can do to sustain themselves without being burdened by an influx of poor thrown upon their hands after the more wealthy have availed themselves of their services on the road. We therefore say to all concerned, that whoever takes the poor to the Valley, shall support them there till their way is honorably opened to get a support otherways.

This counsel will henceforth be enforced upon all that emigrate to this county. We say to the rich abroad, bring all the poor that you please, but you must situate them yourselves to live after you bring them here, and not throw them upon the hands of others for a support and pay no further attention to them. Do not think to cast your burdens upon other men when you are more able yourselves to bear them than they.

A BAD SIGN.—When you see a man offering an extravagant per cent for the use of money, particularly when he is not in a heavy or responsible business, you may calculate, in a general way, that he does not intend to pay it again. If he is in a heavy business, you may look out for him to fail soon. A close and wise calculator who intends to meet his liabilities, is not anxious to borrow money at a

The first number of the Minesota Register, published at St. Paul, in that new Territory, by A. Randall & Co. is now on our table. It is certainly a very neatly executed sheet. It appears to be devoted to the settlement and general improvement of that nothern country. We wish it success, and regret that we cannot allow ourselves the pleasure of a visit to the falls of Saint Anthony on the 4th of July next.

PLOT OF SALT LAKE CITY.—We were shown a plot of Salt Lake City, the other day, which was brought on by the express. The city is laid out in squares, each square contains ten acres, and divided into eight lots, each lot faces on a street, and no lot faces another. The streets are all straight and laid out eight rods wide. The longest street is four miles in length.

In the case of Layton Hatch, for killing McVaugh, some knowing writer from this place has said that Hatch was being tried before a Mormon Bishop, and represented that it would be covered up, and Mormon authority screen the murderer. This writer is either a base and intentional misrepresenter, or a stupid ignoramus.

Hatch was arrested, or rather, gave himself up. He was tried before Esq. Browning. The case was argued by able attorney's on both sides. The result was that Hatch was acquitted. He was then brought up before the branch of the church of which he was a member, and excluded from fellowship for the rash, and probably unnecessary deed.

On our first page we publish a very interesting letter from Elder Addison Pratt, who has been on a mission to the Sandwich and Tahitian Islands, for nearly five years. It gives a glowing description of the progress of the work of the Lord in the Pacific Isles. His letter was written from the Salt Lake City, to Geo. A. Smith, (one of the Twelve,) of this place. Elder Pratt returned to get his family, and a recruit of laborers, so that they might carry the work on with greater vigor.

On Saturday, the 2d inst., Josiah Merritt, Esq., Silas Conduit, Dr. G. H. Hoyt and Mr. Bartlett, were cut off from the church by the High Council, for intemperance and for suspicious conduct about a grocery or two in town.

Wm. A. Hickman was cut off at the same time for unnecessarily and hastily shooting an Indian as it was believed. He fled from the country immediately after the deed was done. Mrs. VanOlstine was also excluded from the church at the same time. Miss Rachel Kingsley is also excluded from the church.

Elder Appleby complains bitterly against the ungentlemanly—barbarous and threatened savage conduct of Capt. Brooks of the steamer Lightfoot. Our friends can probably find another boat to travel on.

LARGE FIRE AT MILWAUKIE.—The Milwaukie Wisconsin, says that nearly two blocks of buildings were consumed on the night of the 16th ult. Loss estimated at $30,000.

ABSENCE OF MIND.—L. Pickering formerly [illegible] money from dif[illegible]isiana, obtaining large sum[illegible] and then went on board of a steamboat and for[illegible] come on shore again. Officers were sent in pu[illegible] to remind him of what he had been doing.

FIRE.—An attempt has been made to destroy the city of Peoria, Ill., by setting buildings on fire in several places at the same time.

KANESVILLE MARKET.

KANESVILLE, June 13, 1849.

The market for all kinds of provisions and breadstuffs has declined. There has been large quantities of Bacon and Flour shipped from below. We quote flour at $2 50@ $3 00 ₩ hundred. Market dull.

GROCERIES.—The market has been very poorly supplied and prices very high. Sugar—Common sells 10@ 12 cents, and very scarce. Coffee—we quote at 10@ 12, for common. Salt has been scarce, and the last that arrived sold readily at $4 ₩ sack. And we quote other groceries in active demand and high rates.

The market for all other articles remains as we quote below.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13, 1849.

☞ Notice.—All communications addressed to the Editor, must be post-paid to receive attention.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

☞ Help the Cause.—If every subscriber for the GUARDIAN will make it his business to procure, at least, one more subscriber, he will confer a favor on us, and contribute to the advancement of the cause. If he can procure five, ten, or more new subscribers, the favor to us and the cause we advocate will be increased in like ratio. Will you undertake it? New subscribers can be furnished with back numbers if they wish.

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, or to Pisga, Garden Grove, or to the Valley of the Missisippi by way of any of the above places, will do us a great favor by calling on us before they leave. If [illegible] could let us know a day [illegible] before they leave, they would give us a little time to prepare as mail.

☞ Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. These safely enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and our receipt will be responded to forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

Tremendous Conflagration!!

23 STEAMBOATS BURNED!

SEVERAL SQUARES IN ASHES.

Loss of Life!!

Three Millions of Property Destroyed!!!

About ten o'clock Thursday night, May 9th, the steamer White Cloud, lying near the head of the levee, was discovered to be on fire. At the time, there was a stiff breeze blowing from the north east, which soon carried the flames across to the Edward Bates, the next boat below, the heat from these, set fire to the Eudora, lying above them; the Belle Isle next below the Bates, then caught fire. By this time, one or two boats below were dropping down, leaving a vacancy between those on fire and the boats below them.

At this time the Edward Bates being about half burned up, was cast loose and went floating down the levee, setting fire to those boats still lying at the levee, as she approached them, in the following order:—Sam. Julia—but slightly injured. The Bates but barely touched these boats, being those immediately below her. The following steamboats, with a large number of wood-boats, barges, &c., &c., were entirely consumed:—

Value of Burnt Buildings.

The President of the Board of Assessors yesterday submitted to the Mayor the following report of the loss in buildings, sustained in the late disastrous fire. It is generally admitted to be a very accurate estimate, though it is [illegible] that it is to be regarded as the cash valuation:

To the Honorable James G. Barry, Mayor of the city of Saint Louis.

SIR:—By your direction, I respectfully submit the following report of the losses sustained by our citizens by the late disastrous conflagration.

JAMES MAGEHAN,
President of the Board of Assessors.

In addition to property enumerated, there was a great quantity of all kinds of Merchandise, goods, mechanical tools &c., in the buildings. Also a vast amount of grain in sacks, hemp, bacon, &c., &c., on the levee, which caught from the heat sent off by the boats, and was destroyed and unfortunately, on one pile of hemp which was covered by a tarpaulin, it is said, four persons were sleeping, and all were destroyed. We saw the body of one of them, a boy, which was carried into the Police Office. There were a number of kegs of powder on board the various boats, and as the fire reached them they caught and exploded with a terrific crash, scattering the burning fragments in wild confusion into the upper air.

By one of these explosions one man standing on the levee was killed by being struck with a fragment blown from the burning wreck of the Martha; another was shocking lacerated in different parts of the body; but how many poor wretches have fallen victims to these devouring flames as they have gone sweeping in wild grandeur from boat to boat, and from house to house, and from street to street, no man can ever tell.

One of the wildest and most heart-rending spectacles ever witnessed in our city was exhibited last night. From Duncan's Island, extending perhaps a half or three-fourth of a mile in a continuous line up the river, the burning wreck of boat met boat, and rolled their united clouds of deep black smoke, and lurid flame in wild confusion into upper air; on the other hand the long lofty range of stores fronting the river, sent up a cloud of sparks and sheets of dazzling flames, which threw a red and glaring light far away into the darkness of the night, which hung upon our western borders. Here and there were seen half frantic men, running in bewilderment [illegible] where, or staggering from their burning homes under a load of their most precious property, followed by a weeping wife and her tender babe.

Since writing the above, we have taken another walk through the burning district, which now, at a quarter before three o'clock, already extends from the levee, west, to Second street, and from Locust, south to Elm street. This entire space is not burned over, but much of it is, and much more will be before the flames are extinguished.

We cannot pretend to particularize the buildings burnt, but will mention the Telegraph Office, the United States Hotel, the Reveille Office, Republican Office, the Organ Office and the New Era Office. These comprise all the English daily papers in the city, except our own; we being on the north side of Locust above Main street, have, fortunately, escaped. We can form no estimate of the loss by this fire—it may probably be put down at five millions of dollars.

[From Friday Evening's Edition.]

In our morning edition, we gave what of interest we were able to collect, relative to the conflagration which has laid in ashes a large portion of St. Louis. We also promised to give our readers, in our evening issue, as detailed an account as it was possible to collect; but, to get at anything like a full and accurate statement of the amount of property destroyed, or number of lives lost, is not within the range of possibility. We can only follow the general range of the fire, without going into details. We begin by stating that the point at which the fire first started on shore, was at the corner of Locust street and the Levee—the corner house, and three buildings above it, fronting the Levee, were destroyed; the flames then, (one exception,) in the blocks fronting the Levee and Main street, and extending from Locust street southward to Chesnut street, a distance of three squares. At Chesnut street, it turned up and crossed over to the next block south, at the junction of Commercial Alley with this street, and from the Alley to Main, and down to Market street, burning all except two buildings at the corner of Market street and Com. Alley. At the junction of Market and Main streets, the flames crossed diagonally to the Market Street House, and followed both sides of Market street, up to Second street. Then crossing Main street, the flames again swept every building from Locust to Market, except a row of four four-story fire proof brick buildings, just below Locust street.

Passing up Pine, Chesnut and Market streets, the devouring element consumed every house in the two blocks intervening between the streets mentioned, and Main and Second streets, and those on nearly half of the block north of Olive.

Here its ravages were stayed in this part of the city. Before the progress of the flames could be arrested it was found necessary to blow up one or two houses near the corner of Market and Second streets, and in doing so, at least three persons were killed. The fragments of one of their bodies were found on the opposite side of the street, one near Walnut, on Second street, and the thigh bone and a foot belonging to another, near the foot of Walnut street, some two or three squares from where the houses were blown up. These, with the body of the boy burnt on the levee, make four that are now at the police office. The military, firemen, and citizens, are to form a procession, and bury them sometime during the day.

We will now [illegible] on Elm street, where the fire made another lodgement, and spreading diagonally through this block, it swept up to Main, and down to Spruce street, a distance north and south of two squares, and crossing Main, it carried nearly every thing before it, up very nearly to Third street, three squares to the west of its starting point. At Main street, the flames crossed Elm, and consumed one-fourth of the block north of Elm and west of Main streets. From the foot of Elm, up its southern side to Second street, a distance of two squares, not a house is standing. By this dire calamity, hundreds of families are made homeless, and many who were in affluence, are reduced to poverty.

South Market, and the Town Hall were on fire at one time, but by great exertions of a few persons present, they were saved.

Nearly every pane of glass in the windows for half a square distant from the corner of Market and Second street, were broken by the concussion at the time of the blowing up of the building at that point.

The police arrested and confined in the jail and calaboose nearly fifty persons for stealing at the fire.

There are various rumors afloat relative to the loss of different persons, but many of them without foundation; and yet two or three of our old and valued citizens we believe have lost their lives; and no doubt many are lost who will never be enquired after, or thought of—strangers, of whom there were many on the boats and in our city.

The extent of the conflagration, from its beginning to its termination, takes in almost the whole of two blocks, which would be about one mile in length, by two in width. The streets of our city, laid out originally very narrow, are literally choked up with fallen walls of houses and destroyed property of various kinds. We did not see either New York or Pittsburg after the great conflagration there, but we are informed that our city present an aspect of greater desolation than either of those places. In regard to the loss, comparatively, we know not from any data in our possession which is the greatest. Our recollection however, is, that in neither New York nor Pittsburg, did the loss exceed five millions of dollars. If this be true, St. Louis has suffered more than either of those cities by fire.

We have not room to give the list of sufferers, but we give as extended an account as our columns will allow. And the St. Louis Union in speaking of the fire says:

No pen can depict the desolate ruin this morning presented on the levee, and on the path trodden by this awful destroyer. Nothing like it can be imagined, and the whole population are in consternation and dismay at the dismal scene. A meeting is called by the Mayor for this evening to consider what is most necessary to be done for our population in this emergency. Thousands are houseless—homeless—penniless; and demand, by the common ties of humanity, immediate aid. This of course will be given them as early as possible, by those that are still left unscathed.

For a time this fire must, with its other evils, be a serious injury to the business of our city. Transactions of a mercantile character, will for a period be almost entirely abandoned to attend to the pressing demands of humanity suffering every where around. Yet we trust it cannot last long; for our people and our resources are sufficient to overcome even greater calamities than this dreadful conflagration.

We received the St. Louis Republican and Organ in a shape that bespoke of their loss—but they ask the indulgence of only a few days, when they say they will be prepared to serve their readers in new and improved dresses.

The papers suggest the propriety of widening the streets and other important improvements which will add to the appearance of the city.

Most of the persons owning property in the burnt district, are either men of wealth, or men who have credit; and it is most likely that the portion of the city which has been destroyed will be rebuilt immediately.

From the New York Tribune.

The Tragedy of Nations.

There is War in almost every quarter of Europe. In Italy the Austrians have destroyed Brescia, the blood of her inhabitants staining the ruins of their churches and their homes. Genoa has been bombarded for twenty-four hours by the Piedmontese troops for revolt and Republicanism. In Spain the old quarrel has resulted in a new [illegible] no great principle to shed luster on the gloom. Denmark is defeated by Germany, and defeated where she has hitherto been the victor—on the sea. In Hungary the Austrians are more decidedly losers than ever. Thirteen hundred of their dead strew a single field; Puchner has fled to Russian protection in Wallachia, and Bem is master of Transylvania. The King of Prussia refuses the German Crown, and all there is uncertainty. France still plays the part of a spectator, her Government making her false, abroad, while by attempts to suppress Thought shackle the Press and gag Speech at home, they make ready the new Revolution.

Thus in doubt, struggle, suffering unspeakable, dies the Old Order that the New may rise from its ashes. Terrible, incomprehensible is the process; but let us believe that the result will be worth the pain.

A NEW PAPER.—We have received the Prospectus of a new paper to be started in Washington by Messrs. ALEX. C. BULLITT and JOHN O. SARGEANT. The Republic will give to the principles upon which the administration of Gen. Taylor came into power a cordial, zealous, and constant support. Success to it.

WEATHER.—The weather has improved some since our last publication, and has been good for all kinds of crops. Wheat looks well and the prospect is good for a rich harvest.

A new disease, almost equal to the "Tyler Grip," called "the Fitz," is said to be prevailing among the locofoco Postmasters of the country about these days. It is said to afflict the most seriously those who have been political bawlers, and made themselves conspicious in the late Presidential election. Meny have been already removed from a political state of existence, and the epidemic threatens more of [illegible] their [illegible] in some principal topic of the locofoco papers. It is indeed a salty—a briny—a crying time with them. —[Quincy Whig.

CALIFORNIA EMIGRANTS.

John B. Crowell, A. B. Crowell, C. A. Bodwell and William Bell, from Hartford, Conn., arrived at this place four weeks since. They are bound for Salt Lake City in company with Messrs. Kinkade & Livingston.

Noah Norton, Adrian, Mich.; Abraham Mills, do do; Dr. Graham, do do; Mr. White, do do; the above are attached to the Mormon train, to go by the way of Salt Lake to the gold regions.

CHOLERA VS. FIRE.—The St. Louis Union says: It is a fact somewhat remarkable, that, since the fire, there has not occurred a single case of cholera, within our personal knowledge. In other parts of the city, cases may have occurred; but it would appear that around the burnt district, the fire has acted as a disinfecting agent; or, it may be the people have so much else to think about, and attend to, near the district where the fire occurred, that they have not time to either talk about or catch the cholera. It is said that the great plague in London, was stayed in its ravages, and totally disappeared, by a remarkably destructive fire that occurred at the time. This, we believe, is an accredited historical fact; and it therefore is not without probability that our fire may, to a great extent, expel the dreaded cholera.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

ST. JOHNS, N. B. May 25th,—4 P. M.

The Steamer Caledonia arrived at Halifax at 7 1-2 o'clock last evening. Your express left at eight, and arrived in this city at 10 o'clock this morning.

The steamer brings 50,000 pounds sterling in specie.

In England, the bill for the modification of the navigation laws was carried in the House of Lords by the majority of ten, in favor of the ministry. This result has given the Whig ministry a new tenure of office.

In the House of Parliament, the oath bill having for its object the removal of the Jewish disabilities, has been read a second time, by a much larger majority than before.

Mr. Roebuck was about bringing before Parliament his plan for the better government, of the colonies. It has been also moved, that a committee be appointed to ascertain the amount of the debt due from foreign governments to the British subjects.

The arguments on the writ of error, in the cases of O'Brien and McManus, have been read before the House of Lords. Without hearing the counsel for the Crown, the law lords and judges unanimously directed that the errors assigned by the plaintiffs could not be maintained. The argument and judgement of the Queen's Court of Ireland, therefore stands affirmed, and the transportation would probably be made the 1st of June. It is rumored that the prosecution of Duffee has been abandoned.

The quarrel between the Parliament throughout Germany and the respective provinces, has reached its highest pitch.

A conflict has already taken place in Saxony, and decided in favor of the people, who fought the regular troops seven hours, sustaining great loss of life.

The railways have been displaced to prevent the arrival of troops from Berlin. Fortunately, however, previous to this, sufficient of Russian force arrived, who came most opportunely to secure momentary tranquility. The fight was renewed on the next day, and the cannonading kept up until the night of the 7th. The battle was again renewed on the succeeding morning, and a deadly warfare was going on in the streets at the latest advices.

Intelligence from Dresden to the 8th, says hostilities raged between the royalists and the people, and were being continued without any immediate prospect of termination. A reward had been offered for the members of the provincial government.

At Leipsig a disturbance had broken out between the military and the people. A short struggle ensued, when the people were suppressed.

Accounts from Berlin state that an insurrection had broken out at Breslau, on the 6th, and that the troops and people were fighting in the streets.

It is rumored that an insurrection had broken out at Coblentz, and while these convulsions were occurring, the Austrian Government was in danger of dissolution by [illegible]

Hungarian accounts represent the [illegible] ment as at its highest pitch, and that it would take more than Russia and Austria combined to quell them.

Endeavors are being made to create a revolution in Gallatia. In fact, from Poesen to Pesth the whole country is involved or on the brink of hostilities.

England and France disapprove of the Russian interference with Austria and Hungary.

The French troops have been stopped in their progresss towards Rome, by the Republicans, with the loss of Capt. Oudinot, 180 killed and 400 wounded.

The Danish war continues. The quarrel between Napoleon and his cousin grows still more fierce.

The above highly important intelligence we find in the Telegraphic dispatches. And proves conclusively that this is the day of great revolutions and change, preparatory to the coming of the Son of Man.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.

Washington Good, a colored man, convicted of murder, was hung at Boston this morning. He attempted to committ suicide last night, and was so weak in consequence that he had to be carried to the scaffold upon a chair. He protested his innocence to the last.

James Tower, injured at the fireman's riot in this city, on Wednesday night, died suddenly at the hospital, last night. Henry Smithers, Alias Brown, has been arrested upon a charge of striking Tower upon the head with a spanner, during said riot, thereby causing his death.

Letters received in this city, state that there was a tremendous earthquake at Maricaibo, on the 12th of April, doing immense damage. Morcago is still acting as president. It is expected that Paez would soon be selected to fill that office.

BOSTON, May 25.

Insurance was yesterday effected upon $250,000 in gold, which is coming by the California steamer.

WASHINGTON, May 25.

The Circuit Court has confirmed the verdict of the Criminal Court in the case of Tom Hand, convicted of stealing the government jewels. He will consequently get three years imprisonment in the penitentiary.

PITTSBURGH, May 25.

The Gen. Assembly of the Presbyterian Church have resolved that it would be inexpedient, and peculiarly improper, for that body to propose or attempt any measure in the work of emancipation.

NEWBURG, May 18—8½ A. M.

The [illegible] beautiful steamer Empire, of Troy, while on her passage up last evening, was run into by the schooner Noah Brown, at half past 10, opposite this place, and sunk to her promenade deck, before assistance could be rendered. The steamer Rip Van Winkle, fortunately on her upward trip, came to her assistance, and rescued the lives of one or two hundred of her passengers. It is impossible, as yet, to give a correct number of lives lost. A small boat has just come ashore, with the bodies of three ladies, who were taken from the wreck.

The number of bodies found up to 8 A. M, is eleven. They have just pumped the water from the boilers of the Empire, and the body of another, a young lady, has come to light.

Among the persons drowned by the sinking of the Empire last night, and whose bodies have been recovered, the following have been recognised:

Isabella Carson, aged 17 years.

George L. Buckland, aged 2 years.

Mrs Noble, of Troy, (sister of Gen. Ross.)

One body, not recognised, is lying at Fiskkill.

A large number are missing, but it is impossible to say how many.

The steamer Empire is still submerged in water to the promenade deck. She lies on one of the flats of Newburg. Her cabins are supposed to contain dead bodies, which have not yet been reached.

The whole number of persons drowned, is estimated to be between twenty and thirty.

Seven bodies have been found on the wreck, four of which have been identified—all taken from the upper tier of berths in the ladies saloon. The lower berths and gentlemen's cabin are supposed to contain 25 or 30 of the unfortunate passengers. A coroner's inquest sits here on three of the bodies. Another sits to morrow, at Fishkill landing. It is intended to raise the boat to-morrow, when the true number of the dead can be ascertained.

Cholera in Jefferson City.

During the past week we have had Cholera, in its most malignant form, in this city. On Thursday last, the S. B. Monroe, a vessel belonging to the southern trade, and a stranger in our river, landed at our wharf, having on board a number of cases of Cholera. We have not been able to ascertain the number of passengers, but understand that they consisted principally of a company of California emigrants from Jeffersonville, Indiana, numbering about thirty, and a number of Mormons on their way to join their brethren in the neighborhood of the Great Salt Lake. Soon after the Monroe landed, the sick were removed, some to the Virginia Hotel, and others to various vacant houses in the city, where many of our citizens vied with each other in attentions to their wants. It pains us to say, that we have never witnessed such a fearful mortality, in any given number of cases, as has taken place since the arrival of this ill-fated steamer. All who have been attached with this "scourge of God," with comparatively few exceptions, have fallen victims. We have not been able to ascertain precisely the number of the dead, but from the most reliable information we have, we think we may safely say that upwards [illegible] women and children have [illegible] cholera on Thursday last. Our Physicians have been active and constantly in attendance, and for their vigilance and exposure, night and day deserve the public gratitude; but the malignant type of the disease has thus far baffled medical skill in a large majority of the cases subjected to the treatment of our excellent Physicians. But three of the California Company alluded to now survive—some of them died before reaching this place—and the fatality has been little less alarming and terrible among the Mormon emigrants. The heart sickens at the contemplation of this awful dispensation of Providence—of whole families stricken down in a common grave, and of helpless little children bereft of father and mother and cast upon the charities of the world—and all this desolation the result only a few hours! Heaven shower blessings on the heads of those who have generously stepped forward, not only to smoothe the pillow of the dying, and to bury the dead, but to console the bereft widow, and to feed and clothe, and have a mother's care for the little orphan.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—Thirty-seven interments were reported to the City Register, as having occurred on Wednesday; of which twenty-four died of cholera. The rest were, one each of debility, dysentery, congestion of brain, diarrhœa, apoplexy, consumption, decline, inflammation of bowels, mania a potu, typhoid fever, starvation, and two unknown. The case of starvation occurred on Biddle street. The victim was a child, about two years of age, of a person who had been but a short time in the city, and who had not made his wants known to the authorities. The rest of the family were in a destitute condition, but have been provided for.—[St. [illegible]

POETRY.

From the New York Tribune.

LISETTE.

BY MRS. H. E. G. ABEY.

There's a voice of sweet-toned waters
Forever on her ear,
And the South-land's fairy daughters
Awake their notes of cheer;
But she sits in pining sadness,
Regardless of their call,
And their ringing notes of gladness
But bid the tear-drops fall.

There are birds unrivaled winging
Thro' the perfumed orange bowers,
With a gush of music, singing
Their love-songs to the flowers;
And the harp and lute are blending—
But she heedeth not their tone,
For her charmed ear is bending
To the sea-shells' plaintive moan.

"Sweet, sorrwing lute of Ocean,
O tell me of the wave
That rolls with gentle motion
Above my William's grave!
Have the wond'ring mermaids borne him
To some sweet coral grove?
Do they sit in groups and mourn him
With their looks of earnest love?

"Say, where the pearl-shells glisten
In thy native ocean cave,
I know 't was thine to listen
To the last sweet thought he gave;
And they who his couch are wreathing
Have sent thee from the sea,
That thou mightst be ever breathing
His parting words to me.

"I must seek his cold, damp pillow,
And thou shalt be my guide,
Afar through the foaming billow—
For I am his chosen bride.
I have heard the sea-maids' weeping
In their bowers beneath the wave,
And I'll join the watch they're keeping
Above my blest and brave."

There's a voice of sweet-toned waters
Forever on her ear,
And the South-land's fairy daughters
Awake their notes of cheer;
But she sits in sadness pining,
Where the Lime its shadow flings,
And an orange wreath she's twining
For the sea-shell as she sings.

MISCELLANY.

The following satire upon some of the popular literature of the day is pretty good. The style of some of our well known prolific writers will be recognized in it.

From the Salem (Mass.) Advertiser.

A NINETEEN CENT PRIZE TALE.

THE MAIDEN'S ADVENTURE; Or, the Desperado of Cat Island!

BY JACK JASPER.

Author of "The Strange Fish," "Caverns of the Mighty Deep," etc, etc.

CHAP. I.

"Oh! what a nice place for the cows"—Shaks.

Cat Island lay bathed in moonlight! [illegible] of Salem harbor [illegible] Salem lay in the distance. Sally heaved a sigh, and wished she was up there.

CHAP. II.

"'Twas werry like a whale."—Tom Moore.

Tom Stongaketchus was alone upon the waters. The breeze gently filled his sails; the bow of his bark was towards Cat Island. His heart was sad, for he was alone upon the great deep. Suddenly, Tom thought he heard a voice—'twas Sally Slaco upon the rocks!

CHAP. III.

"Wot an hunfortunate hindiwidual I is."—Scott.

The soft notes of Sally came borne o'er the silent bosom of the waters. Tom thought he had never heard such music—so he listened with all his might. Sally was meditating at midnight, and these were the solemn words she uttered:

"Oh dear! oh dear! oh dear!
"I'm sure it's the plague o my life,
That nobod-y
Ever axes me
To be their loving wife."

CHAP. IV.

"To help a female when in need,
Is the greatest bliss indeed."—Byron.

Tom sighed when Sally's voice was still. for Tom had a sensitive heart.

"I'll go and console with her," said Tom.

So he eased off his sheets and put his helm a' weather. His boat soon struck the shore, and Tom immediately tied her to a big rock.

CHAP. V.

"She sat upon the cold rock, while her heart was far away o'er the waters."—Milton.

Sally was thinking of the past; she heeded not the approaching footsteps of Tom Stongaketchus; [illegible] hands, Tom thought he saw a tear trickling through her fingers.—Bending on one knee, Tom lightly touched the weeping maiden, and whispered softly—"Fair lady, can a stranger do aught to relieve thy cruel distress?"

CHAP. VI.

Her first surprise being o'er, she scanned the youth,
And felt her heart give way before the truth."—Pope.

Sally started, and would have screamed, but Tom begged her not to.

"Who are you, sir!" said she.

"One who adores you," said he:

"But you may be a villain," said Sally.

"But I aint," said Tom.

"What is your name," said she.

"Tom Stongaketchus, is the name I was christened by," said he.

"Do you really love me?" said she.

"I don't do nothing else," said he.

"Where do you live?" asked she.

"On Tinker's sweet isle I reside all alone; Come thou, sweet maiden, for to bless my home."
sang he.

"But do you know who I am?" said she.

"I shall if you tell me," said he.

"Well, then, sit down, and I'll tell you," said she. So Tom sat down.

CHAP. VII.

"Herpale she told with such a winning grace.
Sure ne'er looked I on so fair a face."—Dryden.

"I was born in Salem," said Sally, "and my name is Sally Slaco. Last year my uncle Hiram brought me down here to tend his house, while he catched lobsters and went a clamming, and here he keeps me all the time; and I dont hardly ever see any body, and I never saw any body to love till you came here to-night, but I won't stay here any longer, I won't—

"I'll go to Tinker's isle with you, my dear,
And there we'll pass the happy year."

CHAP. VIII.

"There's a sweet little island just over the sea,
——Let's go and live on that.—Dante.

"Bless you for that!" cried Tom.

And now we seal our love with one sweet kiss,
Then away for Tinker's isle and—bliss!

The two gentle beings entwined their arms around each other, and the rocks soon after echoed back the pledges that sealed the happiest hour of their existence.

"Now," said Sally, "let us make haste before uncle Hiram gets back."

"Come along, then," said Tom—

My boat is on the shore,
And Hiram's on the sea,
So never, never more
Shall we two parted be.

CHAP. IX.

A sail! the pirate cried, now men be true,
The woman mine, the gold I give to you.—Bulwer.

Tom handed Sally into the White Cap, (for that was the name of his boat) and then getting in himself, shoved off, and was soon underweigh. The wind blew fresh, and the White Cap moved swiftly over the waters. Suddenly Tom heard a hail—

"Sail, ho!"

"Oh! gracious!" said Sally, "that's Hiram's voice, what shall we do?"

"Get down into the bottom of the boat," said Tom, "and perhaps he won't see you."

"Heave to, or I'll sink you!" cried uncle Hiram.

But Tom kept on; and the next minute, "bang" went a gun from Hiram, the Desperado of Cat Island.

CHAP. X.

"Oh! horrid deed! Oh! execrable crime!
No loss, I'm sure is equal now to mine."—Watts.

Sally was sitting in the bottom of the boat when the gun was fired. She looked up on hearing the report, and poor Tom was falling on the thwart. With a scream she fell on his neck, but he was dead. The ball of the desperado had killed poor Tom.

CHAP. XI.

"So smiled the ruffian as he grimly gazed.
Upon the features he had so defaced."—Johnson.

When Tom fell, he let go the tiller, and the White Cap soon came up in the wind, and the boat of Hiram came alongside. Tom was lying dead in the bottom of the boat, and Sally was lying insensible with her arms around his neck. Hiram stepped on board the White Cap, and laughed as he looked upon his work! He stooped and raised Sally from the body, and sat her in his own boat; then tying the body to one of the thwarts of Tom's boat he knocked a hole in her bottom and sunk her.

CHAP. XII.

"The waves closed o'er him, and the wild waves sung,
A requiem o'er the man that should have been hung."

As Hiram stepped [illegible] scuttling the White Cap, Sally around herself, and demanded in thrilling accents where Tom was. Hiram calmly pointed to the White Cap, which was slowly sinking beneath the waves. With a wild shriek of despair, Sally rushed to the boat's edge, as if about to throw herself overboard, when Hiram seized her. Quick as the lightning's flash, she turned, and snatching a pistol from his belt, darted to the cabin. Hiram rushed after her, but he was too late—a flash—an explosion! Sally had blown up the vessel of Hiram! The Desperado of Cat Island had gone with his victim to a watery grave!

EPILOGUE.

Reader! our tale is told! Our pen that hath so faithfully delineated these thrilling truths, will be shortly laid aside; but, reader! if you are a friend of justice, of bleeding, suffering, crushed humanity, let not, I implore you, the eventful scenes of this heart rending narrative be too soon obliterated from your memory; but let them be stamped on your heart in bold relief; let them be enshrined on your bosom's tablet, that to your children; and children's children, the story may be transmitted, as a warning to those who live on secluded islands, and as an affectionate memento of our warm-hearted heroine—the generous SALLY SLACO the unfortunate victim—of the DESPERADO OF CAT ISLAND!!

THE END.

The Holland Custom of placing looking glasses ontside the windows so as to see who is passing the street without the observer being seen, has been introduced in our city at the New York Hotel, and also at the Irving House. It is a much more modest way of gratifying [illegible] hotel stoop, and with eye glass impertinently scanning passers by.—[N. Y. Sun,

It would no doubt exert a moral influence upon the inner world of Gotham, as upon some other cities we wot of, if the looking glasses were so arranged that people in the streets could see what was going on in their houses.

THE RASCAL.—A London cockney has lately definned love to be "an insane desire to pay a young woman's board."

HARD LUCK FOR CALIFORNIANS.—A correspondent of the London Mining Journal declares that he has found out a process, by which he can change any quantity of iron into gold. Before three months are over he says, we shall hear more of this marvel. He promises to produce gold in tons—in short, in any quantity.

A Washingtonian says that while in the habit of drinking to excess, he could never persuade himself, when intoxicated, of the reality of his situation, until one night he found himself endeavoring to light his cigar in the moonlight, as it streamed through the key hole.

The very latest case of "ruined modesty" that we have seen an account of in the papers, is that of a lady who went into "conniption fits" on being told that male and female strawberries frequently occupied the same bed!

A still later case is that of a lady in this city, who "wont venture out any more, because the auctioneers sell naked horses in the street!"—[Quincy Herald.

The Yankee's Fox Skin.

BY YANKEE HILL.

"Mornin,' Squire! said" "down east," giving a nod and a wink to Lyman & Towle, as those gents stood in their store one morning, up and dressed, for business.

"How are you, sir?" said the merchants.

"Pooty well, con-siderin the state of things in ginerawl. I say, yeou buy skins here, don't yeou?"

"We do occasionally." was the response.

"Well, so I calkelated; buy Fox skins teou, I reckon?"

"Sometimes. Why, have you got some for sale?"

"Some. Yes, guess I hev one; It's some teou I tell yeou."

"Let's look at it," says one of the merchants. The owner of the skin tugged at the capacious pocket of his old yaller overcut, a few minutes, out came a pretty considerable, sizable bang-up of a venerable reynard.

"There it is, a perfect bewty it is too.—Ain't it?"

"Seen many finer ones," says Towle.

"Praps yeou hev and praps yeou hain't; but I deou think it's rael bewty, [illegible] and shiny as a bran new hat.

"When did you get this skin?" says the merchant.

"When did I git it?" Why when I killed the darn'd critter of cours.'

"Yes we know, but was it in the fall or summer, or when?"

"Oh! yes; well, I recokon, 'twant fur from Fourth of July, any way fur I'd jest clean'd my old shootin' piece, fur p'rade on the glorious anniversity, and along comes the old critter and I just giv him a rip in the gizzard, and settled his hash, mighty sudden I tell yeou."

"Fox skins," said the merchants, "are not very good in hot weather, the fur and hair is thin and not fit for much in summer."

"Well, neow I reckon, since I come to think it over, 'tworn't hot weather when I shot the critter; no, I'll be darn'd if it was; made a thunderin mistake 'beout that fur 'twas nigh on Christmas, was by jolly, fur I and Seth Peurkins wur goin to a frolic, I remember it like a book, cold as sixty, snowin awful, was, by ginger!"

"Well, said the merchant was the fox very fat?"

"Fa-t! Oh! Molly, warnt it fat? Never did see such a fat feller in all my beorn days. Why yeou, fa-t came clear through the critter's hide, run down his legs, till the very airth was greasy where the darn'd varmint crawled around. Did by Peurkins!"

"Too fat then, we guess to be good," said Towle. Fat skins, sir are not so good as those taken from an animal not more than ordinary fat."

"Well guess warnt so darn'd fat nuther; come to think about it, 'twas anuther fox our Siah shot last fall; this old critter warn't so darn'd fat, not overly fat, fact I guess, it was ruther poor; kind of [illegible] survavation; nivver did see [illegible] darn'd animal starved, lean, lank, famished live critter, on the Lord's airth before!"

"Very poor, eh?" says Lyman.

"Very poor? I guess it was; so almighty poor that the old critter's bones stuck clean eout, almost threoug the skin, hadn't kill it jest when I did it would died afore it got ten rods further along. Fact! by Golly!"

"Ah! well." says the merchants, 'we see the skin is poor; the fur is thin and loose and would not suit us."

"Wunt suit yeou," says the yankee, folding up his versatile skin, 'I dunt kind o' like such dealings as that, no heow, and I'll be darn'd to darnation, ef yeou catch me tradin fox skins with yeou agin, there aint no lumber in the State of Maine."

And holder of the skins vamoused!—[Aurora Borealis.

I Wish I had a Wife.

By Jove, I throw myself away,
And linger on from day to day,
And find no joys in life,
I'm all alone, without a friend,
No one my trouserloons to mend,
I wish I had a wife.

So heavily my hours do roll,
They almost crush my sickly soul,
My days with ills are rife.
My coat is minus, short a skirt,
I have no buttons on my shirt—
Where can I get a wife?

Some scape-grace, a few days ago, stole every shirt but one, from a "jour" printer in the Keokuk Dispatch office. The scamp that would steal from a printer, wouldn't scruple to do anything else. By the way, it doesn't appear yet how typo came by more than one shirt?—[Quincy Herald.

PRETTY GOOD.—Somebody has perpetrated the following, which is pretty good in its [illegible] dent, that all men are endowed with inalienable rights,"—except poor men.— All men who do not pay their honest debts are great scamps—except those who cheat on a large scale. "All men are born free and equal,"—except negroes. All men are sinners—except those who belong to the church. All men are allowed to think and act freely—except those who work for a living.

Among the eminent travellers who are proceeding to California, is James Arago, a brother of the astronomer, and a blind man. He has a large fortune in France, but goes out to ascertain the physical character of the country.

DEFENCE OF ROMPS.—Never find fault with girls, young girls in particular, if they are decided romps; but be thankful that they have the health and spirits necessary for romping. Better a romp than have a narrow chest, or a hectic flush on the cheek. Better wild as a hawk than tame as a dove. Better pay the butcher and the shoemaker than the physician and the undertaker.—[Chicago Journal.

The death of Mrs. Maria Smith, wife of the Hon. Truman Smith, U. S. Senator of Connecticut, is announced in the Philadelphia papers, as having occurred recently, at the residence of Charles Treichel, Esq. near that city. Mrs. S. had been long ill of a pulmonary affection.

The Montreal Riot.

Some additional particulars have been received by Telegraph. As soon as it was known, in the afternoon of the 25th, that the bill to indemnify the parties who had sustained losses consequent upon the means used for suppression of the rebellion, was among those sanctioned by Lord Elgin, the mob gathered round the Parliament House, awaiting the Governor General's exit therefrom in a state of intense excitement. His appearance was the signal for groans and hisses, speedily succeeded by still ruder demonstrations of disapprobation, in the shape of missiles of dirt, eggs, &c., which continued to pour upon the Governor's party, occasionally with effect, till they succeeded in getting beyond the reach of violence. Notwithstanding this experience of the temper and disposition of the people, no precautionary force appears to have been organized sufficiently effective to resist any subsequent turbulent movements. Every thing indicated that the excitement was increasing. Parties were hurrying to and fro, and gathering in crowds; inflammatory appeals were placarded in public places, and on carriages driven furiously through the streets, sum[illegible] in the Champ de Mars at night; and to increase the confusion, and still further to stimulate the madness of the multitude, the fire bells of the city were rung. The meeting assembled at eight in the evening. About two thousand were present. The speeches addressed to them, and the resolutions adopted, were characterized by intemperance and vindictiveness, and constituted a fitting preparation for the scenes of violence and disorder which they were to be called on to enact. Suddenly the cry arose, "To the Paliament Buildings," and with one simultaneous motion the rush took that direction. From two to three thousand men were permitted, without molestation, to attack the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled, break up the sitting, and burn down the halls of legislation, with all the rich treasures of literature and art, and with the colonial achives and records that had accumulated and been carefully preserved for a century. The military, it is said, were finally called out, but only in time to be, like the firemen, passive spectators of the conflagration.

Serious Riots—Parliament Building Burned—Arrest for high treason.

The Philadelphia North American of the 27th has the following more detailed account of the great riot at Montreal, briefly noticed under our telegraphic head of a recent date

MONTREAL, April 23.

The Governor came down to the Legislative Chamber yesterday, and gave the royal assent to the bill for indemnifying losses sustained during the rebellion. On leaving the Parliament House he was pelted by a [illegible] the Orangemen—and forced to re[illegible] last night while the assembly was engaged on the judiciary bill, loud shouts gave evidence that a riot was fomenting outside; and before a moment elapsed, a number of stones were thrown through the windows. The members rushed behind the speakers chair, while stones continued to be thrown incessantly.

A slight cessation occurring, several members entered the house from the lobby; but the rioters recommenced the attack from all sides, the house was again cleared—not one solitary member left—missiles still continuing to enter through the shattered windows.

At last a cry was raised from the library end of the building, "they come." Immediately after, about a dozen persons entered the assembly hall, armed with sticks. One walked up to Mr. Stevens, and seated himself in the speaker's chair.

Another looked around the hall, and muttered something about desolving Parliament. Others commenced destroying all before them. One of them visited the front row of members' benches on both sides of the House, striking all papers to the floor with sticks.

After him, another, more determined on destruction, tore the benches up, and jumping upon or breaking them. The splendid mace of the assembly caught the eye of one, who speedily marched off with it.

The Sergeant-at-arms, witnessed the daring act, and as the fellow passed out caught hold of the crown and nearly succeeded in rescuing it. Two or three of the party came to the rescue and struck at the sergeant with clubs and forced him to relinquish his hold.

Having destroyed as much as they could, they left the assembly hall. The members having entered from the rear of the speaker's [illegible] chair, the ministers contented themselves with [illegible] ertions of Guan and Robinson, the former of whom ejected a fellow in a blanket-coat, about to demolish the clerk's table, they would not have left a single piece of furniture.

One fellow had arrived with the rod of office of the sergeant-at-arms, and went striking at every article in the rear of the speaker. He was obliged to seek escape, as the house had been fired at the McGill street end, and the building was in flames. A cry was got up to save the library.

Sir Allen McNab used every exertion to effect this; but all seemed bent on making their escape from the fire. Sir Allen McNab and Mr. Badgley went to the library and attempted to save a few volumes, but were unable to get them out, and to save their lives were compelled to descend by means of a ladder.

The Parliament house and others are totally destroyed.

Many arrests have been made this morning, Sir George Moffat has been arrested, charged with high treason. To day all is quiet.

Out-breaks were occurring daily in which houses were mobed and burned, and large meetings were held, and resolutions passed which were characterized by intemperance and vindictiveness. Also resolutions were passed for the recall of Lord Elgin.—[Ed.

From the Republican's Telegraphic Dispatches.

MONTREAL, Saturday, April 28.

CANADIAN AFFAIRS.—The Government has armed five hundred Special Constables, but afterwards disbanded them, in consequence of their getting into a street fight with some English gentlemen, which caused a general out burst of indignation. Cannon were planted in the streets and the Garrison were under arms. Towards evening quiet was restored, but out-breaks are reported at Kingston and Toronto.

SOUTH CAROLINA "COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC SAFETY.—We learn, by the Columbia (S. C.) Telegraph, that the Disunionists of the Palmetto State, have formed a "Committee of Safety and Correspondence" throughout the commonwealth, to plot against the rights, liberties, and free institutions of the entire country. These local committees of the different Districts, are to meet in State Convention at the Capitol on the first Monday in May, for the purpose of perfecting a through organization to communicate their designs. These Safety Committees refuse to publish their proceedings, and the great mass of the Southern people are left in the dark as to their character. Some of the South Carolina papers state that they meditate on proposals of non-intercourse with the North.—[Ex.

FROM BUENOS AYRES.—Sailor on the Passengers—Arrest on Suspicion, &c.—The bark Tiberius, with dates from Buenos Ayres to the 17th of July, arrived at Boston on the 24th ult. She reports having left eighteen American sail of vessels in port. Exchange on the United States was worth 4 per cent; doubloons highest 3, 46, lowest 3 40.

By this arrival we learn the melancholy intelligence of the death, by starvation, of five of the passengers of the British brig Jane, while on her passage from Liverpool to Buenos Ayres.

The commander of the English steamer Gorgon had been arrested, charged with abstracting the mail while on its way to Valparaiso. The mail was found sunk by cannon balls.

The ship Mount Wollaston has arrived at New Bedford from the Sandwich Islands, and brings $20,000 in gold dust, the property of Mr. B. D. Washburn, a passenger, who obtained the same in one season at the dry diggings in California.

GEOLOGY AND MINERALOGY OF CALIFORNIA.—Up to this time, our means of information on these subjects have been extremely vague and scanty. With the exception of Mr. Dana, who, during the exploring expedition of 1841, passed along the valleys of the Tlamath and the Sacramento, and who has recently, in Silliman's Journal, published the notes of his observations, no voyager has attempted a systematic inquiry into the formations of California. And yet, from the multitudes of accounts we have, ther must be abundance there to stimulate and gratify the keenest as well as the most obtuse sense of scientific research.

But how they occur, to what extent they are reliable, and in what degree their probable avail will influence the existing commercial relations of the world, are points that yet wait to be ascertained and discussed. We are, therefore, especially gratified on being able to announce that one of our citizens, Mr. Philp T. Tyson, a naturalist of well known talent and learning, has just sailed from New York for San Francisco, via Chagres and Panama, in the view of devoting himself to a scientific exploration of Upper California. Mr. Tyson's remarkable accuracy as a mineralogist, fact in analytic chemistry, and practised skill as a geological observer, render his undertaking of the highest interest, and warrant us, if his life and health should be spared, in looking for results from researches, both reliable and profound.—[Sun.

FOR THE SALT LAKE.—John J. Intfeld, M. F. Tiernan, Wm. C. Brent, David Williamson, Sam'l. Loewi, and Joseph T. Intfeld, left on yesterday for the Salt Lake. These gentlemen take with them goods of different kinds, for the purpose of trading with the Mormons at that place. If the good wishes of a whole community can do these young gentlemen any good, we feel confident they will meet with abundant success. For ourself we hope to see them return to this place with an [illegible] fortune.—St. Joseph Gazette.

There are 3,000 artists, and students resident in Paris.

The St. Louis Republican says: General John Wilson arrived in that city on Sunday evening, April 29th. We have already announced the appointment of Gen. Wilson to be Indian Agent. He is now making his preparations to enter upon the duties assigned to him by the President, and will soon be on his way, with his family, to the seat of the agency. General Wilson, while his headquarters will be at the city of the Salt Lake, is also the agent of the Government for all the Indian tribes in California. In the performance of his duty, he will be authorized and required to visit all the Indian tribes in the territory, to gather statistics as to their population, resources, locality, &c., and generally such information as may be useful to the government, in the new relations which must grow up between them and their white neighbors. Such information will be of great service to the government, in future legislation over the territory which they may acquire from the Indians, if they have not already acquired jurisdiction by the treaty of peace with Mexico. The office is an important one, but it may be safely entrusted to the hands of Gen. Wilson.

The same gentleman is, we have understood, appointed Navy Agent at San Francisco, California.

From the Times and Seasons.

THE GOVERNMENT OF GOD.

The government of the Almighty, has always been very dissimilar to the government of men;-whether we refer to his religious government, or to the government of nations. The government of God has always tended to promote peace, unity, harmony, strength and happiness; while that of man has been productive of confusion, disorder, weakness and misery. The greatest acts of the mighty men have been depopulate nations, and to overthrow kingdoms; and whilst they have exalted themselves and become glorious, it has been at the expense of the lives of the innocent—the blood of the oppressed—the moans of the widow, and the tears of the orphan. Egypt, Babylon, Greece, Persia, Carthage, Rome—each were raised to dignity amid the clash of arms, and the roar of war; and whilst their triumphant leaders led forth their victorious armies to glory and victory, their ears were saluted with the groans of the dying, and the misery and distress of the human family: before them the earth was a paradise, and behind them a desolate wilderness; their kingdoms were founded in carnage and bloodshed, and sustained by oppression, tyranny and despotism. The designs of God, on the other hand, have been to promote the universal good, of the universal world; to establish peace and good will among men; to promote the principles of eternal truth; to bring about a state of things that shall unite man to his fellow man—cause the world to "beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks"—make the nations of the earth dwell in peace; and to bring about the millenial glory—when "the earth shall yield its increase, resume its paradisean glory, and become as the garden of the Lord."

The great and wise of ancient days have failed in all their attempts to promote eternal power, peace, and happiness. Their nations have crumbled to pieces; their thrones have been cast down in their turn; and their cities, and their mightiest works of art, have been annihilated; or their dilapidated towers, or time worn monuments have left us but feeble traits of their former magnificence, and ancient grandeur. They proclaim aloud with a voice of thunder, those imperishable truths—that man's strength is weakness, his wisdom is folly, his glory is his shame.

Monarchical, aristocratic, and republican forms of government, of their various kinds and grades, have in their turn been raised to dignity and prostrated in the dust. The plans of the greatest politicians, the wisest senators, and most profound statesmen have been exploded; and the proceedings of the greatest chieftains, the bravest generals, and the wisest kings have fallen to the ground. Nation has succeded nation, and we have inherited nothing, but their folly. History records their puerile plans, their short lived sway, their feeble intellect, and their ignoble deeds.

Have we increased in knowledge or intelligence? where is there a man that can step forth and alter the destiny of nations, and promote the happiness of the world? Or where is there a kingdom or nation, that can promote the universal happiness of its own subjects, or even their general well being? Our nation, which possesses greater resources than any other, is rent from center to circumference, with party strife, political intrigue, and sectional interest; our counsellors are panic stuck, our legislators are astonished, and our senators are confounded; our merchants are paralized, our tradesmen are disheartened, our mechanics out of employ, our farmers distressed, and our poor crying for bread. Our banks are broken, our credit ruined, and our states overwhelmed in debt; yet we are, and have been in peace. What is the matter? Are we alone in this thing? Verily, no. With all our boasted we are better situated than any other nation. Let Egypt, Turkey, Spain, France, Italy, Portugal, Germany, England, China, and every other nation speak, and tell the tale of their trouble—their perplexity, and distress, and we should find that their cup was full, and that they were preparing to drink the dregs of sorrow. England, that boasts of her literature, her science, commerce, &c., has her hands reeking with the blood of the innocent, abroad; and she is saluted with the cries of the oppressed, at home. Chartism, O'Connelism, and Radicalism are gnawing her vitals at home; and Ireland, Scotland, Canada, and the East, are threatening her destruction abroad. France is rent to the core—intrigue, treachery, and treason lurk in the dark; and murder, and assassination stalk forth at noon-day. Turkey, once the glory of European nations, has been shorn of her strength—has dwindled into her dotage, and has been obliged to ask her allies to her tributary terms of peace: and Russia, and Egypt are each of them opening their jaws to devour her. Spain has been the theatre of bloodshed, of misery and woe, for years past. Syria is now convulsed with war and bloodshed. The great and powerful empire of China, which has for centuries resisted the attacks of barbarians, has become tributary to a foreign foe; her batteries thrown down; many of her cities destroyed, and her villages deserted. We might mention the Eastern rajahs; the miseries and oppressions of the Irish; the convulsed state of Central America; the situation of Texas and Mexico; the state of Greece, Switzerland, and Poland—nay, the world itself presents one great theatre of misery, woe, and "distress of nations with perplexity." All, all speak with a voice of hundreds, that man is not able to govern himself—to legislate for himself—to protect himself—to promote his good, nor the good of the world.

It has been the design of Jehovah, from the commencement of the world, and is his purpose now, to regulate the affairs of the world in his own time; to stand as head of the universe, and take the reigns of government into his own hand. When that is done judgment will be administered in righteousness, anarchy and confusion will be destroyed, and "nations will learn war no more." It is for want of this great governing principle that all this confusion has existed; "for it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps;" this we have fully shewn.

If there was anything great or good in the world it came from God. The construction of the first vessel was given to Noah by revelation. The design of the ark was given by God, "a pattern of heavenly things." The learning of the Egyptians, and their knowledge of astronomy was no doubt taught them by Abraham and Joseph, as their records testify who received it from the Lord. The art of working in brass, silver, gold, and precious stones, was taught by revelation in the wilderness. The architectural designs of the Temple at Jerusalem, together with its ornament and beauty was given of God. Wisdom to govern the house of Israel was given to Solomon, and to the judges of Israel; and if he had always been their king, and they subject to his mandate, and obedient to his laws, they would still have been a great and mighty people; the rulers of the universe—and the wonder of the world. If Nebuchadnezzar, or Darius, or Cyrus, or any other king possessed knowledge or power it was from the same source, as the scriptures abudantly testify. If then, God puts up one and sets down another at his pleasure—and made instruments of kings unknown to themselves to fulfill his prophecies, how much more was he able, if man would have been subject to his mandate, to regulate the affairs of this world, and promote peace and happiness among the human family.

The Lord has at various times commenced this kind of government, and tendered his services to the human family. He selected Enoch, whom he directed and gave his law unto and to the people who were with him; and when the world in general would not obey the commands of God, after walking with God, he translated Enoch and his church, and the priesthood or government of heaven, was taken away.

Abraham was guided in all his family affairs by the Lord; was told where to go and when to stop; was conversed with by angels and by the Lord; and prospered exceedingly in all that he put his hand unto; it was because he and his family obeyed the counsel of the Lord. When Egypt was under the superintendence of Joseph, it prospered, because he was taught of God; when they oppressed the Israelites destruction came upon them. When the children of Israel were chosen, with Moses at their head, they were to be a peculiar people, among whom God should place his name; their motto was "The Lord is our lawgiver; the Lord is our judge; the Lord is our king, and he shall reign over us." While in this state they might truly say, "happy is that people whose God is the Lord." Their government was a theocracy; they had God to make their laws, and men chosen by him to administer them; he was their God, and they were his people. Moses received the word of the Lord from God himself; he was the mouth of God to Aaron, and Aaron taught the people in both civil and ecclesiastical affairs; they were both one; there was no distinction; so will it be when the purposes of God shall be accomplished; when "The Lord shall be king over the whole earth" and "Jerusalem his throne." "The law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

This is the only thing that can bring about the "restitution of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world was"—"the dispensation of the fulness of times, when GOD shall gather together all things in one." Other attempts to promote universal peace and happiness in the human family have proven abortive; every effort has failed, every plan and design has fallen to the ground; it needs the wisdom of God, the intelligence of God, and the power of God to accomplish this. The world has had a fair trial for six thousand years; the Lord will try the seventh thousand himself; "he whose right it is, will possess the kingdom, and reign until he has put all things under his feet;" iniquity will hide its houry head, Satan will be bound, and the works of darkness destroyed; righteousness will be put to the line, and judgment to the plummet, and he that fears the Lord will alone be exalted, in that day." To bring about this state of things there must of necessity be great confusion among the nations of the earth; distress of nations with perplexity." Am I asked what is the cause of the present distress? I would answer: "Shall there be evil in a city and the Lord hath not done it," The earth is groaning under corruption, oppression, tyrranny and bloodshed; and God is coming out of his hiding place, as he said he would do, to vex the nations of the earth. Daniel, in his vision, saw convulsion upon convulsion; he "saw till thrones were cast down, and the ancient of days did sit; and one was brought before him like unto the Son of man! and all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, did serve and obey him." It is for us to be righteous that we may be wise and understand, for "none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." As a church, and a people speaks chooves us to be wise, and to seek to know the will of God, and then be willing to do it; for "blessed is he that heareth the word of the Lord and keepeth it," says the scriptures. "Watch and pray always," says our Savior, "that ye may be accounted worthy to escape the things that are coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of man." If Enoch, Abraham, Moses, the children of Israel, and all God's people were saved by keeping the commandments of God, we, if saved at all, shall be saved upon the same principle. As God governed Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, as families and the children of Israel as a nation, so we, as a church, must be under his guidance if we are prospered, preserved and sustained. Our only confidence can be in God; our only wisdom obtained from him; and he alone must be our protector and safeguard, spiritually and temporally, or we fall.

We have been chastened by the hand of God heretofore for not obeying his commands, although we never violated any human law, or transgressed any human precept; yet we have treated lightly his commands, and departed from his ordinances, and the Lord has chastened us sore, and we have felt his arm, and kissed the rod: let us be wise in time to come, and ever remember that "to obey is better than sacrifice; and to hearken than the fat of rams." The Lord has told us to build the temple, and the Nauvoo House, and that command is as binding upon us as any other; and that man who engages not in these things is as much a transgressor as though he broke any other command—he is not a doer of God's will, nor a fulfiller of his laws.

In regard to the building up of Zion it has to be done by the counsel of Jehovah; by the revelations of heaven, and we should feel to say "if the Lord go not with us, carry us not up hence." We would say to the saints that come here, we have laid the foundation for the gathering of God's people to this place, and expect that when the saints do come they will be under the counsel of those that God has appointed. The Twelve are set apart to counsel the saints pertaining to this matter; and we expect that those who come here will send before them their wise men according to revelation; or if not practicable, be subject to the counsel that God has given or they cannot receive an inheritance among the saints, or be considered as God's people; and they will be dealt with as transgressors of the laws of God; we are trying here to to gird up our loins, and purge from our midst the workers of iniquity; and we hope that when our brethren arrive from abroad, they will assist us to roll forth this good work, and to accomplish this great design; that "Zion may be built up in righteousness; and all nations flock to her standard;" that as God's people, under his direction, and obedient to his law, we may grow up in righteousness and truth; that when his purposes shall be accomplished, we may receive an inheritance among those that are sanctified.

Fine sense and exalted sense are not half so useful as common sense.

Who is the wisest man in the world? He that lays up his treasures in heaven; where rust does not corrupt, and thieves do not break through and steal.

Nauvoo Temple.

We stated in our last that the walls of this edifice had been purchased by Mons. Cabet for the use of his association of French Communists. We learn from a gentleman who resides in Nauvoo that Cabet paid $3,000 and the citizens $1,000 for the Temple and arsenal, together with about eleven acres of ground—the title being vested solely in Mons. Cabet. He has commenced rebuilding the Temple, and employs the labor of three hundred men upon the work. Much of the interest that has hitherto attached to this edifice will now be dissipated, for it will no longer wear the proud name of "TEMPLE," but in future it will be known as the "Monster Boarding House." The basement story is to be laid off into kitchens, the first floor will be converted into a dining room capable of accommodating a thousand persons, and the remainder of the building will be fitted up for school rooms, offices, and sleeping apartments for five hundred people. Sic transit gloria Templi!—[Oquawka Spectator.

Apple trees have been known to exist for centuries, and if we calculate the amount of fruit which a tree, two hundred years old, may be supposed to bear annually, we can but think with astonishment upon the prodigious fecundity of a single pippin, which would be sufficient to furnish the whole of Europe with fruit of that kind.

THE PLOUGH.—Its one share in the bank of earth is worth ten in the bank of paper.

Night of Martyrdom.

The following article, on the night of the Prophet's and Patriarch's Martyrdom, are inserted in order to perpetuate the memories of the "just," and render to the heavens a tribute of gratitude for their manifest interest in the tried condition of Saints on earth:

Twenty-seventh of June, 1844. Eventful period in the calender of the 19th century! That awful night!! I remember it well—I shall never forget it! Thousands and tens of thousands will never forget it! A solemn thrill—a melancholy awe comes o'er my spirit! The memorable scene is fresh before me! It requires no art of the pencil, no retrospection of history to portray it. The impression of the Almighty Spirit on that occasion will run parallel with eternity! The scene was not portrayed by earthquake, or thundrings and lightnings, and tempest; but the majesty and sovereignty of Jehovah was felt far more impressively in the still small voice of that significant hour, than the roaring of many waters; or the artillery of many thunders, when the spirit of Joseph was driven back to the bosom of God, by an ungrateful and blood-guilty world. There was an unspeakable something, a portentous significancy in the firmament and among the inhabitants of the earth. Multitudes felt the whisperings of woe and grief, and the forebodings of tribulation and sorow that they will never forget, though the tongue of man can never utter it. The Saints of God, whether near the scene of blood, or even a thousand miles distant, felt at the very moment the prophet lay in royal gore, that an awful deed was perpetrated. O, the repulsive chill! the melancholy vibrations of the very air, as the prince of darkness receded in hopeful triumph from the scene of slaughter! That night could not the Saints sleep, though uninformed by man of what had passed with the Seer and Patriarch, and far, far remote from the scene; yet to them sleep refused a visitation—the eyelids refused to close—the hearts of many sighed deeply in secret, and enquired why am I thus.

One of the Twelve Apostles, while traveling a hundred miles from the scene of assassination, and totally ignorant of what was done, was so unaccountably sad, and filled with such unspeakable anguish of heart without knowing the cause, that he was constrained to turn aside from the road and give utterance to his feelings in tears and supplications to God. Another Apostle, twelve hundred miles distant, while standing in Faneuil Hall, Boston, Massachusetts, with many others, was similarly affected, and obliged to turn aside to hide the big tears that gushed thick and long from his eyes. Another, president of the high priests, while in the distant state of Kentucky, in the solitude of midnight, being marvelously disquieted, God condescended to show him, in a vision, the mangled bodies of the two murdered worthies, all dripping in purple gore, who said to him, we are murdered by a faithless state and cruel mob.

Shall I attempt to describe the scene at Nauvoo on that memorable evening? If I could, surely you would weep, whatever may be your faith or scepticism, if the feelings of humanity are lodged in your bosom; all prejudice and mirth would slumber, till the eye of pity had bedewed the bier, and the heart had found relief in lamentation. Before another day dawned, the messenger bore the tidings into the afflicted city; the picquet guards of the city heard the whisper of murder in silent amazement, as the messenger passed into the city. There the pale muslin signal for gathering the troops hung its drooping folds from the temple spire (as if partaking of nature's sadness), and made tremulous utterance to the humble soldiery to muster immediately. As the dawn made the signal visible, and the base tone of the great drum confirmed the call, fathers, husbands, and minor sons all seized the broken fragment of a dodger, or a scanty bone, for the service that might be long and arduous before their return, or swallowed some thickened milk (as might be the case) and fled to the muster ground; the suspicious mother and children followed to the door and window, anxious to see the gathering host emerge from their watch-posts and firesides, where rest and food were scanted to the utmost endurance. The troops continued to arrive, and stood in martial order, with a compressed lip and a quick ear. They waited with deathly but composed silence, to hear the intelligence that mournful spirits had saddened their hearts with during the night. The speaker stood up in the midst, not of an uniform soldiery of hirelings, for they had no wages; their clothing was the workmanship of the diligent domestic—the product of wife and daughters' arduous toil; their rations were drawn from the precarious supplies, earned in the intervals between preaching to the states and nations of the earth, and watching against the intrusions and violence of mobs. The speaker announced the martyrdom of the Prophet and Patriarch, and paused under the heavy burden of the intelligence. ...

But here I must pause; my pen shall touch lightly, as it must feebly, that hallowed—that solemn and ever memorable hour! The towering indignation; the holy and immutable principle of retribution for crime that dwells eternally in the bosom of God, insensibly impelled the right hand almost to draw the glittering sword, and feel the sharpness of the bayonet's point and its fixedness to the musket's mouth. But the well planted principle of self-command, and also of observing the order of Heaven and the council of the priesthood, soon returned the deadly steel to the scabbard; and the victorious triumph of loyalty to God, in committing evil doers to him that judgeth righteously, and who hath said, "vengeance is mine and I will repay," prevailed over the billows of passion; and in the transit of a fleeting moment the holy serenity of the soldiery, depicted by an occasional tear, showed to angels and men, that the tempest of passion was hushed, and wholly under the control of the spirit of wisdom and of God. It was the most unearthly and morally sublime scene that I ever witnessed. Contemplate a city and community of 20,000 people, whose love for their leader, the Prophet of the Lord, was warm and abiding as the love of David and Jonathan, in an evil moment betrayed by a sovereign State! Under his instructions they had been taught the ways of truth and salvation---they had been gathered from remote parts, even distant islands and continents, that they might hear the word of the Lord from his lips; and build up a city where gambling, and lewdness, theft and drunkenness should have no admittance! And the life of Joseph was considered so necesary to the work of God and the welfare of the human family, that many thousands could readily have died in his stead, if that could have preserved his life. But the Governor of Illinois, the Commander-in-Chief of 80,000 organized militia, threatened the speedy demolition of the whole city of Nauvoo, if Joseph was not delivered up to him for trial on the antiquated charge of treason! He made the most solemn assurance, and pledged the sacred faith of the State, that he should be kept safe and unharmed until he could have a fair and impartial trial. But oh! the cruel perfidy of that modern Nero, the governor! and the bloody butchery of the soldiery (some of whom had been disbanded and others had not), that could deliberately murder innocent and helpless men, that had surrendered at discretion, after all the strongest assurances of protection! The soldiery in Nauvoo numbered near four thousand, while those in alliance with the bloody perpetrators in the country, were not more than one-half the number. They would have been an easy prey to the merited revenge of the outraged force at Nauvoo; but that force bore the outrages with coolness and wisdom that has never been equalled by uninspired men. They governed themselves under circumstances the most extraordinary, and hearkened calmly to the voice of wisdom, when their pain and grief were almost insupportable. The soldiery on the Temple square heard, but felt that there was no adequate victim for vengeance in the county, or even in the destruction of the whole State. Some, least tender in their hearts, found relief in tears. In the houses of the Saints, aside from the soldiery, females, less competent to bear the news than husband and fathers, in some instances lost their sanity of mind for a season; but as the sun arose and the people congregated on the green, after being exhorted to give their enemies into the hands of Him that judgeth righteously, tranquility and order ensued. But not so with the mob. During all the bloody night their houses were hastily deserted by men, women, and children. So great was the consternation and so precipitate the flight, that even females fled in their night-clothes, almost naked, and continued their flight amid imprecations and shrieks for the distance of even fifty miles, where, exhausted and frightened, they alarmed villages, and the city of Quincy to the ringing of bells, and the speedy gathering of every person that could bear arms for their defence; but no man pursued, though "the wicked fled."

Sermon Manufacture in England.

In England there are persons—generally deposed clergymen or superannuated schoolmasters—who make a business of writing sermons for ministers of the Episcopal Church, who thereby save themselves this labor and gain time for hunting, attending race courses, &c.—A good composer can command about five English shillings per sermon, and the Rector can well afford this, as his living comes, by thiths, out of the public. Some sermon makers earn about twenty or thirty pounds per year by the business. No matter what are their private doctrines or characters, be they infidels or knaves, if they can but write sermons conforming to the standard doctrines of the Church, and they are tolerable well written, so as to be read without difficulty, they are sure to find clerical purchasers. Rev. Dr. Trusler made quite a fortune a good many years ago by having a fac-simile of a sermon composed by him engraved on a copper plate from which he took a great many impressions and sold them all over the kingdom to clergymen who preached them to their congregations as their own.

The eccentric but pious Rev. Rowland Hill tells, in his Village Dialogues, (vol. II. p. 137,) a pretty anecdote illustrative of the danger of too many clergymen purchasing copies of the same sermon for delivery. It is as follows:

"An egregious blunder once happened even in the famous University of Cambridge at what is commonly called the Sound Church: Dr. Trusler has a notable sermon on these words, "See that ye fall not out by the way." And so it fell out that it was preached by different ministers, in the same Sound Church, three Sundays running. The clerk on the fourth Sunday admonished the preacher not to give them a fourth edition of "See that ye fall not in by the way," for that parish was all very peaceable.

The reply was, that he had no other in his pocket, so that the people must hear that or none. The reader would not dispute the probability of this anecdote if he knew after what sort of a fashion the Churches in and about the neighbornood of the English Universities are unfortunately served.

PROVERBS.—Three things are an abomination to the Saints: a slanderer, a tatler, and a hypocrite: but a drunkard, a thief, and gambler are a disgrace to themselves—and the whole too often end with murder.

Effects of Drunkenness.

The great Lord Chancellor Bacon's opinion of drunkenness was, that "All the crimes on earth do not destroy so many of the human race, nor alienate so much property as drunkenness."

Some go so far as to say there are no advantages to be obtained from drunkenness, but let such read the following twenty-one attainments which are the invariable offspring of that delectable practice, and say are they not advantages.

1. If you wish to render yourself unfit for rational enjoyments and rational intercourse; become a drunkard, and that will fully accomplish the end.

2. If you wish to become a fool, be a drunkard, for that will soon destroy your understanding.

3. If you wish your prospects in life to become dark and cloudy, be a drunkard, and they will become dark and cloudy enough.

4. If you would destroy your bodily health, be a drunkard, for drunkenness is the mother of vice.

5. If you would ruin your soul, be a drunkard, for the drunkard shall not enter the kingdom of heaven.

6. If you would be a suicide, be a drunkard, for thousands have brought themselves to a premature grave by drunkenness.

7. If you would expose your secrets, as well as your folly, be a drunkard; for they will run out as the brandy runs in.

8. If you are plagued with robust health and a strong bodily constitution, be a drunkard; and you will reduce both to debility and disease.

9. If you would get rid of your money and wealth without the trouble of knowing how, be a drunkard; and they will insensibly vanish from you.

10. If, when you are unable to labor, you would have no resource but that of a work house, be a drunkard; and you will be unable to provide any other.

11. If you are anxious to expel all harmony and happiness from your domestic circle, be a drunkard; and discord with all her train of evils will assuredly follow.

12. If you would always have yourself under public suspicion, be a drunkard; for little as you may think it, almost all agree that those who rob themselves and families would also rob another.

13. If you would be reduced to the necessity of shunning your creditors, be a drunkard; and you will have reason to skulk out of the public way and betake yourself to by-paths, or remain within doors.

14. If you would be a dead weight on the community, "a cumberer of the ground," be a drunkard; for that will render you useless, helpless, burdensome and expensive.

15. If you are fond of the amusement of court conscience, be a drunkard; and ten to one you shall be fully gratified.

16. If you would be a nuisance in society, be a drunkard; for the breath of the drunkard is like a pestilential vapor, his appearance slovenly, idiotic and ridiculous, and his example, in word or action, hateful and pernicious.

17. If you would be odious to your family and friends, be a drunkard; and you will certainly become so.

18. If you would be a pest to society, be a drunkard; and you will be avoided by every good and virtuous person as if tainted with some deadly infection.

19. If you dredd remonstrance, and if you feel a horror of being reclaimed, be a drunkard; and that will render you impervous to every salutary admonition.

20. If you would smash windows and lamps, break the peace of society, and your homes also—tumble under carts, off horses, off buildings, out of railroad cars, be locked up in the watch house, dungeons, &c., be a drunkard; and it is strange if you do not succeed.

21. Finally, if you are determined to be utterly destroyed in estate, body and soul, be a drunkard; and you will find that it is impossible to adopt a more effectual means to accomplish your end.—[Olive Leaf.

NOTHING IS LOST.—The drop that mingles with the flood—the sand dropped on the seashore—the word you have spoken, will not be lost. Each will have its influence and be felt, till time shall be no more. Have you ever thought of the effect that might be produced by a single word? Drop it pleasantly among a group, and it will make a dozen happy, to return to their homes and produce the same effect on a hundred, perhaps. A bad word may arouse the indignation of a whole neighborhood; It may spread like wild-fire, to produce disastrous effects. As no word is lost—be careful how you speak—speak right—speak kindly. The influence you may exert by a life of kindness, by words dropping among the young and the old, is incalculable. It will not cease when your bodies lie in the grave, but will be felt, wider and still wider, as year after year passes away. Who then, will not exert himself for the welfare of millions!—[Olive Branch.

CATERPILLARS.—An English agricultural paper gives the following method to destroy caterpillars, which was accidentally discovered, and is practised by a gardener near Glasgow.

A piece of woolen rag had been blown by the wind into a currant bush and when taken out was found to be covered by the leaf-devouring insect. Taking the hint, he immediately placed pieces of woolen cloth in every bush in his garden, and found the next day that the caterpillars had universally taken to them for shelter. In this way he destroys many thousands every morning.

Do not evil to get good by it, which never yet happened to any.

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY, BY
ORSON HYDE,.....Editor and Proprietor.
JOHN GOOCH, Jr.,....Printer.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1849.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

Brighamites and Hydeites.

We have been unwillingly forced to bestow a thought upon the above expressions, because there are some who have pretty freely made them: But where this language prevails the Spirit of the Lord does not. Who is Hyde or who is Brigham but your humble servants and brethren in Christ Jesus, our Lord? Those who are saved, are the disciples and followers of Christ. He is the Great Head of the church, and after his name are the sanctified called. Brigham is the man to receive the word of the Lord for the Saints—the legitimate channel through which it comes; and Hyde is the man to carry out that word according to his best ability. How many disciples has Christ in Pottawatmie county that will receive His word through this channel? Every one will do it.

But if any man is strenuous, contentious or zealous to show particular respect to Br. Brigham, or is jealous of his honor, (and every true friend of his ought to be) we hope they will manifest it in some way that will show and prove that their devotion to him is not in word only. We want such persons to come forward and raise a little cash to help liquidate some of the liabilities of the Presidency if they wish to manifest so much good feeling. If they will not do this, let them own the truth and shame the Devil once; that they care as little about Brigham as about any other man, and complain most loudly that he oppresses them. But because we have spoken boldly against certain crimes such as standing god father or sponsor for a bogus press, the half brothers, cousins, second cousins friends and familiar acquaintances wish to say or do something to grind us pretty hard because the sweep of our pen probably drew a right or an obtuse angle across some of their paths; and because we employed a man that could move in the elements of either fish or fowl to search out the hidden monster, disclose its actual being and whereabouts, they are greedy to ascribe to us the cruelty of the shark and the rapacity of the eagle. The former, relating to the discovery, we own to, but the latter we disclaim.

That we may not be misunderstood by reason of some who would seek occasion against us, we say again, that every person who can procure a proper outfit, according to the spirit and tenor of the late Epistle of the Presidency in the Valley, should by all means, repair there this season. This is the counsel,—it has been the counsel, and those who say to the contrary, say that which they know to be false, if they know anything about it.

Who is it that is up late and early to counsel, advise and help off the emigrants—to provide ways and means? Who is it that appears on the banks of the river to meet the emigrants that arrive on the boats amid cholera, death and mourning, to point out homes for the poor, &c. Who is it that helps provide for the widow and fatherless, who have been made so by the ravages of the cholera? Is it those who in their hearts and by the words of their mouth, have rejected the council and authorities here, who have placed their veto upon our military manœuvres last July—and reprobated our political course? No! No!! It is none of these. There are men, however, that bear the burdens of the whole, that are generally found where they are needed; and will not throw down their load though an enemy, with the smile of a friend, pierce them with a thorn. Through blindness, better men may sympathize with these spirits, but they will find ere long that their faith, spirit, and influence have run out in the same channel with their sympathy, and if they do not see it themselves, the people will tell them of it.

We are frequently asked if we are going to the Valley this year. We answer not, because we were appointed to stay here, and that appointment has not been revoked, but continued, as it will be seen in another place.

We like to stay here because we feel that we are doing more good here than we could do anywhere else. But when our superiors want us in another place, we think that we shall be as ready to obey as the man who declares himself to be a Brighamite. But while we do stay here, we are resolved to discharge our duty, the Lord being our helper, fearless of threats, regardless of fears or the petty whinings of such as stealthily and privately forward papers of complaint to the Presidency of the church in the Valley.

But we forbear; the weakness and folly of human nature is potent enough to resist the strongest reasons, and will only become wise by the things which it suffers. We ask the prayers of the upright that we may be able, like the tried anchor and iron cable, to hold the ship secure in the most violent storm.

Some few disaffected spirits that have little character to lose, and less that they hope or expect to gain, have tried to circulate a report that Bros. Geo. A Smith, Ezra T. Benson and ourself were divided in our feelings, views, and in our counsel, &c. These persons, let them be whomsoever they may, do not speak the truth, but do lie. But if they loved honest industry as well as they love a false heart and a mischief making tongue, they would do themselves and community some good.

In Saint Louis, this report was made by some persons that hoped, wished, and desired to create a division between us. But the seed fell on stony places, and it soon withered and died. Since we have been associated together, it is our pride and joy to say that not a discordant note or jarring string has ever trembled between us.

We have been one and united in every single movement and principle, and we only regret that Brothers Smith and Benson are going to leave us to emigrate to the Valley. The church here loses two wise and able counsellors, and none can feel their loss more sensibly than your humble servant that is destined to be left here; for he knows their worth better than any others. But the will of Heaven be done, and we will be content and do the best we can when they are gone.

A communication from Bros. Geo. A. Smith and E. T. Benson upon this subject will probably appear in our next.

To Our Patrons.

We began the publication of the Guardian under quite discouraging circumstances: or rather, our prospects for a sufficient support in our undertaking, were not very flattering. We are located far up the river in the north, where mails and steamboats "are few," and too often, "far between;" and to insure success, or a continuance of our business, we thought it best to begin with a semi-monthly paper at the rate of two dollars a year to subscribers. The test, trial or experiment has now been made, and the result has been more favorable than we confidently expected. We intend therefore, so soon as we can make the arrangement, and the regularity or uniformity of the mails will justify the move, to issue the Guardian weekly, making no difference in the terms of subscription.

Two dollars a year in advance for a semi-monthly paper is rather high we know; but two dollars a year for a weekly paper, situated as we are, is rather low, and we shall require our subscription list considerably enlarged to justify us in the undertaking. But we feel confident enough, from our past experience, to hazard the undertaking, and to issue the Guardian weekly at the same rate, just so soon as a good and sufficient mail is established between this and St. Joseph, on a scale large enough to carry off our papers.

If our friends have had to pay rather high for the Guardian in the start, they have the credit of helping us to get under headway in our business, for which we tender to them our hearty thanks; and as we intend to devote our personal attention and services to the Editorial department of this paper, sparing no pains to make it interesting to all classes, it is hoped that a liberal support will be given to this sentinel on the Western Frontier.

By the following letter from the Presidency of the Church, it will be seen that tithing, donations, &c., are desired in the Valley to build up the place, and to make such improvements as may be necessary. Any person that may be friendly disposed towards the Saints, who may have a heart and a purse to aid them in that lonely Valley to improve it, and to make it a desirable place, can forward to us their tithing, gifts, donations, &c., &c., for those purposes. This is the place to pay your tithing and to bring your gifts and offerings for the benefit of the church in the Valley. Elder Woodruff has a similar appointment in the Eastern States, and Elder Orson Pratt a similar one in England. We know of none others that have such an appointment on the East side of the Rocky mountains.

To all persons interested:

This letter certifies that Elder Orson Hyde is a duly appointed and authorized agent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to receive, solicit and gather tithing and donations in the United States, and he is hereby instructed to keep a detailed account of all such receipts, specifying the amount, name and residence of each individual making remittances, and forward the same to us by some faithful brother, or appropriate the same to our order. And should Elder Hyde leave the States, he is instructed, to countersign and transfer this letter to some faithful brother whom he shall select as agent in his stead, and this letter thus countersigned shall be good authority for said agent to transact the above business as though Elder Hyde had done it himself.

Given under our hands and seal at Great Salt Lake City, Great Basin, North America, this 9th day of April, 1849, for and in behalf of said Church.

{seal.}

BRIGHAM YOUNG.
HEBER C. KIMBALL.
WILLARD RICHARDS.
Presidency of said Church.

Appointments for two Days' Meetings.

In Kanesville and at Highland Grove on the first Saturday and Sunday in each month. On the second Saturday and Sunday in each month, at Council Point, Springville Branch and at Harris' Grove. On the 3d Saturday and Sunday at Carterville and at Rocky Ford. On the 4th Saturday and Sunday at the new Tabernacle on Big Pigeon and at Unionville Branch on Keg Creek.

These meetings will be conducted under the presidency of one or more of the following ministers: Joseph Young, Lyman Stoddard, Jerome M. Benson, Daniel D. Hunt, Lebbius T. Coons, and Charles M. Johnson.

Our Subscribers.

It will be borne in mind that this is the Eleventh number of the Guardian. The thirteenth number will close the first six months. Those subscribers whose subscription expires at that time, and wish to receive the paper will please signify it by forwarding to us their subscription for the next six months, or for a longer term if they wish. They can pay the money over to any of our agents, and we will be responsible for it: or they may forward it by mail, or by private conveyance at their own risk. We can only be responsible for the money that is actually received by us, or paid into the hands of our authorized agents whose names are constantly in the Guardian. For your own benefit and ours also, your early attention is respectfully invited to this subject.

Roads.

The Roads in Pottawatamie county are so completely blockaded by fences that there is hardly room enough left for a passage to Heaven. It is proposed that a committee of three persons be appointed, one from Carterville, one from Kanesville, and one from Big Pigeon, to examine and determine the most feasable route for a public road leading from the prairie south of Carterville through the latter place, passing through or near Kanesville and extending up the Tabernacle Hollow to Little and Big Pigeon. Joseph Kelley, of Carterville, Henry Miller, of Kanesville, and Alvah Benson of Big Pigeon are appointed that committee by a number of citizens from all these places. This is destined to be one of the great thoroughfares threw this county, and calls for energetic measures in relation to it; and this committee are the very men to enter into such measures; and after the work is done, the commissioners will probably sanction it. But it requires to be opened sooner than it can be done by petition. We expect that every public spirited man will be on hand, up and doing while it is called to-day.

Trading Point.—The Missouri has washed away rising one hundred yards of the banks at that place. And it is feared that the Point will be washed away entirely. They have been obliged to move many buildings back a considerable distance from the river

Weather.—The weather for the past two weeks has been pleasant with occasional showers. Crops look well.

We have lately received a letter or two asking us to explain certain objections brought up by Mr. Strang. We have not the time, the patience, nor the disposition to gratify Mr. Strang, nor any that may be willingly entangled by his wicked devices.

His mysterious plates were undoubtedly made of an old brass kettle—a long shanked auger used to bore slantingly under the roots of a tree—the dirt nicely removed, and the plates forced into the hole. Then an angel appears and tells him that the plates were there. He dreams it three nights in succession, perhaps,—then takes witnesses and goes and digs up the plates from their bed. This has been told us by those who know the history of that affair. But if Bro. S. Harris don,t believe this, let him follow Mr. Strang till he gets a phosphorus endowment, then he may, in the light which that will afford him, see that he has been a dupe to the craft of a wicked man.

If a man will be ignorant after Mr. Strang has been cut off from the church for many years,—his wicked schemes exposed and published to the four winds, they must remain ignorant. We have long since done our duty and the whole of it in relation to that affair; and we do not wish to defile our columns with it; and henceforth we shall take no notice of letters or communications upon that subject: for men that will be troubled by that imposter, have not enough of the spirit of the Lord to live with us, and they had better not undertake it. We have no time to explain Mr. Strangs objections, neither Satan's. The hail has not destroyed the wheat crop, but it will sweep away the refuge of all such lies.

When Peter was endeavoring to walk upon the waters, to meet his Master, and was about sinking, had his supplication been as long as the introduction to one of our modern prayers, before he got half through, he would have been fifty feet under water.

By a letter from Dr. Coulson, dated Fort Kearney, May 27th, we learn that upwards of 3000 wagons had then passed the fort destined for the Gold country. He says that the emigrants are selling off and throwing away on the road almost every thing that can be thought of to lighten their loads. He bought a set of Blacksmith's tools for about one-half what they would cost in St. Louis.

The Doctor says that there have been some cases of Cholera among the emigrants, and some deaths in sight of the Fort, but none at the Fort. From certain other reliable sources, we learn that some fifteen or twenty deaths have occurred among the Indians opposite us from cholera and small pox. We have heard of no cases of cholera or small pox on the northern, or Mormon route.

Who has force and enterprise enough to run a good four horse team weekly between this place and St. Joseph, Mo? The mail contract might be obtained in connection, which would do much towards suporting the line of public conveyance. When passengers cannot be had, load up with freight. It will always pay. The mail must be carried on wheels. There is too much to be packed on horseback.

We will puff and blow for any responsible man that will lead out in the enterprize. When we have seen passengers lying about, waiting for a chance to go below, we have been almost tempted to undertake it ourself. But we have about as many irons in the fire already as we can attend to. Come on now, ye business men that have a little capital, and start some good horse teams on this route. Look out and get the contract for carrying the mail also. This is a consideration that should not be forgotten.

Is there a man in our community by the name of Parker who married a lady by the name of Sally Beedle or Sally Bedell, formerly of Dutchess county, New York? If there is such a person or such persons, they may hear something to their advantage by calling at this office.

Death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.—It is five years ago to-day since the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the Prophet and Patriarch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by the hands of a wicked mob while they had the pledged faith of the State of Illinois for their protection. We publish an article on our first page in relation to their death which will be read with interest.

A Mistake.—The St. Louis Union says that "Lyman White the leader of the Mormons in the Valley had been repudiated." Lyman White never was in the Valley of the Salt Lake; but was located in Texas, and rejected by the Church here and also in the Valley of the Salt Lake, and another has been appointed in his place. His circular betrayed a spirit and principles that the Church here and in the Valley would not cherish.

Foreign News.—We give to our readers the news by the steamers in as condensed a form as possible. It will be read with deep interest by our friends in Pottawatamie.

The particular attention of our trading community who often go below to purchase various articles, is directed to Mr. Nuckols, of Linden, whose advertisement in this paper seems to hold out strong inducements. As you pass, you will do well to call on him and see. The heavy run of trade here, and the moderate prices at which goods have been sold in Kanesville, have combined to clear this part of the country of almost every kind of merchandise, particularly groceries. If about fifty tons of sugar and coffee were brought up here, it would meet with a pretty ready sale, besides our Yankee folks want a great deal of molasses, and plates to eat it on.

As Mr. Mulholland complains very much because a certain house and lot in this place, once his and John M. Beideman's, have, by some curious transfers, fallen into our hands; we propose in our next, to tell the whole story. We think it might be quite as well for Mr. Mulholland not to deal quite so liberally in bloody threats, for he does not always discover the real character of the man to whom he speaks. A man by the name of G—— will probably attend to his case quite as soon as he will be ready for it. If it is not the case, we are mistaken in the spirit of one of the parties.

Gen. Gaines.—The telegraph announces the death of Gen. Gaines after an illness of one hour and sixteen minutes. Supposed to be of cholera.

Kanesville Band.—The Kanesville Band gave a serenade to Br. Geo. A. Smith and Ezra T. Benson, on Friday evening last, on the occasion of their departure for the mountains.

River.—The river has been very high at this point the past week. It was higher than it has been since 1844. It is receding at this time. The water has destroyed crops and other property on the low bottoms.

New Orleans.—A great portion of the city was inundated at last accounts, by several large crevasses made in the Levee, occasioned by the high water of the Mississippi.

18 DAYS LATER FROM SALT LAKE.

Three men arrived here on Friday last from the Valley, bringing news from thence to the 6th of May. The health of the settlements was good—spring crops looked remarkably well. Winter wheat did not look quite so prosperous as could be desired, yet it looked very well. They had a fine rain all over the Valley on the 1st of May. Crickets were not one quarter so distructive as last year. They begin to learn how to manage them better. Many men would leave the Valley to go to dig gold in opposition to the counsel of the church. So great was their desire for gold that quite a company left the Valley to go after the god of this world. When they get it, look out for the moulton calf.

These three men were robbed by the Crow Indians of eight or ten horses, saddles, provisions, clothing guns and ammunition, and were turned loose on the prairie to eat grass or die. But they happened to be not so easily discouraged as some, and managed to get through. Dr. Burnhyson and his company may be looked for in about three days. Met 1st California emigrants at Fort Laramie on the 22d May. There health was good, and their teams in good condition.

First met the cholera at the South fork of the Platte. One company had lost 14 men and encamped and lying by in consequence of being disabled, and many were sick. From where they met the cholera they passed many fresh graves by the road side all the way to where the Independence road strikes the Council R., the road 12 miles east of Fort Kearney, formerly Fort Childs.

The troops under Cols. Loring and Backenstos were met at the South Fork of the Platte in good health and prosperous condition. Egan and his company with our express was met at the same place also; all well, and no accident had occurred on the road, and their teams were in fine condition.

A company set out to Fort Childs with Government cattle, and were robbed by the Indians of their clothing and provisions, but they saved their cattle.

They report a great number of emigrants returning on the Southern route, having seen the elephant at various points out on the Plains. Several fights had taken place among the emigrants. Some were split open with an axe, some cut and mangled with hatches—some shot dead and were left, while others shot back, and the balance shot ahead.

One lot of wagons was met, six abreast, about two thousands in number, all rushing and cracking to get the first chance through a certain pass. "Oh!" said a wag, on hearing that, "How I should hate to have been an off side ox in that crowd under the cut and sting of a darkey's cracker."

They report the number of wagons that had passed Fort Childs up to the 15th inst., to be 7436 and like the ice at the breaking up of the Missouri, still coming. In addition to this number large numbers were seen to pass up on the north side of the Plate on the Mormon route. The upper route emigrants had no cholera or sickness among them.

Gen. Wilson and suite were met 40 miles west of old Fort Kearney, on his way to the seat of his agency at Salt Lake—all well.

Grass abundant all the way. Plenty of rain in the mountains.

Lines on the death of Elder William Anderson, killed at the battle of Nauvoo, September 11, 1846.

See the battle now is raging.
Hear the heavy cannon's roar,'
See the wicked mob are waging
On the Saints their dreadful war.

Hear the helpless orphan's crying,
See the widows weep and mourn,
And the Saints in terror flying,
Driven from a peaceful home.

Foremost in the ranks of battle,
Fearlessly our brother stood,
Till the hand of cruel mobbers,
Forced his spirit back to God.

He has died a faithful martyr,
To the glorious cause of Christ,
And has gone to rest forever,
In the mansions of the blest.

Farewell brother we shall meet,
In the resurrection mourn,
With delight, and transport greet thee,
When thou shalt to earth return.

Clothed with God's celestial priesthood,
Thou has passed behind the veil,
Their to rest with all the martyrs,
Who for their religion fell

Farewell brother thou wert faithful.
For the Saints thy life was given,
And for thee, and all the martyrs,
Is laid up a crown in heaven.

Mountain Boat.—The Amelia passed this point on Sunday last, loaded with freight for the mountains.

Another Riot in New York.—They have had another serious riot occurred in New York, at the Astor House Place, occasioned by the appearance of Mr. Mcready on the stage. The troops were called out and fired several times upon the rioters who had assembled; and before it was entirely quelled they had to bring out the field pieces charged with grape The soldiers were pelted constantly by stones. There were between twenty and thirty killed and more than treble that number were wounded in the affray. At the latest accounts the riots had been quelled. Mr. McCready left the next morning for Boston. He was going to sail in the next steamer for his native country never to return again.

The Mayor had issued a proclamation and says that he should preserve the peace at all hazards.

Cholera.—We observe by the papers that the cholera is on the increase in St. Louis and at towns on the river. In St. Louis on June 8th there were reported thirty-four interments of which twenty were of cholera.

The Last Train.—The first wagons of this train commenced crossing the river to-day. There will be between 300 and 400 wagons going in this train.

Eecution at Boston.—Washington Goode, a colored man, and a native of Baltimore, was hung at Boston on Friday, for the murder of Thomas Harding. He made a desperate attempt the night previous to commit suicide by cutting the veins of his arm with glass, and swallowing tobacco and tarred rope. Goode was only twenty years of age, and was with Gen. Taylor through all the Florida war. He protested his innocence to the last. The Times says:

But very few colored persons were seen near the place of execution. In one case, a citizen, opposed to the execution, closed his place of business and placed a placard, saying: "No business to day—a brother to be hung."

No manner of speaking is so offensive as giving praise and closing it with an exception.

4TH OF JULY.

Our friends, Messrs Brim & Bishop, we learn are to prepare a dinner in or near the Tabernacle on the 4th July. Some speechification may be expected, and probably a little powder burned on the occasion. Our young folks and old ones likewise are respectfully invited to attend.

Dinner Tickets may be had at the Union Hotel at 50 cents each.

Every body that feels interested enough to turn out with axes—teams—wagons &c., on Saturday to prepare an arbor for the accommodation of the people on the 4th are requested to do so to a man.

In this extremely hot weather, hurried season of the year—in cholera times, one day only can be devoted to pleasure and recreation. Be moderate in your recreation—temperate in eating and drinking, preserve the spirit of the Lord in your hearts, and keep his fear before your eyes. Let it be your prayer that the day may bring a blessing to you and to the nation whose birth we celebrate. We hope the ice will not be forgotten.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Mr. Editor: Dear Sir—When leaving the Eastern States last spring, I was requested by several of my friends to write them from time to time, informing them of our progress, welfare, &c. And inasmuch as I have neglected it, owing to sickness and unavoidable causes, I take this method of informing them, which will answer for all who take the Guardian.

I left Philadelphia on the 12th day of April last for this place, with a company of about 70 souls—and arrived with my family and a portion of the company at Council Bluffs on the 12th of June. We all enjoyed good health until the 29th of May, when near Louisville, one of our number, Elder Malin, was attacked by the cholera, but by every attention being paid to him, he survived until we got to St. Louis, where he died. On our way from St. Louis for the Bluffs, the cholera commenced its ravages on the steamer Monroe. Among the first that were attacked were some of the Californians and officers of the boat—but its ravages were not confined to those only—shortly five or six of our friends were attacked, all proving fatal. When the boat reached Jefferson city she was obliged to lay up, and while there several more of our friends died, and out of thirty Californians only three escaped from the cholera. And to add to the horrid spectacle were the graves, side by side—beds and pillows half burned up—peices of tents, broken cups, bowls, pillows, matrasses, &c., lined as it were the banks of the river, near the boat; while blankets, mattrasses, beds, &c., on which the sick had died came floating down the river; while in town, nothing could be seen scarcely but carts and hearses loaded with rough coffins (chiefly). Physicians riding to and fro—citizens congregated together—some locking up their houses, and fleeing into the country, and fear and consternation depicted on every countenance, mingled with the groans of the sick and dying from the hotels, churches and houses, all added to the general and prevailing gloom. And up to the 13th, when the disease appeared to abate, no less than twenty of our company—all the Californians but three or four, besides those on board the boat—amounting in all to some sixty persons, had died.

I here insert the names as far as I could ascertain of those of our company that died:

Mr. W. Hand, wife and adopted child of New Haven, Conn.; Mrs. Hampton and child, Philadelphia; Br. Adams wife and two children, do.; Sister Hammar and child, do.; Br. Lamb, do.; Sister Batchelor, do.; Sister Eaby and child, Lancaster co., Pa.; Sisters Boswell, Granger, Brown, and Hodges, of St. Louis.

After May 13th the disease seemed to lose its malignity, and some few that were sick appeared to be recovering. On the 18th the balance were taken on the steamer Lightfoot, while on her way there were four or five more deaths occurred among Elder Scovill's company, which numbered about 130 Saints from England. Owing to the inability of the boat to stem the current of the river, it was with much difficulty we reached Iowa Point. Here the boat lay for several days unable to proceed. Capt. Brooks, (of whom I shall have something to say here after in another communication, whom I pronounce a base swindler—without any refinement,—more fit for a wood raft than Captain of a steamboat,) determined to drop down to Savannah Landing, and put all the passengers and their freight ashore which was carried into execution.

I feel thankful to our Heavenly Father for deliverance, for he has protected me and mine, and I give him all the glory.

The people of Jefferson city for the the most part were kind, and administered to our wants,—may the Lord reward those that kindly stepped forward to our aid, while the destroyer was laying us low, with disinterested motives.

It was thought the disease on board the Monroe was superinduced by the effects of the lead inhaled by the passengers from the newly painted Cabin: as the disease was chiefly confined to the Cabin passengers,—

Thus I have given you a brief account of our journey and I do not feel discouraged, but feel to persevere and go ahead. I expect to leave in a few days if the Lord will for the Salt Lake City—with my family in company with my brethen whom I love,—I would say to all the Eastern Saints let not the fear or dread of the destroyer deter you from gathering with the Saints, obtain the Crown, if you fall martyrs by the way—the road is narrow and straight, and perhaps it will grow narrower still.

W. I. APPLEBY.

Kanesville June 25th, 1849.

Emigrants for the Salt Lake should get over the Missouri at any point where they can, the lateness of the season and the danger of being caught in the snows of the mountains, should admonish every one to be awake, and ferry day and night.

We are not very good judges of the state of the market, but we hear that ink is at a stand, and "dander is riz."

The following are the names of the members of the Rollin Enterprise California company, which arrived here June 19th.

H. McGee, Thomas Kealy, Wm. Smith, Francis Brobks, Adna Lull, John Adams, H. M. Bell, O. P. Foster, Charles H. Erickson.

Counterfeit Five Franc Pieces have made their appearance in great abundance, in the city and vicinity of Keokuk, Iowa The Dispatch thinks they come from an agency well supplied with the article, and that the aid of one of the old fashioned vigilance committees may be required to find out the scoundrels.

Mortality of Emigrants on Steamboats.

A late number of the Memphis Eagle has an editorial upon the large number of emigrants who are dying on steamboats, which so fully coincides with our views on this subject, that we give it entire:

In the last three or four days but very few boats and yet an immense number of emigrants have passed this point bound north. The America reported 389; the Marshal Ney (we believe) 460; and the Winfield Scott, 400. In the last week, 2000 European emigrants have passed up the river. Every boat had them in droves of hundreds, crowded and penned up like cattle; and nearly every boat buries from 15 to 20 between this place and New Orleans. In every case cholera has had the credit of sweeping off the emigrants, and the whole country from New Orleans to Boston has been, or shortly will be filled with horrible reports of the ravages of cholera upon the Mississippi.

Now cholera, when it does come, is bad enough in its terrors and works. With no disease or epidemic is the scythe of death whetted more keenly. But we submit to the common sense of the public, if there is any necessity of attributing three or four hundred deaths which have taken place upon the river, between New Orleans and Memphis, in the last seven days, to Cholera, or to any contagious or epidemic disease. We submit it to common sense, if it is not wonderful that so few emigrants die, when one recollects the manner in which they are crowded and packed away behind the engines of a boat, in a limited space, some thirty by forty feet, where scarcely a breath of air can reach them over the hot boilers of the vessels. We have had the curiosity to visit the place in which deck passengers are packed, on some few of the boats touching at this point, and we can only express our extreme disgust at the manner in which the unfortunate emigrants are treated. We have done our share of the rough work in this world, and we do not think we are over nice in the matter of steamboats comfort or elegance; but we must say that both our heart and stomach have grown sick when we have stood in the close pen of some steamboats in which some hundreds of emigrants were miserably crowded together—the air rank and reeking with effluvium, and the sick gasping for fresh air, and trampled upon by the jostling throng. It is a mystery to us how the larger number of the emigrants thus crowded together, find room th sleep in; and it is a yet greater mystery to us how any of them survive such terrible and unwholesome confinement—men, women, boys, girls and even infants, heaped together in an uncomfortable and unhealthy 'litter.'

The whole system of transporting emigrants on the Mississippi river, as at present carried on, is an unmitigated and indefensible cruelty. It is almost as bad as that practiced in the Black Hole of Calcutta, and has not even the justification of revengeful war. It is based upon a spirit of sordid speculation, and should promptly and sternly meet with the interference of the laws. The officers of boats now receive deck passenger after deck passenger, looking always to the amount of passage money, and never once thinking of the cruel risk and waste of life which must ensue from an immensly over-crowded deck. The unfortunate emigrant, never having travelled upon our rivers, knows nothing of the probable number on board, nor of the serious inconveniences to be encountered. We say the law should and must sternly interfere to check this course of things, and to protect human life. At present steamboat competition is recklessly gambling with human life, and humanity demands the prohibitory action of the law. We know steamboat men well. They are as noble-hearted a class of men as there is in the world—as quick in generous, as lively in sympathetic impulses, when a case of distress is before them. But the fever of competition blinds them to the view of probable results; and they recklessly persue the practice of a criminal system, to which valuable lives are daily sacrificed. Through this system the banks of the Mississippi are being lined with graves. The poor emigrant, who comes tither to seek a home, fortune and happiness, escapes the dangers of the ocean only to risk desperately the noisome and deadly confinement of the after-deck of a Mississippi steamer. Lives are unnecessarily, wantonly sacrificed—families are broken up, and children orphaned in a strange land. This is all wrong—dreadfully wrong. The press should speak out, and, in the name of humanity check, by the operation of the laws, one of the most terrible and destructive practices that ever disgraced the commerce of a civilized people.

Russia.—We are apt to think Russia much stronger than it really is, owing to its immense standing army, which is 900,000 effective men. But these troops are scattered over every part of her vast empire; and she could not bring more than one-third of them to bear upon any point. France, single handed, is much more powerful than Russia, and is well able to prevent her encroaching upon the rest of Europe. Russia has got nothing behind her army, and no nation can accomplish anything in war at the present day, which relies solely upon a standing army. The strength of France consists in her National Guards,—the troops of which are nearly as well drilled as those of the line. Several times a year she has three or four millions of troops under arms, which could be brought into service in a few weeks. Russia does not dare to trust so many men with arms in their hands. Her troops are not better drilled than those of France or Germany.

During the past one hundred and fifty years, the Russians have made wonderful progress in agriculture, commerce, the arts, and every branch of civilization. Their court is the most splendid in the world. In illustration of the rudeness of manners in the time of the Empress Ann, it is related that in order to punish one of her courtiers, she had a nest built in the palace, where the unfortunate trangressor was obliged to sit for several days, and cackle like a goose.—[Dr. Baird.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1849.

☞ Notice.—All communications addressed to the Editor, must be post-paid to receive attention.

☞ Notice.—We should be glad to accommodate our friends with the GUARDIAN on time, but our circumstances require ready pay. We have established this rule as the one most likely to ensure the continuance of our paper. Let no one feel slighted therefore, if he does not receive his paper in due course, unless he has first deposited with us the amount of his subscription.

☞ Help the Cause.—If every subscriber for the GUARDIAN will make it his business to procure, at least, one more subscriber, he will confer a favor on us, and contribute to the advancement of the cause. If he can procure five, ten, or more new subscribers, the favor to us and the cause we advocate will be increased in like ratio. Will you undertake it? New subscribers can be furnished with back numbers if they wish.

Please Call at this Office.

Any person going from this section to St. Joseph, or to Fisga, Garden Grove, or to the Valley of the Mississippi by way of any of the above places, will do us a great favor by calling on us before they leave. If they could let us know a day or two before they leave, they would give us a little time to prepare as mail.

☞ Bank Notes Taken.—Current notes on all good and substantial banks of the United States, taken on subscription for the GUARDIAN. These nicely enclosed in letters addressed to us at Kanesville, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and post paid, will be most likely to reach us safely, and on receipt will be responded to forth-with. Also current notes on chartered banking-houses of good repute in Upper and Lower Canada, received on subscription at this office.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

We have taken some pains to prepare from the Foreign News brought by the steamer America, an account of the convulsions on the Eastern continent.

Ireland.—Duffy is set free. Ireland is quiet at present. Some of the Irish Journals speak loudly against the Government.

France.—It appears, from the accounts from Paris, that the Government have determined to send an army of 14,000 to Rome to assist the Pope. Gen. Oudinot to command.

The president of the Council says that care will be taken to secure a free and liberal Government to the Roman people.

The Cholera is largely on the increase in Paris, and up to the 19th there have been 1,762 cases, of which 1,022 had proved fatal.

Germany.—Germany is still in a state of great confusion.

The Prussian Government is said to have obtained the assent of the few small States, such as Hesse, Cassel, Brunswick and Vienna, to the assumption of the Imperial dignity by the King; but these are only a small part of the States of Germany.

Austria is of course violently opposed to a plan which would transfer the Imperial dignity from the House of Hapsburg to that of Brandenburg; and Bavaria, the third state in Germany by population and influence, is scarcely less so.

Also, France and Russia are strangely opposed to the change. All these difficulties might perhaps be got over if the smaller States of Germany were unanimous in favor of the union with Prussia. But this is not the fact.

Hanover, whose consent is necessary to the carrying out of the scheme, is not likely to give it.

Austria.—The relations of Austria are assuming a warlike appearance, and however desirous the German Court may be to keep on good terms with the Olmutz Cabinet, public opinion is too unanimous and strong in this case to allow of the popular demands being disregarded.

Denmark and Germany.—On the 8th the Danish Minister of War published the following order of the day:

"Kings and Sovereign are daily sending troops into the Duchies to second the efforts of the rebels against their legitimate Sovereigns. The contests which daily take place against superior forces produce only an effusion of blood without decisive results. The army will await until it will be possible to attack the enemy man to man."

The letters from Pesth and Vienna in the German papers confirm the accounts of the success of the Hungarians at Wistzen, and of the destruction which threatens the Imperial Army before Comorn.

It is stated in a letter from Vienna, of the 13th, that the bombarbment of Comorn had ceased, and that the Austrians intended to try and take it by famine.

A correspondent writes on the 5th from Cernowitz to the New Rhenish Gazette: "It is decided that 50,000 Russians shall occupy Gallicia. Baron de Kaunerstein is about to march into Hungary with twenty-five battalions, and artillery in proportion. The whole of Transylvania is barricaded. Bem has under his orders 100,000 men, 10,000 of whom belong to the Polish Legion, a legion of the students of Vienna and of proletaires. The Buckowine is expecting a new invasion of troops.

Northern Italy.—Genoa is restored to order, and with the promise of enjoying a tranquillity unknown here for many months past.

Gen. Haynau summoned Venice to surrender. In answer Manin sent him the decree of the assembly, that Venice would defend herself at all extremities. The rich have given eight millions to their country. Two considerable families have given all they possess to the State. The public service is provided for to December next.

Rome.—Letters from Rome state that 9,000 guns have been received, which have been manufactured in France for the Republican Government. By order of the Triumvirs, every citizen is bound to sell his arms to the government within four days. Count Codrouchi has been arrested at Rome. The buildings of the inquisition have been changed into lodgings for the poor. On the 2d about 1,800 Neapolitans, with half a battery, and protected by three gun-boats on Lake Frodi, attacked the fort of the Epitaffio, belonging to the Romans, but soon retired.

The Republican troops on the Neapolitan frontiers are to be concentrated at Terni, under the orders of Gen. Ferrari. They are said to amount to about 40,000 men.

Sicily.—On the 7th a Neapolitan squadron of 15 vessels appeared before Syracuse, summoning it to surrender which was done without firing a shot.

THE SACKING OF CATANIA.—Accounts from Catania state that on the morning of the 5th of April the Neapolitan squadron, consisting of 17 vessels, steamers, frigates and gun-boats, took up a position to bombard the City of Catania. The firing lasted all day with much damage to the city, and but little to the vessels. The following morning a simultaneous attack was made by sea and by land. The Swiss, to the number of 2,500 led the van, and were supported by two regiments of cavalry, and followed by an army of 16,000 men, with 40 pieces cannon. After a brief but obstinate resistance the Catanese were overpowered, and the troops of King Ferdinand entered the city, which then became the real field of battle. As the troops advanced the resistance became more obstinate. The assailants were fired on from windows, housetops and baricades.

On the 8th the greater part of the principal inhabitants and the garrison abandoned the city and fled to the mountains. Filangieri (the Neapolitan General) then gave up the city to sack and fire. At the latest accounts it was still in flames in many parts; while the soldiers were prowling about, plundering houses, violating women, and stabbing or shooting all who opposed them. The Morning Herald contains the following accounts of the events in Catania, from an eye-witness: "The Sicilians fought bravely and well all the night of Good Friday, till nine o'clock on Saturday morning. After the battle, we landed, and such a scene of carnage and cruelty I never witnessed. The dead and the dying were crowded on each other. The Neapolitans had buried their own dead, but in rushing through the streets, seemed to find a demoniac pleasure in mutilating the senseless clay around them.

I saw three soldiers strike their bayonets into a poor fellow breathing his last, and numberless were they who lay headless in the streets, the victims of more than canine ferocity.

The Sicilian dead lie unburied—the Neapolitans even kick them as the pass, plunge into the midst of the nearly deserted town, rob, plunder and destroy, and commit every possible atrocity on helpless innocence or decrepid old age.

The latest accounts from Palermo state that the courage of the inhabitants rises in proportion to the desperate character of their cause. It is a confirmed fact that ladies of all classes, including Princesses, Countesses, and other women of rank, have been working in the trenches and on the fortifications. The enthusiasm was of the most exalted nature, and each man and woman bore themselves as if the success of their cause depended upon a single arm.

Palmero was well supplied with efficient ordnance and excellent ammunition, and nil desperandum was their motto.

Denmark.—Accounts from Schleswig state that on the 13th the important entrenchments of the Duppler heights were stormed. The Danish superiority in weight of metal exposed the Germans to considerable loss. About 10 A. M., two columns of Bavarians and Saxons were formed to assault the heights. They moved rapidly and steadily up the steep and broken ascent, the summit of which was crowned with breastworks and cannon. Notwithstanding the incessant firing made lanes through their ranks, they carried their point.

The retreat of the Danes was effected in utter disorder. They and their conquerors rolled in one confused mass toward the bridge of boats which connects Alsen with the main. To prevent Alsen being carried also by storm the Danes fired upon their own troops. This occasioned the taking of a great number of prisoners by the victors, but added considerably to the loss by killed and wounded on both sides.

The combined German and Schleswig-Holstein troops did not exceed 45,000 men, and the Danes posted in the strong position on the Duppeler heights numbered 40,000.

Russia.—The Russians were armed with vigor. Their forces in the Danubian principalities amount to 97,000 men, and a Vienna journal says that the Russian Minister had demanded from the Porte that the period fixed for the evacuation of the principalities by the Russians, should be prolonged to the 1st of May.

India.—The bi-monthly mail has not brought intelligence of any great interest beyond the details of the victory gained by Lord Gough. On the 20th, Lord Gough's army, amounting to about 25,000 men, with 100 guns, advancing within four miles of the enemy, and encamped for the night. The Sikhs, in all numbering about 60,000—with 60 guns, of which 56 were eight-pounders and under, lay encamped around Goojerat, with their flanks well protected by deep water-courses.

On the morning of the 21st the British army moved out to the attack; its line extended about three miles in length; the object was to penetrate the Sikh center, and turn their position. The action began with a heavy cannonade, the infantry being kept out of the reach of the fire, our heavy eighteen-pounders speedily silenced the seven and eight pounders of the enemy, and all our artillery pushed on rapidly. The infantry then advanced, and drove the enemy before them, capturing all the villages between, and securing the town of Goojerat. The cavalry division was sent in pursuit, and continued to hang on the rear of the flying foe for ten miles from the field, when darkness prevented farther operations.

Of 60 guns brought into action that morning, 53 remained in our camp. The camp furniture and the baggage, and baggage-cattle, with an enormous amount of ammunition, fell into our hands. Chuttur Singh and Shere Singh are both reported as among the wounded! One of the sons of Dost Mahomed was also wounded, and fled with the remnant of his auxiliary forces across the Jehelum and toward Attock, while another son, who had invaded Bunnoo, has evacuated that Province, and returned to Peshawur. Our loss was 5 officers and 22 men killed, with 24 officers and 682 men wounded. That of the enemy must have been at least four times this number.

Turkey.—They are aiming and preparing for war—all Mussulmen liable for service are called upon to proceed to Constantinople within fourteen days.

ADDITIONAL AND IMPORTANT NEWS FROM EUROPE.

We select from the papers the following additional Foreign News brought by the Caledonia, Niagara and Europa.

Events on the continent of Europe threaten a protracted interruption to the peace of the world. Germany "shines o'er with civil swords," while Russia on the east, and France on the west, are operating to make "confusion worse confounded," by hostile intervention in favor of Austria and the the Pope.

Russia talks very loud of her powers and prowess. We clip the following item of her intentions from the steamer's news:

The Emperor of Russia has recognized the independence of the French Republic, and simultaneously therewith issued a mantfesto, announcing his determiuation to interfere in the Austrian and Hungarian quarrel. In this manifesto, he speaks of his "God-preserved nation," and in the name of "the Almighty leader of battles, and Lord of victories," commands his armies to move forward for the extinction of rebellion, and the destruction of audacious and evil-intentioned men,

There has already marched into Gallacia, en route for Hungary, to the assistance of the Austrians, 120,000 Russians with 350 cannon and 25,000 horse. Gen. Beru is well prepared to give them a warm reception in Transylvania, and there must be warm work before it is over.

The following shows the result of the battle in Austria between the Hungarians and Russians, we copy from the telegraphic dispatches the following intelligence.

The Constitutional Zeitung publishes the proclamation which N. Rossuth issued at Debraczin, in which he asserts that the Russians had been defeated by Gen. Beru. It is asserted that six thousand Russians surrendered themselves at Kraiveu, and above thirty thousand followed their example at Assa. Their arms, cannon, and horses fell into the hands of the Hungarians.

A rumor was current at Raab, that the Russians had entered Hungary, near Duhla, but suffered a total defeat from the troops of Deubeuski.

The news of the defeat of the Russians, by Beru, is confirmed, though we still want authentic details of that important action.

The London Times contains a confirmation of the victory gained by the Hungarians over the Russians, at Presburg.

Positive news was received of the surrender of Ofen, at the discretion of the Hungarians. The booty of the Hungarians consisted of a military chet, 20,000 muskets 10 batteries and communication, and 1,400 wagons.

The Duchie of Georgez addressed a communication to the Commander-in-Chief of the Austrians, calling upon him to treat the prisoners with humanity. The communication adds, "that all Hungarians found in arms against their countrymen will be put to death."

The following items show the prospects of the Old World in her tangled alliances. The clouds which overhang the destinies of their kingdoms look dark and gloomy. "Coming events cast their shadows before them." The whole of Europe is groaning under the stroke of either revolution, war or famine.

Ireland is quiet, but starvation and cholera are making their havoes among the poorer classes, and the dead are left unburied to be devoured by dogs and hogs.

France is at war in Italy—for the Pope—having for an avowed purpose of replacing him on the throne. The recent elections have resulted in favor of the Socialists and Red Republicans. They will muster about 240 members against 300.

The war between the Danes and the Prussians continued without any decisive result.

In the Roman States there has been no material change since the date of the previous advices. Neither the French or Neapolitans have as yet, entered Rome, and the Republican government succeeds in maintaining its ground at every point, against the combined forces of France, Naples and Spain.

In Germany, insurrections and commotion exist every where. The Hungarians, in their unequal contest with Austria and Russia, exhibited no want of courage, and are evidently preparing for a desperate struggle.

In Sicily the Neapolitan army has been again defeated, and, Sicily is in a state of insurrection.

Germany—There have been renewed disturbances in all parts of the country.

Rome.—Pope Pius the IX, on hearing of the resistance of the Romans to the French troops, is said to have declared that he would not return to Rome at such a price, and to have sent a message in consequence to the King of Naples and to Gen. Oudinot to induce them to retire.

The enthusiasm of the Romans, will cause a vast amount of blood-shed before they will be able to replace the Pope.

The following spirited remarks we find in the Boston Atlas of the 2d inst:

"The Springfield Republican has done good service in completely annihilating tht charges of dishonesty brought by certain Locofocos against Fitz Henry Warren, Esq. We have never known a more dastardly political persecution of an honorable man, or a more complete and triumphant defence. The vipers have gnawed a file this time."

The cut worm is committing fearful ravages among the corn crops in this county. Many fields are almost wholly destroyed.—[Missouri Statesman.

MINISTER FROM THE ROMAN REPUBLIC.—Felix Foresti, resident of New York city for apout 10 years, has just received the appointment of Minister for the Republic of Rome at the United States.

ARMY WORM.—The St. Joseph Adventure says: "These devouring insects have appeared in this (Buchanan) county in several places and have destroyed many wheat fields within a few days past.

We are informed by persons acquainted with the army worm that a farm may be protected from their ravages by plowing a deep furrow or trench, with steep sides, between the field and the worm as they approach; they will fall into the trench and may be easily destroyed by burning them with straw.

ORDINANCE DEPOT IN OREGON.—In an army order of the 16th instant, abolishing the ordnanee depots at Galveston and Point Isabel, and making necessary transfer of arms, munitions, officers, &c., the following occurs:

An ordnance depot will be established, under the direction of the commanding General of the Pacific Division, at some convenient point on the Columbia river in Oregon, which will be supplied with ordnance and stores, and placed in charge of an officer of the army, to be temporarily assigned to that duty by the commanding officer of the Pacific Division.

Appointment by the President.

Orlando Brown, of Kentucky, to be commissioner of Indian Affairs, from and after 30th June next, vice William Medill, removed.

A dispatch dated Boston June 9th says: A letter has just been received stating that the ship Florida, bound from New Orleans for California, was lost off the River La Platte. Two hundred and fifty passengers perished. Only four of the crew were saved,

We only make the following extracts from the very long speech made by Col. Benton at Jefferson City, appealing from the instructions of the recent State Legislature, to the people of Missouri.

"I therefore appeal from the instructions I have received, because they are in conflict with instructions already received and obeyed—because they did not emanate from any known desire, or understood will, of the people—because they contain unconstitutional expositions of the constitution which I am sworn to support—because they require me to promote disunion—because they pledge the State to co-operate with other States in eventual civil war—because they are copied from the resolutions hatched from great mischief, which I have a right to oppose, and did oppose in my place of Senator in the Senate of the United States, and which I cannot cease opposing without personal disgrace and official dereliction of public duty—and because I think it due to the people to give them an opportunity to consider of proceeding so gravely affected them, and on which they have not been consulted.

I appeal to the people—the whole body of the people. It is a question above party; and should be kept above it. I mean to keep it there.

The day of passing the resolutions was too late, for the purpose of instructing me how to vote at Washington. It was too late for that; but was early enough for the summer campaign at home; and, therefore, they were passed! and now I have them. I mean the ploters: and between them, and me, henceforth and forever, a high wall and a deep ditch! and no communion, no compromise, no caucus with them. Nor does it require any boldness, on my part, to give them defiance. There are only about a dozen of them—a baker's dozen perhaps—and half of them outside of the Legislature. Wo to judges if any such there are in this work!

"My opinions." They are wanted.—Heretofore the public acts of public men, have stood for their opinions; it has been only the new men unknown by their acts, that have been subjected by political catechism! Thirty years, almost, I have been in the Senate; and during that time have always been a voter, and often a speaker on this subject of slavery; and commenced with it in my own state. I was politically born out of a slave agitation—out of Missouri restriction controversy and have acted an open part on it from the time it began to the present day. My writings had some influence on the formation of the constitution of this State. They were pretty well known then, though forgotten now. They contributed to keep off restriction; and to insert the clause in the constitution for the sanction of slavery. I urged the putting it in constitution. for the express purpose of giving security to property, and preventing agitation. I wanted peace from the question at home, and contributed to provide for it, by contributing to put that clause in the constitution: and now it is hard that we should have an agitation imported, or transported upon us, to harrass us about slavery when we have taken such care to keep out of agitation. My votes in Congress have been consistent with my conduct at home—non-interference, no agitation—security to property—and tranquility to the people. In thirty years I have not given a vote that has been complained of. I have voted thirty years, avoiding all extremes, and giving satisfaction.

But you want public declarations of personal sentiments: very good: you shall have them. My personal sentiments then, are against the institution of slavery, and against its introduction into places in which it does not exist. If there was no slavery in Missouri to-day, I should oppose its coming in; if there was none in the U. States, I should oppose its coming into the United States: as there is none in New Mexico or California I am against sending it to these territories, and could not vote for such a measure:—a declaration which costs me but little, the whole dispute now being about the abstract right of carrying slaves there, without the exercise of the right. No one asks for a law for the exercise of the right, and cannot ask it in the face of the dogma which denies the power to grant it. States do as they please. These are not my principles; and they reduce the difference between Mr. Calhoun and myself to the difference between refusing, and not asking. And for this the Union is to be subverted!

JOSEPH, direct from the Eastern markets, the largest stock of dry goods, groceries; hardware; queensware; &c., ever brought to the West. Comprising French and English broadcloths, of every variety; plain and fancy cassimeres; sattinets; blankets; calicoes; domestics; boots and shoes; hats and caps; knives and forks; picks and shovels; tea; sugar; coffee; molasses; salt; spun cotton; dye stuffs; rope; castings, &c., &c.

We will have on hand in a few days a large and well assorted stock of

READY MADE CLOTHING,

Purchased by one of the proprietors, who by long experience, is well acquainted with the wants of the emigrant.

Your attention is also invited to a large lot of

DRY CLARIFED SUGAR,

Warranted to keep in any climate.

All persons who make this place their starting point, (and all who act wisely will do so for many reasons,) would find it much to their own interest to give us a call, before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident that they can find goods in our stock better suited to their wants and at lower prices than in any other House in Upper Missouri. As all persons procuring outfits, will necessarily remain in town a few days; we invite them to call and look at our goods as it will be a pleasure to us to show them. And they will have the non opportunity of judging for themselves. PERRYS & YOUNG.

POETRY.

SONG.

Sung at the Printers Festival in Boston.

TUNE—"Lovely Mae."

Let monarchs revel while they may,
And drain their goblets bright;
No hearts so free, or gay as we,
On this our festal night:
We need no regal pageant here,
No banners wreathed with fame—
For brighter far, our trophies are,
—Our history and name!

CHORUS.

Come, brothers—come!
And with us now rejoice;
For Right and Might have joined to-night,
In one harmonious voice!

Each Printer lives himself a King,
A monarch in his might,
And Throne and Crown must topple down,
When He is in the Right:
And o'er the world his banner wares,
Where Freedom's sung or told,
The PRINTED PAGE—The Truths of Age,
And glorious Songs of old!

High honor to the noble Art!
By far the brightest gem
That ever threw its lustrous hue
From Freedom's diadem!
E'en now it gleams the guiding star,
Far distant o'er the wave,
Where millions fight, to gain the right,
Of Freedom, or a grave!

Then, brothers, let our Daily Toil
Be sung in festal strains!
While bards shall sing, or weapons ring
On earth's wide battle-plains,
Or while one Tyrant's throne is left
For Truth to trample down,
Our mystic Art will bear its part
Of glory and renown!

Forgiveness.

"How beautifully
Falls from human lips that blessed word
Forgive! Forgiveness, 'tis an attribute
Of God—a sound that opens Heaven—
Renews on earth lost Eden's faded bloom,
And throws again hope's halycon halo o'er
The waste of life. Thrice happy he whose heart
Has been so school'd in the meek lessons of Humanity, that he can give it utterance—
It imparts celestial grandeur to the Human soul, and maketh man an angel—
It turns the roughness of the world aside
And fills the heart with joy."

MISCELLANY.

Taking the Starch Out of 'em.

A COLD WATER SKETCH.

A knot of idlers stood upon the end of a pier which ran out into the Hudson river, in one of the small towns near Albany a few days ago, amusing themselves with hurling stones into the broad stream, each vieing with his neighbor in the endeavor to pitch a missile at the furthest distance from the shore, when a tall, rugged Vermonter, direct from the Green Hills, suddenly made his appearance in their midst, and for a while remained a quiet observer of their movements.

He was a brawny, strong-looking Yankee, and was very decently clad. The efforts of the little party had been exhibited over and over again, when the stranger quietly picked up half a brick which lay near him, and giving it a jerk it fell into the water a long way beyond the line which had as yet been reached by the foremost of the crowd. At the conclusion of this feat, a loud "bravo!" went up from a half dozen voices around him.

It was a cold, clear day in October, and the men, determined not to be out-done, renewed their attempts; but the Vermonter without saying a syllable to any one, continued to pitch the pebbles far out into the stream, which seemed to annoy one of them in a green jacket, the apparent leader of the gang, who declared he wouldn't be beaten by a "feller right straight out o' the woods, no how;" and sidling up to the stranger, he determined to make his acquaintance.

"Where do you come from, neighbor?" inquired the other.

"Me! Wal, I hails from Vermont, jes' now, friend."

"Haint been in these parts long, I reckon."

"Wal—no. Not edzactly, yere—but up and daown, sorter."

"Yes—so I 'spposed."

"Yaas," continued the green 'un, carelessly, and seizing a big billet of wood, he twirled it over his head, and it landed several rods from the shore, in the water.

"You're a little strength in your arms, neighbor."

"Some 'pum'kins'—is them flippers, stranger. Up, in aour taown, more'n a munth ago, I driv them are knuckles rite strut thru a board more'n a ninch 'naff thick!"

"Haw—haw!" shouted his hearers, the man in the green jacket laughing loudest.

"May-be you don't b'lieve it."

"Not much," answered the crowd.

"We aint very green down herein York, we aint," said the fellow in the green jacket; "we've been about, you see."

"Wal, jes yeu look yere, friend," continued the Vermonter, in the most plausible manner; "up in our country, we've a purty big river, considerin'—Inyun River, it's called, and may be you've hearn on it—Wal, I hove a man clean across that river t'other day, and he came daown fair and square on t'other side!"

"Ha, ha, ha!" yelled his auditors.

"Wal, naow, yeu may laff, but I kin deu it agin."

"Do what?" said the green jacket, quickly.

"I kin take and heave yeu across that river yender, jest like open and shet!"

"Bet you ten dollars on it."

"Done!" said the yankee; and drawing forth a X (upon a broken down-east bank!) he covered the bragger's shin-plaster.

"Kin yeu swim, feller?"

"Like a duck," said green jacket—and without further parley, the Vermonter seized the knowing Yorker stoutly by the nap of the neck and the seat of his pants, jerked him from his foothold, and with an almost superhuman effort, dashed the bully heels over head, from the end of the dock—some ten yards out into the Hudson river.

A terrific shout rang through the crowd, as he floundered in the water, and, amidst the jeers and screams of his companions, the ducked bully put back to the shore and scrambled up to the bank, half frozen by this sudden and involuntary cold bath.

"I'll take the ten-spot, if you please," said the shivering loafer, advancing rapidly to the stakeholder. "You took us for green horns, eh? "We'll show you how we do things down here in York," and the fellow claimed the twenty dollars.

"Wal, I reck'n you wunt take no ten spots jes' yet, cap'n."

"Why, you've lost the bet."

"Not edzackly. I didn't calkilate on deuin it the fust time; but I tell yeu, I kin deu it," and again, in spite of the loafer's utmost efforts to escape him, he seized him by the scruff and the seat of his over-alls, and pitched him three yards further into the river than upon the first trial.

"Again the bully returned, amidst the shouts of his mates, who enjoyed the sport immensely.

"Third time never fails," said the Yankee, stripping of his coat; "I ken deu it, I tell ye."

"Hold on!" said the almost petrified victim—

"And I will deu it, ef I try to-morrow mornin'."

"I give it up!" shouted the sufferer, between his teeth, which now chattered like a mad badger's; "take the money."

The Vermonter very coolly pocketed the ten spot, and as he turned away, remarked:

"We aint much acquainted with you smart folks daoun here'n York, but we sometimes take the starch aout of 'em up our way, and p'raps you wunt try it on to strangers agen, I reck'n yeu wunt," he continued, and putting on a broad grin of good humor, he left the company to their reflections.—[Flag of our Union.

To Those Who Will Understand.

TO PAY, or NOT to pay! That is the question:
Whether 'tis noble in the man to suffer
The duns and black-lists of outrageous Editors,
Or take heels against a sea of debts,
And by absconding end them! To fly to Texas,
And by our flight to say we end the heart-ache—
The rude shocks from Sheriffs, which subscribers'
Poor flesh is heir to: 'tis a consummation
Devout'y to be wished. To ASQUATULATE—
Perchance be caught! ay, there's the rub!
For in the "GRIP" of law what griefs may come,
When we are shuffled into durance vile,
Must give us—FITS! There's the respect
Subscribers owe themselves, gone to pot!
But who would bear the warning paragraph,
The 'devil's' duns, the scorns of punctual men?
The insolence of Typos, and the spurns
That honest folks of such worthies take?
When he himself might his elopement make
Between two days? Who would pay the printer,
Then groan and sweat to get more funds,
But for the dread of something black hereafter
* * puzzles the will,
And makes us willing rather to FORK OVER,
Punctually year by year, in advance, at that,
Than to fly to dungeons that we know not of.

STRONG WIND.—A Western paper says that, in a late gale, the birds were seen hopping about the ground, with all their feathers blown off. We have heard of gales at sea where it required four men to hold the captain' whiskers on.

SPRING STYLE OF PANTALOONS.—The hue is a cross between that of pea-soup and dirty water, with a stray touch of the green scum of a frog pond; and the proud wearers go up and down Chesnut street, like so many bull frogs out on a pleasure excursion.

A wag says—"Transcendentalism is the spiritual cognoscence of physological irrefragibility, connected with conscientient redemption of incolumient spirituality and etheralised contention of subultory connection."

Some sentimental village loafer thus certifies to the intensity of his devotion to his true love:

"I sing her praise in poetry,
For her at morn and eve,
I cries whole pints of bitter tears.
And vipes them with my sleve."

The droll editor of the Yankee Blade thus transcendantly gives his reasons for not going to California:

"The reasons why we don't go to California are: firstly, we don' want to go; secondly, we can't go; thirdly, if we wanted to go we couldn't; fourthly, if we could go, we wouldn't; fifthly, we don't know the way; and sixthly, we are not going."

HOW TO CLEAN POTS AND BOILERS.—As soon as soups, boiled milk, gravies, &c. are taken out of your boilers, pour into them some hot water, which, even if you cannot then stop to clean them, will save a vast deal of time and trouble that must be spent if they are left to become cold, with the gravy, or whatever else, hardened on them.

HOW TO REMOVE INK SPOTS FROM LINEN.—Take a piece of tallow, melt it, and dip the spotted part of the linen therein. It may then be washed, and the spots will disappear, without injuring the linen.

HOW TO RESTORE COLORS TO CLOTH.—An ox gall, it is said, will set any color, in silk, cotton, or wool.

BUG POISON.—An ounce of quicksilver, beat up with the white of two eggs, and applied to the bedstead, with a feather, it is believed is the cleanest, safest, and surest bug remedy known.

HOW TO REMOVE WHITE SPOTS IN FURNITURE.—A warming pan or shovel of coals held over varnished furniture, it is stated, will take out white spots. The spots should be rubbed with flannel while the furniture is warm.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Lady Franklin's Letter to President Taylor.

BEDFORD-PLACE, LONDON, April 4, 1849.

SIR: I address myself to you as the head of a great nation, whose power to help me I cannot doubt, and in whose disposition to do so I have a confidence which I trust you will not deem presumptuous.

The name of my husband, Sir John Franklin, is probably not unknown to you. It is intimately connected with the northern part of that continent of which the American Republic forms so vast and conspicuous a portion. When I visited the United States, three years ago, among the many proofs I received of respect and courtesy, there was none which touched and even surprised me more than the appreciation every where expressed to me of his former services in geographical discovery, and the interest felt in the enterprise in which he was then known to be engaged.

The expedition fitted out by our Government for the discovery of the North-west Passage (that question which for 300 years has engaged the interest and baffled the energies of the man of science and the navigator) sailed under my husband's command in May, 1845. The two ships, "Erebus" and "Terror," containing 138 men (officers and crews,) and were victualed for three years. They were not expected home, unless success had early rewarded their efforts, or some casualty hastened their return, before the close of 1847; nor where any tidings expected from them in the interval. But when the Autumn of 1847 arrived, without any intelligence of the ships, the attention of Her Majesty's Government was directed to the necessity of searching for and conveying relief to them, in case of their being imprisoned in ice or wrecked, and in want of provisions and means of transport. For this purpose an expedition, in three divisions, was fitted out in the early part of last year, directed to three different quarters simultaneously, viz:

First, to that by which, in case of success, the ships would come out of the Polar Sea to the westward, (or Behring's Strait.)

Second, to that by which they entered on their course of discovery, on the eastern side, (or Davis's Strait.)

And, third, to an intervening portion of the Arctic shore, approachable by land from the Hudson Bay Company's settlements, on which it was supposed the crews, if obliged to abandon their ships, might be found.

This last division of the expedition was placed under the command of my husband's faithful friend, the companion of his former travels, Dr. Sir John Richardson, who landed at New-York in April of last year, and hastened to join his men and boats, which were already in advance toward the Arctic shore. Of this portion of the expedition I may briefly say, that the absence of any intelligence from Sir John Richardson, at this season, proves that he has been unsuccessful in the object of his search. The expedition intended for Behring's Strait has hitherto been a complete failure. It consisted of a single ship, the Plover, which, owing to her setting off too late and to her bad sailing properties, did not even approach her destination last year. The remaining and most important portion of the searching expedition consists of two ships, under the command of Sir James Ross, which sailed last May for Davis's Strait, but did not succeed, owing to the state of the ice, in getting into Lancaster Sound till the season for operations had nearly closed. These ships are now wintering in the ice, and a store-ship is about to be dispatched hence with provisions and fuel to enable them to stay out another year; but one of these vessels is, in a great degree, withdrawn from active search, by the necessity of watching at the entrance of Lancaster Sound for the arrival of intelligence and instructions from England by the whalers.

I have entered into these details with a view of proving that, though the British Government has not forgotten the duty it owes to the brave men whom it has sent on a perilous service, and has spent a very large sum in providing the means for their rescue, yet that, owing to various causes, the means actually in operation for this purpose are quite inadequate to meet the extreme exigency of the case; for it must be remembered that the missing ships were victualed for three years only, and that nearly four years have now elapsed, so that the survivors of so many winters in the ice must be at the last extremity; and also it must be borne in mind that the channels by which the ships may have attempted to force a passage to the west-ward, or which they may have been compelled by adverse cirumstances to take, are very numerous and complicated, and that one or two ships cannot possibly, in the course of the next short Summer, explore them all

The Board of Admiralty, under a conviction of this fact, has been induced to offer a reward of £20,000 sterling to any ship or ships of any country, or to any exploring party whatever, which shall render efficient assistance to the missing ships, or their crews, or to any portion of them. This announcement, which, even if the sum had been doubled or trebled, would have met with public approbation, comes, however, too late for our whalers, which had unfortunately sailed before it was issued, and which, even if the news should overtake them at their fishing-grounds, are totally unfitted for any prolonged adventure, having only a few months provisions on board and no additonal clothing. To the American whalers, both in the Atlantic and Pacific, I look with more hope as competitors for the prize, being well aware of their numbers and strength, their thorough equipment, and the bold spirit of enterprise which animates their crews. But I venture to look even beyond these. I am not without hope that you will deem it not unworthy of a great and kindred nation to take up the cause of humanity, which I plead in a national spirit, and thus generously make it your own.

I must here in gratitude adduce the example of the Imperial Russian Government, which, as I am led to hope by his excellency the Russian Ambassador in London, who forwarded a memorial on the subject, will send out exploring parties this summer from the Asiatic side of Behring's Strait, northward in search of the lost vessels. It would be a noble spectacle to the world if three great nations, possessed of the widest empires on the face of the globe, were thus to unite their efforts in the truly Christain work of saving their perishing fellow men from destruction.

It is not for me to suggest the mode in which such benevolent efforts might best be made. I will only say, however, that if the conceptions of my own mind, to which I do not venture to give utterance, were realized, and that in the noble competition which followed American seamen had the good fortune to wrest from us the glory, as might be the case, of solving the problem of the unsound passage, or the still greater glory of saving our adventurous navigators from a lingering fate which the mind sickens to dwell on, though I should in either case regret that it was not my own brave countrymen in those seas whose devotion was thus rewarded, yet I should rejoice that it was to America we owed our restored happiness, and should be forever bound to her by ties of affectionate gratitude.

I am not without some misgivings while I thus address you. The intense anxieties of a wife and of a daughter may have led me to press too earnestly on your notice the trial under which we are suffering, (yet not we only but hundreds of others,) and to presume too much on the sympathy which we are assured is felt beyond the limits of our own land. Yet, if you deem this to be the case, you will still find, I am sure, even in that personal intensity of feeling, an excuse for the fearlessness with which I have thrown myself on your generosity, and will pardon the homage I thus pay to your own high character and to that of the people over whom you have the high distinction to preside.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JANE FRANKLIN.

To this letter Lady Franklin appends an explanatory notice of the plan of her husband's expedition, and of the routes taken by those who are in search of him—We have not space for it to-day, but give instead Mr. Clayton's answer to the application of Lady Franklin:

Department of State, Washington, April 25, 1849.

MADAM: Your letter to the President of the United States, dated April 4, 1849, has been received by him, and he has instructed me to make to you the following reply:

The appeal made, in the letter with which you have honored him, is such as would strongly enlist the sympathy of the Rulers and the People of any portion of the civilized world.

To the citizens of the United States, who share so largely in the emotions which agitate the public mind of your own country, the name of Sir John Franklin has been endeared by his heroic virtues, and the suffering and sacrifices which he has encountered for the benefit of mankind. The appeal of his Wife and Daughter in their distress has been borne across the waters, asking the assistance of a kindred people to save the brave men who embarked in his unfortunate expedition; and the people of the United States, who have watched with the deepest interest that hazardous enterprise, will now respond to that appeal by the expression of their united wishes that every proper effort may be made by this Government for the rescue of your husband and his companions.

To accomplish the object you have in view, the attention of American navigators, and especially of our whalers, will be immediately invoked. All the information in the possession of this Government, to enable them to aid in discovering the missing ships, relieving their crews, and restoring them to their families, shall be spread far and wide among our people; and all that the Executive Government of the United States, in the exercise of its constitutional powers, can effect to meet this requisition on American enterprise, skill and bravery, will be promptly undertaken.

The hearts of the American People will be deeply touched by your eloquent address to their Chief Magistrate, and they will join with you in an earnest prayer to Him whose spirit is on the waters that your husband and his companions may yet be restored to their country and their friends.

I have the honor to be your Ladyship's friend and obedient servant,

JOHN M. CLAYTON.

Lady Jane Franklin, Bedford-place, London.

SHOE PEGS.—The following sketch of a factory where 1,000 bushels of pegs are made annually, at Vienna Village, Kennebec county, is from the Maine Farmer:

The logs are sawed into blocks of a suitable length for the pegs, and the ends are planed smooth. Grooves are then cut on the ends of these blocks, crossing each other at right angles, and these form the points of the pegs. They are then separated by splitting the blocks—a knife being introduced between each row of points, corresponding with the grooving. All these operations are performed by the machinery with the utmost precision and celerity. The pegs are then bleached, dried and prepared for market. Mr. T. C. Norris, the proprietor of this factory, informed us that since September last he has sent 127 barrels of shoe pegs, and pins for cabinet work, to Manchester, England. He had further orders from the same place.

IMMENSE PIECE OF ARCHITECTURE.—The great ceiling of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, is just finished. Its span is 75 feet. The arch is turned with hollow tiles, which weighed 600 tons, 1,400 tons less than if it had been constructed of solid brick.

Depopulation of Prince Edward's Islands—Movements for California.

BOSTON, Thursday, May 10—P. M.

Halifax papers of the 5th have come to hand. They state that the inhabitans of Prince Edward's Island were building three vessels to convey a portion of them to Australia. Others will emigrate to Canada and the States. This depopulation is caused by dissatisfaction in regard to the tenure system.

Revolution and Bloodshed.

The political sky of Europe is by no means clearing up, if we may form a judgement on the prospects of that region from the accounts just received. Every movement that has been made since the previous advices, appears to have had a tendency to involve and complicate more deeply the tangled thread of continental politics. There is not a State of Central Europe that stands firm, and clearly understands its relations with the neighboring powers. The fear of change has fallen upon all, and coming events cast dark shadows of doubt and apprehension before them in every quarter.

The invasion of Italy by the French will strike every one as a criticle movement. The ostensible purpose is said to be the restoration of the Pope. We shall be much surprised if the avowed object turns out to be the real one. Neither the French government nor the French people care anything about the Pope. They would as soon undertake a crusade in behalf of the Cubo Sama of Japan as for Pius IX. The true motive of the intervention is pretty plainly indicated in the announcement of the Ministry, that it is necessary to maintain the legitimate influence which France has long possessed in Italy. In fact it could never be supposed that the French would sit still and see their old hereditary enemy, Austria, riding rough-shod overthe whole of Italy. That the French would march troops into this country we had not the smallest doubt from the beginning of the troubles there. But it will be a strange sight to see Republican France and Imperial Austria shoulder to shoulder putting down popular government in Italy. Both powers, doubtless, make professions of a desire to establish good governments in Rome and Tuscany. It will be somewhat difficult, we imagine, for them to agree how to settle the affairs of these two revolutionized States. Even should the present French government unite with Austria in the policy of crushing the rising spirit of liberalism in the peninsula, it is to be supposed that the French people will sustain them in the attempt? We hardly think the popular spirit has undergone such a change in France.

History has told ptetty much the same tale for centuries. France and Austria have seldom or never met in Italy but as enemies. France has always looked with suspicion and uneasiness at the progress of Austrian influence in that quarter; and the old rivalry and jealousies are by no means extinct. France, we think, is just now very little in the humor to indulge a romantic feeling of neighborly kindness by helping Austria to get rid of a troublesome customer. When she moves, it will be for something that will help herself. Whether putting down the Roman and Tuscan republics will help France is a problem for the Cabinet of Louis Napolcon. To the mass of the nation the matter will not be at all problematical. They did not elevate him to the head of the government to make war in support of legitimacy.—[Boston Courier, May 12th.

Facts in Physiology.

A man is larger in the morning than at night to the extent of half an inch, owing to the relaxation of the cartilages.—The human brain is the 28th of the body; but in the horse only the 400th. Ten days per annum is the average sickness of human life. About the age of 30, the lean man generally becomes fatter, and the fat man leaner. Ritcher enumerates 600 distinct species of diseases in the eye. The pulse of children is 180 in a minute; at puberty 80; and at 60 only 60. Dr. Letton ascirbed health and wealth to water, happiness to small bear, and diseases and crime to spirits.

Elephants live 200, 300, and even 400 years. Bats in India, are called flying foxes, and measures six feet from tip to tip of their wings.

Sheep, in wild pasture, practice self defence by an array, to which rams stand foremost in concert with ewes and lambs in the centre of a hollow square. Three Hudson's Bay dogs draw a sledge loaded with 300 lbs., fifteen miles in a day.—One pair of pigs will increase in six years 119, 160 taking the increase of fourteen times per annum. A pair of sheep in the same time would be but 64. A single house fly produces 30,087,327 eggs. The flea, grasshopper and locust jump 200 times their own length, equal to a quarter of a mile for a man.

Cultivation of Trees.

Few persons have a correct idea of the rapidity of the growth of well cultivated trees, and many are deterred from planting them, by the consideration, selfish at the best, that they shall not live to reap the fruits of their labors.

Such persons may derive encouragement from the statement of a few facts. In the spring of 1836, I set out, in front of my office, in Chester, two elm-trees. They were then so small that I could easily carry them, with the full top upon my shoulder, and were, perhaps, two inches in diameter. I measured them carefully in the fall of 1847, and found them of equal size, and each measuring forty-five inches in circumference. They stand about eighteen feet apart, and some twelve feet from the building, for which they form a perfect protection from the summer's sun, their branches being already interlaced. The elm is in that neighborhood of more rapid growth than the rock maple, or indeed more than any other forest tree.

An apple orchard may be brought to commence bearing in four years from transplanting from the nursery, which should be the second or third year from the time of budding. By the eighth or tenth year, your orchard, well managed, will pay you annually for all your trouble and expense in planting it, and will continue productive as long as you have any right to expect to live Peach-trees usually bear the third year from the stone, and the second year from the bud.—[Hill's Monthly Visitor

"My dear madam," said a doctor to his patient, "I am truly gratified to see you yet in life. At my last visit yesterday, you know I told you had but six hours to live." "Yes, doctor, you did, but I did not take the dose you left for me."

PRIESTCRAFT IN DANGER.

A DRAMA.

BY WILLIAM M'GHIE.

ACT I. SCENE I.—Lord Aimwell's Castle.—Dr. Clamour, sitting in the Breakfast Parlor.—Enter Lord Aimwell.

Lord Aimwell.—Good morning, my dear Doctor, I am delighted to see you; but I confess I am as much surprised as delighted. You said on parting, last night, that our breakfast hour would interfere with your Sabbath duties, in the performance of which, you said you were very punctual, and therefore we would not be favored with your company this morning.

Doctor Clamour.—Oh! my lord, you'll not have heard; she's not well.

L. A.—Who's not well? you perplex me. You're not married—you have no sister. Dear doctor, do tell me quickly, who's not well?

Dr. C.—The fact is, my lord, my congregation consists of my clerk, the sexton, and the sexton's wife; now the sexton's wife is a woman of delicate health, and when she cannot come out, we cannot muster the number required by the Rubric, and, of course, we have no sermon on those days. I walked over this morning, and found the good woman suffering from head-ache; and as I had breakfasted but slightly, I thought I might as well come back to your lordship's regular breakfast.

L. A.—(Musingly.)—I am sorry to confess I have hitherto bestowed too little consideration on matters of religion; your present explanation has opened to my mind a wide field for reflection. And this is our State Church! A church which costs the nation so many millions sterling a-year to support her! There must be something remarkably wrong, either in the system itself, or its workings. Dear doctor, do you believe a church like this worthy of a revolution and civil war every ten years?

Dr. C.—My lord, you astonish me! your words seem scarcely to betoken a true son of mother church. Worthy of a revolution and civil war every ten years! Between ourselves, what would become of the higher ranks of society without our State Church? If keeping the great mass of the people in subjection, and subservient to the will of a few, be worth anything—if keeping the aristocracy in quiet possession of all their posts, pensions, sinecures, and estates, be worth anything—if preserving "our glorious constitution," (the wonder and admiration of the world,) free from innovation, be worth anything—then not only every ten years, but every ten days, yea, every ten hours, she is worthy of such a contest as would sweep off our serfs by the thousand, and drench our nation in seas of blood, if necessary.

L. A.—(Aside.)—And this from a minister of the Gospel of Peace!—(To the doctor.)—But, doctor, you have left one consideration in the back ground, which, if brought forward, would tend mightily to strengthen your argument.

Dr. C.—What is it, my lord? what is it? if any point of importance has escaped my memory, do let me hear it?

L. A.—You have forgotten to include in your long list, the inexhaustible sinecures and emoluments of the clerical profession, by which priestcraft is supported, and of which you, yourself, are enjoying the sweet fruits.

Dr. C.—Thank you, my lord, thank you; I perceive you are perfectly able to do it for me.

L. A.—I beg your pardon, my dear doctor, I assure you, I have no wish to offend; my object is to illicit truth, come in what shape it may. I feel my need of enlightenment on such subjects; and, I confess, the remarks you have already made have struck me as being foreign from the sentiments which a minister of the Gospel of Peace should entertain. I love and venerate the religion of Jesus Christ; but surely it was never intended to be used as a cat's-paw in the hands of power for the enslavement of mankind! I love my Queen and country; and as I have been, I hope I shall still continue to be a useful subject, doing all my power to effect the perfect freedom, both in mind and body, of my countrymen. And I think that religion, instead of being set up as a barricade to hinder the emancipation of mankind, should be used as the only weapon to effect such a glorious object. But as we will be favored with your company throughout the whole of this day, I think we could not do better than pursue this interesting subject; in the mean time, as the family are stirring, we had better prepare for breakfast.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Liverpool Harbor.—H. C. Kimball, Solus.

And these are Britain's shores. And this is Liverpool. Here, in this busy harbor, are ships from every nation under heaven, importing and exporting merchandise of almost every description. Here, man from every corner of the world meets his brother man of different clime and color. And he who, by the most polished address, can best deceive and cheat his fellow, boasts of most civilization. Here 'midst this busy hum of trade and commerce, I stand a homeless, friendless stranger. Amongst all these living masses, moving to and fro, I recognize no friendly face to bid me welcome. I almost feel as if I were a being of another world. A being of another world did I say! It is true I am so in a certain sense, I am an ambassador from God to man. I am the bearer of a commission from him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords," to all the kings, governors, rulers and people of this lower world; and in obedience to this commission I am come to Britain. It is true I am a stranger and in poverty—what then; my master, who protected me, and paid my charges through the continent of America, and across the great waste of waters, will not desert me now; I have faith that he will not, and faith like mine must bring me meat, drink, and lodgings, and a rich harvest of souls into the bargain.

Enter G. D. Watt, walking musingly along, at last he casts his eyes on H. C. Kimball, and starts back in astonishment.

G. D. Watt.—Gracious heavens! 'tis he! 'tis the very identical person I saw in my vision of yesternight!—his countenance—his dress—his gait—all—all are the same! they are imprinted on my memory in such a manner that I cannot be mistaken, yes, sure enough—he is a stranger, and as such should claim the sympathy of every feeling heart. I'll speak to him forthwith.

(Addressing H. C. Kimball.)—Good morning, sir; you appear to be a stranger in these parts!

H. C. K.—Good morning, sir; that I am a stranger you may learn from the fact, that you're the first of British blood I've yet exchanged words with. And 'tis not many minutes since I first set foot on British ground. I have traveled many thousand miles by the command of God, to preach the gospel, and cry repentance to the inhabitants of this land; and thanks be to God, I am thus far in safety, though without money or friends.

G. D. Watt.—Without money you may be, but you have at least one friend you may rely on, sir; I love to deal plainly with all men, and, perhaps, you'll be surprised to learn, I left my home this morning purposely to meet you here. Last night my sleep went from me, and I lay musing on the signs of the times, when suddenly there shone a light around me, above the brightness of the sun, clear, pure and transparent; I marvelled at the sudden change, and looking around, I saw the figure of a man, advancing from the farthest corner of the room towards my bedside, I marked the figure well, and 'twas yourself, sir; every feature of your face is the same, and the very same dress from head to foot, I even marked your walk so well, I feel assured I could have known you by it. Advancing to my bedside, with mild benignity of countenance, you informed me of your present journey to this country, and that you would land in this harbor this morning, and requested me to meet you here about this time. You then smiled upon me with a smile so sweet, I think I feel its influence now, and turned and walked away. The light receded in the same degree, until I was left in total darkness. Wherefore I have not been disobedient to the heavenly vision, for such I feel assured it was; and now let us retire from the crowded bustle of this place, to the nearest house where we can procure refreshment, of which you must stand much in need, and I shall then learn in what manner I can best serve you.

H. C. K.—Blessed, for ever blessed, be our God, whose protecting power is so marvellously put forth in behalf of his servants! and may the choicest blessings of God rest upon you, whom he has so richly favored with a revelation of his will. I am ready to follow where you lead; let it be to some retired situation, where we can pour out our souls in thankfulness to God.

G. D. W.—Here, just at hand, is a temperance hotel, in which I am acquainted I perceive by the flag suspended over the door, there is a meeting of the order, but I doubt not we shall be accommodated with a private room. Let us enter.

H. C. K.—Stay; let us examine the inscription upon this flag.—(Reads.)—"TRUTH IS MIGHTY AND MUST PREVAIL." Why, my guardian angel, we are rich in omens of success this morning. Yes, blessed be God, truth is mighty and must prevail, until the false and rotten systems of men are crumbled into dust, and the kingdom of God is firmly established on their ruins. From henceforth I adopt this inscription as my motto, and under this auspicious flag let us enter, and mature our future plans.

SCENE III.—A beautiful Lawn in front of Tythington Manse.—Dr. Clamour, Solus.

'Tis strange, that while all nature's lulled in sweet repose, and not a breath of evil stirs the world, my couch I cannot keep. I'm likela demon—a haunted demon, who runs a race in reckless desperation, pursued by phantoms of his own creation. Reflect, I dare not; much I fear, reflection, instead of closing up these wounds already made would burst them up a-fresh, with force incurable. Something must be done, to soothe my feelings, and calm my troubled soul! What shall it be; shall I turn a traitor to the cause I have so long espoused, and boldly stand forth for the truth and God? Alas! I fear I cannot; already I am idolized as the champion of the church, and how should I darę to meet the censures of that body and the world! and, above all, how could I leave the titles, dignities, and wealth by which I am surrounded, and go forth like him I now impiously dare to call my master, without a place to lay my head?

Or, shall I still go on as I've begun, in spite of my convictions, to batter down all who come in opposition to the views of mother church.

Nay, even here I am not safe. A strange, restless, enquiring spirit begins to creep into the very highest of our aristocracy; and this spirit, aided by the light diffused from Mormon doctrines, spreading through the land, bids fair, at no distant date, to hurl about my ears that fabric I so fondly lean on, and with it, all my reputation and my wealth. When such men as Lord Aimwell begins to challenge priestcraft, and can so well define the uses that it is basely put to, then farewell to priestly honors. But I will—will—(Enter a boy with a packet.) What's this you've brought, my boy, something of importance, surely?

Boy.—Ant please your reverence you'll give me something for rising sae early.

Dr. C.—(Throwing down a penny.)—There's a penny for you, pick it up, and be gone.

Boy—(Looking disdainfully at the penny.)—Aye, Aye, i'ts nae lee to say, "As cauld's charity at a priest's door." Ye'll better pick it up yoursel, sir; it'll soon kittle anither in ye're black coat pouch. [Exit boy.

Dr. C.—Our order, once so venerated, is now of low repute, when boys like that can openly deride it. But now for the packet, we shall see what it contains. (Opens and reads.)

Rev. Sir,—We are truly sorry you were prevented by indisposition from attending our meeting last night. We hope you will quickly recover, and live long to aid our cause on the earth. I am requested to give you the particulars which transpired at said meeting. You are aware that our good bishop called a secret meeting of the clergy within his diocese, to concert such measures as would effectually put down that new set of impostors, risen up under the name of Mormons, who are at present committing such havoc amongst our congregations. There was a full attendance of our rev. ministers, and most alarming were the accounts brought in from all quarters, of the progress of the impostors. It is said, that one of their number, styled an Apostle, landed in England, and immediately commenced preaching and baptizing all who believed. And such miraculous power followed, that many, upon coming out of the water, commenced preaching likewise, by which means, they have spread over the land like an inundation. And what is more marvellous still, they say, that great signs follow the believer, insomuch that the blind see, the sick are healed, and the lame walk. Some of the clergy testified to several miracles of this kind, which came unner their own observation. We dare not enquire from whence cometh this power, but must just pronounce it from the devil. These doctrines, so destructive to our system, are spreading with such rapidity, that, in some instances, whole congregations, clerk, sexton, and all, have been taken from us; and it is evident, if we let them thus alone, all men will believe on them, and the craft from whence we obtain all our wealth will be destroyed. But, alas; the worst remains to be told. We could come to no certain conclusion as to what can be done. We much fear we have been too long in setting ourselves to work. Time was when we could have persecuted them, even to the death, but now, that cursed law, liberty of conscience, prevents us only in an underhanded way. Public discussion has been found to be rather injurious than otherwise. They are such profound scriptorians, and speak with such certainty and power, there is no coming against them with effect. There is but one method left us to attempt, and even that is doubtful. Their preachers are generally, with but few exceptions, low, ignorant, illiterate men, and such as are liable to the sneers of the learned. We can, on this score, hold them in derision, and never spare plenty of ridicule; raise the hue and cry of false prophets, impostors, deceivers of the people, &c., and hire such characters as are willing to annoy them in every possible way, and bring them into trouble with the authorities. By such means, we hope to keep, at least the respectable and wealthy portion of the community from joining them. We leave these hints for you to act upon as you see fit. We feel assured you will do all things for the best, the case is one of pressing urgency. We would only hint further, that you can, in your capacity of magistrate, do yourself ample justice when opportunity offers. No more from, dear sir, yours, &c.,

THEOPHILUS THUNDERCLOUD, A. M.

And can it be that matters are come to this, no use now in halting between two opinions. My mind is made up. From henceforth I am the bitter and determined enemy of Mormonism, and shall show Lord Aimwell, and the world, my bitter enmity to all delusion. (Tears the letter and stamps upon it.) Oh, that I had the power so to tear and stamp upon this most accursed sect. But no—let me go about the task in the true spirit of dissimulation. There's honest Saunders Snoddem, a true born Scot, and staunch supporter of the presbyterian order, to him will I go, and sound his feelings in a subtle way; I hope to gain his co-operation, and then for the campaign.

SCENE IV.—A neat rural Cottage.—Saunders Snoddem and his wife Janet in earnest conversation, the latter with a new Testament on her lap.

Saun.—It's a gay while sin the scriptures has gitten sic an o'erturn, as we hae gien them this morning. And now, Janet, sin we hae made up our mind to lea' the religion o' our forefathers and become saints by name, as weel as principle, we wad do weel to consider the effect it may hae on our wardly interests.

Janet.—It's weel upon threty years now, sin we first linked our fate thegether, and I think that's the daftest word I've heard you say in a' that time. We hae aye lean'd on religion for the love o' itsel, without letting our wardly interests rule the choice, and I hope we'll do that still.

Saun.—True enough, Janet, true enough, but an alteration o' circumstances whiles alters cases; our former form o' religion had aye a large share o' popularity, and being in fashion, it brought nae persecution after it, for ye ken, the devil aye likes his ain. But ye'll fin an act now lass, ye maun lay ye're accounts to hae ye're name cast out as evil, and a manner o' slanderous reports 'll be raised againsts us to the detriment o' our character; maybe, to the turning us out o' house and ha,' and the loss o' the wark that's gi'en us a comfortable bit o' bread.

Janet.—Weel, weel, this might a' be sae, though there's some o't no very likely. I dinna think his lordship (God bless 'im) has a paticle o' a persecuting spirit in 'im. He has been a kind master to us, and likes weel to reward industry, without asking what ye're religion is. It was but yesterday he came spanking in here, set himsel down at the fire, and cracked wi' me as if he had been ane o' ourscls. I did na think there was as mudkle guid sense in a' the nobility put thegither. I dinna ken what for, but my heart warms to him, and I dinna believe he wad be guilty o' a dirty action. But though the warst should come to the warst, tho' we should be turned into the wide warld to beg our bread, we wad be unworthy o' the name we're gaun to take on us, if we loot a thought o't come between us and our salvation.

Saun.—I dinna ken, Janet. I hope the best, but I think it right to fear the warst. And oh, its awful to think on the possibility o' turnin' back "like a dog to his vomit," or "like a sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire."

Janet.—I used aye to rejoice o'er the firm determination o' character ye used to evince on every occasion, and I think, as far as I ken mysel, ye hae nae right to fear flinching in me. We should aye mind that great scripture truth, "No man putting his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

Saun.—Janet, ye hae aye been dear to me, and mony happy days we've spent thegether; but never were ye as dear, and never was I as happy as at this moment. Yes, I fin now, that through the assistance o' the Holy Speerit, we'll come off victorious.—(Lobking through the window.)—But wha's this coming up the avenue at this early hour? as sure's am leevin, its his reverence, Dr. Clamour, and he's comin straight up to the door, I canna unerstan what he can be wantin we us.

Janet.—I'll lay my lug tae a bawbee, he'll hae heard ye were at the meetin yestreen, and he'll be comin up to joke ye about it. If he be, I wadna miss 'im.

Saun.—It's no likely that 'ill be his errand. But we'll see; whilst, he's at the door.

Enter Dr. Clamour.

Dr. C.—Peace be here this morning. I am afraid my early unusual visit has disturbed you in your devotional exercises.

Saun.—No a bit, sir, no a bit; our morning prayers have been offered up this hour and half back; and sin that, we have been instructing oursels frae the scripture in some o' the fundamental principles o' the religion o' Jesus.

Dr. C.—I am rejoiced to see you so usefully employed, especially in times like these, when doctrines so subversive of our holy religion are afloat in the world. You'll have heard of this new set of impostors, risen under the name of Mormons.

Saun.—Deed hae I, sir, deed hae I. We had a very stirring discourse frae a minister o' that body yestreen.

Dr. C.—Last night! and you heard them! You amaze me! Where was it?

Saun.—In Tythington, no that far awa.

Dr. C.—Indeed! and are they come under our very noses. I never heard of it till this moment. Now tell me seriously, Saunders, what did you think of the stuff you heard, you would no doubt think it very absurd.

Saun.—Weel, sir, as ye appear to be curious, ye's get it a' in few words. I had heard a heap about their delusion; and when I heard o' the meeting, I thought there was nae use in takin the thing second hand, I would just step o'er and hear for mysel.

Janet.—Ye'll do well to try that plan o't yersel, sir.

(To be continued.)

SMITHFIELD MARTYRS.—During a recent excavation near the market in Smithfield, England, about three feet below the surface the workmen came to a heap of blackened stones, covered with bones and ashes, partially consumed and charred. They are supposed to be the remains of martyrs.

The industrious are seldom criminal, but most of those who yield to guilty enticements, may trace their lapse from rectitude to habits of idleness

TRUE.—A contemporary justly observes: "Almost the very worst thing that can be said of a man is, that he has no enemies. Let any one undertake to speak the truth, but for a single day, and his enemies will multiply like the dew drops of the morning.

RETURN OF THE PIONEERS.

Lines with which Miss Eliza R. Snow, on her way from Winter Quarters to the Valley of the Salt Lake in company with a large number of emigrants, hailed the Pioneers on the Western Plains, as they met them returning home from their explorations, headed by Bro. Brigham Young, in the fall of 1847.

Hail, ye chosen men of Israel,
Who the hiding place have found;
The Eternal God has blessed you,
You have stood on holy ground.

CHORUS—Praise the Lord, we are glad to meet you,
Welcome, welcome, on the way;
Yes, O yes, with songs we greet you,
Pioneers of Latter Day.

A choice land, of old appointed,
For the house of Israel's rest,
You have found and consecrated—
Through your blessings we are blest.

CHORUS—Praise the Lord, &c.

Holy, free and unpolluted
Will that land for us remain;
While the sacred laws of Justice,
There the Saints of God maintain.

CHORUS—Praise the Lord, &c.

Go, return to winter quarters,
Go in peace and safety too—
Where the purest hearts are beating,
Warm with hopes of seeing you.

CHORUS—Praise the Lord, &c.

We will onward to the valley,
Speed your way, make haste and come;
That, ere long with joy and gladness,
We may bid you welcome home.

CHORUS—Praise the Lord, &c

The Supreme Power.

BY EDWARD EVERETT.

"It has been as beautifully as truly said, that the undevout astronomer is made." The same remark might with equal force and justice be applied to the undevout geologist. Of all the absurdities ever started, none more extravagant can be named, than that the grand and far-reaching researches and discoveries of geology are hostile to the spirit of religion. They seem to us, on the very contrary, to lead the inquirer, step by step, into the more immediate presence of that tremendous Power, which could alone produce and can alone account for the primitive convulsions of the globe, of which the proofs are graven in eternal characters, on the side of its bare and cold-piercing mountains, or are wrought into the very substance of the strata that compose its surface, and which are also day by day and hour by hour, at work, to feed the fires of the volcano, to pour forth its molten tides, or to compound the salubrious elements of the mineral fountains, which spring in a thousand valleys. In gazing at the starry heavens, all glorious as they are, we sink under the awe of their magnitude, the mystery of their secret and reciprocal influences, the bewildering conceptions of their distances. Sense and science are at war.

The sparkling gem that glitters on the brow of night, is converted by science into a mighty orb—the source of light and heat, the centre of attraction, the sun of a system like our own. The beautiful planet which lingers in the western sky, when the sun has gone down, or heralds the approach of morning—whose mild and lovely beams seem to shed a spirit of tranquility, not unmixed with sadness, nor far removed from devotion, the very heart of him who wanders forth in solitude to behold it—is, in the contemplation of science, a cloud-wrapt sphere; a world of rugged mountains and stormy deeps. We study, we reason, we calculate. We climb the giddy scaffold of induction up to the very stars. We borrow the wings of the boldest analysis and flee to the uppermost parts of creation, and then, shutting our eyes on the radiant points that twinkle in the vault of night, the well instructed mind sees opening before it in mental vision, the stupendous mechanism of the heavens. Its planets swell into worlds. Its crowded stars recede, expand, become central suns, and we hear the rush of the mighty orbs that circle round them.

The banks of Orion are loosed, and the sparkling rays which cross each other on his belt, are resolved into floods of light, streaming from system to system, across the illimitable pathway of the outer heavens. The conclusions which we reach are oppressively grand and sublime; the imagination sinks under them; the truth is too vast, too remote from the premises from which it is deducted; and man, poor frail man, sinks back to the earth, and sighs to worship again, with the innocence of a child or Chaldean shepherd, the quiet and beautiful stars, as he sees them in the simplicity of sense.

But in the province of geology, there are some subjects in which the senses seem, as it were, led up into the laboratory of divine power. Let a man fix his eyes upon one of the marble columns in the Capitol at Washington. He sees a condition of the earth's surface, when the pebbles of every size and form and material, which compose this singular species of stone, were held suspended in the medium in which they are imbedded, then a liquid sea of marble, which was hardened into the solid, lustrous, and variegated mass before his eye, in the very substance of which he beholds a record of a convulsion of the globe.

Let him go and stand upon the sides of the crater of Vesuvius, in the ordinary state of its eruptions, and contemplate the glazy stream of molten rocks, that oozes quietly at his feet, encasing the surface of the mountain as it cools with a most black and stygian crust, or lighting up its sides at night with streaks of lurid fire. Let him consider the volcanic island, which arose a few years since in the neighborhood of Malta, spouting flames from the depth of the sea; or accompany one of our own navigators from Nantucket to American ocean, who finding the centre of a small island, to which he was in the habit of resorting, sunk in the interval of two of his voyages, sailed through an opening in its sides where the ocean had found its way, and moored his ship in the smouldering crater of a recently extinguished volcano. Or finally, let him survey the striking phenomenon which our author has described, and which has led us to this train of remark, a mineral fountain of salubrious qualities, of a temperature greatly above that of the surface of the earth in the region where it is found, compounded with numerous ingredients in a constant proportion, and known to have been flowing from its secret springs, as at the present day, at least for eight hundred years, unchanged, unexhausted. The religions of the elder world in an early stage of civilization, placed a genius of a divinity by the side of every spring which gush from the rocks, or flowed from the bosom of the earth. Surely it would be no weaknes for a thoughtful man, who should resort for the renovation of a wasted frame, to one of those salubrious mineral fountains, if he drank in their healing waters a gift from the outstretched, though invisible hand, of an everywhere present and benignant Power.

The Mountain Standard.

BY P. P. PRATT.

Lo the gentile chain is broken;
Freedom's banner waves on high,
List ye nations! By this token,
Know that your Redeemer's nigh.

CHORUS: For we are the true born sons of Zion,
None with us who can compare;
We are the root and branch of Joseph,
The bright and the glorious morning star,
For we are the true born sons of Zion.

See, on yonder distant mountain,
Zion's Standard wide unfurled,
Far above Missouri's Fountain,
Lo! it waves for all the world.

CHORUS: For we are, &c.

Freedom, peace, and full salvation,
Are the blessings guaranteed;
Liberty to every nation,
Every tongue and every creed.

CHORUS: For we are, &c.

Come ye christain, sect, and Pagan,
Pope, and protestant, and priest,
Worshippers of God, or Dagon,
Come ye to fair freedom's feast.

CHORUS: For we are, &c.

Cease to butcher one another,
Join the covenant of peace,
Be to all a friend, a brother,
This will bring the world release.

CHORUS: For we are, &c.

Lo! our King! the great Messiah,
Prince of peace, shall come to reign,
Sound again ye heavenly choir,
Peace on earth, good will to men.

CHORUS: For we are, &c.

Mormon Proverbs.

The globe lamp, suspenped in the heavens is the best and cheapest light in the world.

A wise man will prefer it to any other; but a fool will sleep while the morning sun shines, and light a lamp when it goes down.

This is like cutting cloth from one end of a peace, and sewing it on the other to make it longer.

He that sleeps when the sun shines, and lights his lamp when it does not, despises the lamp of the Lord, and taxes his eyes and purse for nought.

Industry goes hand in hand with godliness. It is an honor to be an agriculturist, for such was our Father in heaven. He performed the first planting on this earth.

It is good also to be a tailor, for our father in heaven was the first tailor on this planet. He made coats for Adam and Eve, when they were young and inexperienced, and thus clothed them.

It is good also, to write, for our Father in heaven was a writer. He wrote with his own finger on the tables of stone.

To build ships, temples and houses, is also godliness, for God was a master workman in all these branches of industry. He gave the pattern of the first ship to Noah; and he was the architect of the tabernacle of Moses, and of the temple of Solomon.

A wise man will pattern after his order; but fools will erect synagogues after the imagination of their own heart.

Great is the mystery of iniquity, and error; but all truth is simple, and easy to be understood.

"Truth is a knowledge of things as they are and were, and are to come."

All truth is independent in its own sphere. Its laws are omnipotent, eternal, and unchangeable.

"Intelligence, or the light of truth never was created, neither indeed can be."

Truth is light—light is spirit—spirit is life. Truth, light, spirit, is the law of life and motion, by which all things are governed, and by which they move and have a being.

Truth will justify.

Truth will sanctify.

Truth will purify.

Truth will exalt man to the throne of heaven and crown him with eternal life and dominion in the presence of Jehovah.

The truth comes to man by means of high-intelligences; by the voice of God—by the ministering of angels, and by the Holy Spirit of prophecy and revelation.

In all your gettings, get truth, for this will give you everlasting life, and crown you with riches and honors, which shall never fade away.

A CORRECT IDEA OF LIBERTY.—Burke's idea of liberty. He says, "Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put chains upon their own appetites; in proportion as their love of justice is above their rapacity; in proportion as they are more disposed to listen to the counsels of the wise and good, in preference to the flattery of knaves. Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon the will and appetite is placed somewhere; and the less of it there is within, the more there must be of it without. It is ordained, in the eternal constitution of things, that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Passions forge their fetters.

The early hours of sleep are the most sweet and refreshing.

PUBLISHED SEMI MONTHLY, BY

ORSON HYDE.....Editor and Proprietor.

JOHN GOOCH, Jr.....Printer.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1849.

Wanted at this Office.

Corn, potatoes, corn-meal, flour, beans, beef, pork or bacon, butter eggs, chickens, pigs, mutton, lumber, oak or walnut wood, gold and silver coin or dust, and good bankable paper, and current paper if not bankable, will not be refused in exchange for the Guardian if brought soon.

Swindling.

A certain house and lot, in this town owned by James H. Mulholland and John M. Beideman were, by Mulholland, transferred to Doct. Hoyt—not for any valuable consideration as we have understood, yet a consideration was duly acknowledged, and also that the sale and transfer to Hoyt were acknowledged bona fide. We heard that Mulholland did this to cheat a creditor at Keokuk out of his just dues. The agent of this creditor, Mr. William O. Clark was here and ready to levy or seize upon the house and lot, or any thing else that belonged to Mulholland. Mr. Hickman said that Mulholland employed him to smuggle a few hundred dollars worth of goods from the Upper Ferry down to Kanesville to keep them out of the way of Clark, and agreed to pay him fifty dollars for his services. Hickman undertook the job and was successful, and brought down the goods privately and left them at Kelting's in this town. However, by some means, Clark got on track of them and it was thought prudent to remove the goods from Kelting's to the Point; but strange indeed, the goods were found, seized and sold. Hickman might have been under the impression that it was right to help all men, and consequently might have helped both sides and thereby helped himself. Hoyt & Company thought it would be more safe to have another transfer made of the house and lot, so it was accordingly transferred to William A. Hickman, who, they then, supposed to be a true and faithful member of the Mint Company; but they now regard him as a bad man—a wolf in sheep's clothing, a traitor; and because we had some agency to cause him to spy out their liberty and to keep us informed of the state of their church; he having preached for them several times, was well qualified to inform us, they are now giving us many compliments over the left shoulder, and are anxious to ascribe to us every act of Hickman's however bad it may have been. Any man that has once belonged to the Church and has lately been cut off, and is railing against us, and ascribing every bad act of Hickman's to us, you may be tolerably safe in drawing the conclusion that he is a disappointed member of the mint company who wants to get revenge on us in some way.

When the house and lot were placed in Hickman's hands, we told him to hold on upon the property till he got his fifty dollars for smuggling the goods, according to contract. He did so, and as he had all the title there was to the premises, when he left, we bought the property of him and gave him his money, fifty dollars. We have since sold that property for one hundred dollars, and in the operation have cleared fifty dollars which we receive in part pay for our trouble in ranging over the prairies last winter, hunting up Mulholland's bogus press, or in scaring it out of the county, or running it into the ground, or driving it into the cottonwoods.

We told Mulholland and his former partner, but a short time since that if they got off with the loss of the old shell of a house, they might think themselves well off indeed. This is about the history of our swindling operation here. We ask pardon, however, of our readers for troubling them with such trash.

Salt Lake Emigrants

Will not forget that we have counselled them to take three hundred pounds of best bread stuff to a person, old or young, when they start from here. They will find this advice in the 10th number of the Guardian.

Some have said, take only enough to last on the journey; others have said, take 150 or 200 pounds to a person: But we have not said it, neither shall we say it to accommodate any man's condition or circumstances: Yet if any man is disposed to venture without the full amount of 300 pounds to the person, let not that person complain of us, nor of the authorities in Valley, but let him take the entire responsibility of suffering or starving on his own hook, and murmur not in pinching times. If you have not the requisite amount of provisions, nor cannot procure it, neither team sufficient to haul it, you can stay in Pottawatamie County till you can go with a proper outfit. Men and Angel's shall know that we have spoken plainly, and warned faithfully; and our garments, in this respect, are clean.

War! War!!—The Bentonians and anti-Bentonians are waging a spirited and apparently a successful war upon each other through the newspapers in Missouri. They both appear to have a fair show of justification or nullification. The Col. is lecturing the people and denouncing the Legislature. He is down upon Mr. Calhoun like a "thousand of brick."

Mr. Van Buren split his party and fell through the cavity. Look out Mr. Benton that you dont make for yourself a similar opening.

We have received a number of the Literary American, published in New York, by C. P. Quackenbos, Esq., it is a very valuable and interesting paper. We commend it to our readers. See advertisement in another column.

The Editor of the Quincy Whig sued the editor of the Quincy Herald for libel, and recovered $150 damages and costs of court. This is "paying rather dear for the whistle."

Health.—Our county continues very healthy—we seldom hear of any person being sick for any length of time. We hear of no cases of cholera in the county. And we render all praise to Him who holds the destinies of the world in his hand, for the blessing of health.

Crops.—Some of our farmers have commenced harvesting their wheat—the crop is very heavy. Corn and other vegetation has grown finely for the past three weeks—the lateness of the Spring and the corn in most cases having to be planted two or three time over, has kept our farmers very busy. We hope they will receive full reward for their labor.

Bacon.

Mr. Benoist of St. Francis, has a fine lot of choice bacon for sale, at 6¼ cents per pound.

4TH OF JULY.

Our God—Our Country.—Motto of the day.

The celebration of our National Independance went off in good style. The day was fine.

Friend Carter's large anvil saluted the earliest dawn, and continued in rapid succession to break the silence with its heavy roar until 12 o'clock M. The people then repaired to the tabernacle to listen to the orators of the day, and we are free to confess that our sides are hardly got over being sore in consequence of laughing at the wit, humor, good sense and oratory displayed by Mr George A. Smith. He entertained us for about an hour with the most musical and instructing discourse that we ever listened to. It was rich, flowery and simple. Our friends that heard it will never forget it. Several others held forth with much interest and profit.

At half past 2 o'clock P. M. Messrs Brim & Bishop had an excellent dinner served up in good style, under a beautiful bowery, at which many were seated and joyfully and thankfully partook of the fruits of their own industry and toil—closed with many patriotic and appropriate toasts, seconded by the loud response of the anvil, the only big gun we could raise, but friend carter did ample justice to this department, who with his brother, did justice to the music also.

We listened to one toast particularly, because it seemed to touch our case: "The Frontier Guardian.—May it ever live to guard and defend American principles and American freedom—stand by the Union and the principles that our fathers fought and bled to establish."—Gooch.

From another quarter we heard: "The United States of America—May she never lack a Washington, a Jackson, and last but not least, a Taylor to lead her armies to sure and certain victory and conquest." From another quarter we heard: "Sham-pagne to our friends, but real pain to our foes."

The day is over and gone. Go to now and gather the harvest home. The rich reward with which a merciful Providence has crowned your labor.

More Money Stolen.

We give below a quotation from a letter from Elder Martin L. Benson, Dated, Batavia, N. Y., April 24th, 1849. "I have obtained subscription money for the Guardian from different individuals and forwarded the same in letters, mailed as follows: Nov. 25th, $5 00, Dec. 29th, $7 00, January 20th a certificate of deposit for $35 00 and $5 00 in cash."

The letter mailed Nov. 25th, containing $5 00 we received and forwarded five copies of the Guardian for six months. We have never received any other, and this last letter containing $1 00, came by private conveyance.

We have only one fault to find with the Post-office Department at Washington; and that is, because they do not turn out more than they do.

It is not a little singular that but one number of the Guardian has ever reached Hannegon Postoffice, Mo., as we were told the other day by a subscriber from that place, when they have been regularly mailed and sent from this office. We were also told that one or two heavy mails that left this place while the California Emigrants were here, never reached Hannegon Postoffice. Strong suspicions rest upon one office on the route, but we will not name it now. We are trying to bring facts and circumstances together, and if they are of a complexion that will justify us in giving them publicity, we shall do it. We are sorry to hear so many complaints from mail subscribers that they do not get their papers. We feel urged and almost compelled to present our peculiar compliments to those Postmasters, and to those only, who have been so kind as to purloin our money and to suppress our papers or detain them intentionally from our subscribers, or who shall hereafter do it. Go forth, thou Guardian of the Frontier, and drive health, prosperity and the son of peace away from that habitation or office where thou art suppressed or destroyed intentionally. Tell those accursed thieves that steal our money, that a Mormon malediction is upon them, and it shall follow them like the mark of God's displeasure did Cain of old; and tell them it shall follow them if they steal any body's else money, or intentionally suppress any other papers.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Fourth of July—Dinner at Allreds' Branch.

Mr. Editor—Sir: The citizens began to assemble about 10 o'clock, A. M. Several salutes were fired in honor of the day, by direction of Capt. Joseph Taylor. The committee which had been previously chosen, had found a shade, under which a long table was soon constructed, and our ladies (God Bless them,) soon had it covered with white linen, and then the way the cakes, pies and chicken fixens was displayed along the table was enough to make a man's mouth water—in fact there was a splendid feast. Such as would vie with an old settled country, each family bringing with them enough for a half a dozen more. The cloth being removed, Col Jesse Haven was called on for a speech; he soon mounted the stand and made a short but very eloquent address, at the close of which the Washington Song was sung by Capt. Wm. M. Allred and lady. Another salute was then fired in honor of our Venerable President, Gen. Zachary Taylor, followed by tremendous cheering. No spiritous liquors were on the ground, but a barrel of good beer, manufactured by our friend, John Walker, Esq., was tapped to good advantage. Not a discordant note was heard. Captains G. B. Gardner and Taggart gave us a rich treat of excellent music.

By order of Committee,

THOMAS DODSON, Clerk.

The Mustang arrived here yesterday bringing large quantities of goods for our merchants.

Sow Wheat.

Now is the time to prepare your ground for fall wheat. Every man, particularly every farmer, should sow a good supply of fall wheat. It is a sure crop generally, and will always bring cash at a fair price on this western frontier. Be spirited in this work.

Sow Turnips.

It will soon be time to sow the above, most excellent vegetable. They are good for both man and beast, and should not be neglected by any farmer.

Cut Hay.

Now is the time, also, to cut and lay it up for winter. A large quantity should be laid up in store. Remember the severity of last winter, and the scarcity of hay last spring. The prairies are now covered with the most luxuriant grass.

If you have nothing else to do, cut and lay up hay. The country should be kept full of food for both man and beast.

An expedition has been fitted out by the Government, under the command of Capt. Pope, of the topographical engineers, to make an examination of the country west of the Mississippi, and north of the St. Peters.

Camp near Bovoy Lake, Pottawatamie County Iowa, July 3d, 1849.

Col. C. M. Johnson: Your favor of [illegible] was thankfully received. And I was much [illegible] and interested with the report of your short [illegible] view with President Taylor. It will no doubt result in good to Israel through the overruling hand of Providence and by the voice of the majority of the people he is placed at the head of this mighty Republic, at a time when corruption, disunion, mobocracy and party jealousy, smothered for the moment by his overwhelming majority are almost ripe and ready to burst with reckless fury upon the devoted head of a nation stained with the blood of prophets, Apostles, and Saints, who have bled as martyrs of Jesus, and whose murderers, their aiders and abettors are stalking abroad reveling in high places, in legislative assemblys, senatorial chairs, and executive seats. And under such circumstances it can hardly be expected that Gen. Taylor could do much towards saving such a mass of corruption from ruin. However noble the constitution of the United States may be, all its benefits may be lost in an hour through the negligence of its keepers—the people—to carry out its precepts.

You informed me that some evil disposed persons were industriously circulating the report that Elder Orson Hyde, and myself are in opposition to each other and raising seperate parties, to those acquainted with our course I need make no reply. But for the benefit of those who may be ignorant of it, I would say, that since I have been associated with him and Elder Ezra T. Benson in council, we have acted as one, we have met together and investigated all sides of every important question and decided on the best policy to be pursued according to the wisdom given us. And I take pleasure in saying that we have been one, no jarring or difference existing between us. And I feel a confidence in recommending the saints to listen to his council, advice, and instruction, as he will be a great blessing unto them. And to those few who are afraid that the Lord has appointed the wrong man to preside over the affairs of the Church in this country, I would advise that they should repent of all their sins, jealousies, evil surmissings against their brethren—purify their hearts and get the spirit of the Lord to enlighten their understandings, and they will then learn that it is vain to speak evil of the servants of the Lord, and expect to be saved through the priesthood they hold. I wish to return my thanks to the saints for their kindness to me and I should take the greatest of pleasure in remaining with them if I was not called to another field. My associations with Elder Hyde, the High council, the different quorums, and the Saints in general, have been of the most agreeable kind, and to leave them is like parting with my nearest relatives. I hope dear Col. that you will favor me with a letter at every convenient opportunity as a few lines from a friend at a distance will be a great consolation to me when I shall find myself in a low valley walled up by the everlasting hills of Joseph's land. With sentiments of high consideration, and esteem, I subscribe myself, your friend, and brother.

GEO. A. SMITH.

We return our thanks to the editors of the St Joseph Adventure and Gazette, for late papers, brought to us by Mr. Candland.

Early Start.—Several of our exchanges have nominated Thos. H. Benton, alias Old Bullion, as candidate for the Presidency of the U. States in 1852.

Foreign News.—The foreign news does not seem to loose any of its interest. The clouds hang low, and the whole of Europe seems to be just on the verge of being submerged with Revolution and bloodshed. See foreign news published in another column.

Arrived from the Valley.—Dr. Burnhisel has arrived from the Valley of the Salt Lake. He is on his way to Washington with a petition from the people of that place for a Territorial Government. Success to him. He brings no later news than that previously received.

Weather.—The weather has been excessively warm for the past few days—scarcely any air stirring.

Council Bluffs Agency, June 25, 1849.

Orson Hyde—Sir: Reports have reached my ears that Mr. Brophy, Townsend myself and some other individuals must die by the hands of some of your people. Now sir, permit me to assure you that you shall be held personally responsible for the lives of any or all of my friends. If citizens of the Pottawatamie purchase violate the laws of the State, they are amenable, not to the laws of the Danite Band or Gideantines, directed by the High Council or the President of the Church at Winter Quarters, and be assured sir, that Gentile blood will be only atoned for by double the amount from the veins of those high in power in the church of Latter-day Saints.

Respectfully, M. H. CLARK.

The above letter was put into our hands on Monday morning last. We know not Mr. Clark nor Mr. Brophy. Mr. Townsend we once saw, but have no acquaintance with him. We know nothing more of the threats to which he refers than he appears to know (judging from the spirit of his letter,) about good breeding or kind and gentlemanly treatment. What connecting link is there between this man and Mulholland? perhaps a Mrs. R. through whom the letter was forwarded. Mr. Clark may be the mouthpiece of Mulholland, but his terrible bloody words are just about as popular with us as though they had been coined directly in Mulholland's Mint. Don't be scared Mr. Clark before you are hurt. We wont let the Moon fall on you, nor turn your ill gotten ferry over the River "Styx." With this notice, we will let you; yes, we will let you alone in your glory. You can manufacture just as many threats or reports of threats as you please with a Mulholland to help you, but you will not excite our nerves, nor gain immortal fame or honors to yourself in the operation, nor crown democracy with imperishable laurels. We are not ignorant of the spirit and drift of many things. We will venture an opinion to close with, that Mr. Clark cannot produce one tangible reason for believing a syllable of the above letter. If he can, our columns are open to him,—if he cannot, our course is marked out in relation to his dastardly insult. The man or men who have threatened him, he may say have gone to the Valley or elsewhere. If Mr. Clark wants to create an excitement let him wait till he has some just grounds for it, or else that excitement will recoil upon his own head. We may have occasion to say something more of Mr. Clark, and the Bird that has flown.

A new Postoffice has been established at St. Francis in this county, called "Nebraska." Joseph T. Pendleton, appointed Postmaster.

Correspondence of the Frontier Guardian.

From the Plains.

May 19th, 1849.

Bro. Orson Hyde—Dear Bro: According to promise I write to you a short sketch of my travels. This morning Br. Nathaniel Jones came up with us accompanied by two of his brothers with their families, with three wagons, and two young men, late from Baltimore, John Stewart and Charles Snow.

May 21st. A few miles east of Salt Creek, met three wagons on their way back to Nodaway county, Missouri, reported that a number of their company had the measels; the old man said that one of his sons was then very sick in his wagon. They left their company 15 miles west of Salt Creek which is sixty-five miles from the Missouri river.

About two miles west of Salt creek past a company, most of them from Gentry county, Missouri, had five cases of cholera, a Mr. George Thompson, of Atchison county, Mo., died on the 22d, the other four are said to be recovering.

May 23d. This morning Br. Winchester and family came up with us about 90 miles from the Missouri river, with four wagons, accompanied by two young men John Shackham and James Dimond. This evening we came up with the Nodaway company; the Captain, Robert Patten, of Nodaway county, Mo., is very sick with the Cholera, and a young man by the name of Thomas O'Flowel of same county, died last night with cholera, five miles east of the Platte river.

Our company now number 57 souls; 22 wagons; 46 yoke of cattle; 21 cows; 6 horses; 5 mules; 3 young cattle; 21 fowls; 6 dogs; 1 cat.

We are traveling at the rate of about 15 miles a day, feed is good, the weather very cool and our cattle are doing well.

We hear various reports concerning the Pittsburgh company which crossed at St. Joseph, we heard that they quarreled amongst themselves and killed eight of their company.

May 27th. Ten miles west of the Pawnee village, heard that the Pittsburgh company killed only one man, and were heaving out sugar, coffee, and tools of all kinds, and breaking up in small companies.

May 29th. Last night Alfred Campbell, of the Nodaway company, late of Gentry county, Mo., and formerly from Indiana, died with the measels, forty-five miles east of Fort Kearney at Grand Island. We met a lieutenant from the Fort yesterday: He reports that a great many belonging to the companies from Independence has had the cholera: he said that sixty had died between Independence and Grand Island.

May 31. Eight miles east of the head of Grand Island; to-day we have passed where the St. Joseph and Independence road intersect this road; there is one continual string of wagons as far as the eye can extend, both before and behind us; all seem to be moving on peaceably and quiet. They reported a great deal of sickness in the different companies for the first two or three weeks; but now mostly are enjoying good health, and our cattle are gaining. If the Platte river is low enough I think I shall cross over to the North side when I get above the head of Grand Island, in order to get out of the crowd, that I may have more sea room. This evening there is twenty-nine camps in sight, numbering from fifteen to forty wagons in a company.

June 1st. We arrived at Fort Kearney about noon to-day; I ascertained that there had 4151 wagons passed here up to the last of May, and there is probably about two thousand behind us. It is reported that there is 2000 wagons at the crossing of the South Fork of the Platte, awaiting as the river is so high that they cannot cross. There is some of the companies selling their wagons and packing from this place; wagons which cost $125 dollars in the States have sold for $10 to $20 dollars, bacon has been sold for one cent per pound, flour from one to two dollars per hundred, and other articles in proportion.

Captain Robert Patten of the Nodaway company who was left by his company 80 miles east from this place, died on the 29th, a few men with two wagons were left with him, part of them returned and part of them came on.

It seems morally impossible for all the wagons which are on the road to get over the mountains this season; those who start from the Bluffs in July will get along better than those who start earlier, as the feed will have a chance to start before they get in the mountains. I remain yours truly,

H. EGAN.

Bloomington.—This flourishing town in Iowa, is destined to flourish by that name no more; a decree of the Court, thereto properly authorized, has directed that it shall be henceforth known as Muscatine. It is located in the county of that name, and is certain to grow with the increase of population and wealth which is flowing to that Territory.

The new government of Rome, it has been announced, have sent a minister to this country; but it does not appear whether he has been recognized by our government. It has always been the declared policy of the United States to admit and recognize the ambassadors and agents of all governments de facto, without making a question of the right of the foreign government. And this for the best of reasons, because the latter course would involve us in the disputes and civil dissensions of other nations.

A Postoffice has been established at the city of Sacramento, California—according to the latest accounts—and a paper to be entitled the "Placer Times," was shortly to be commenced at the same place.

Cholera.—This terrible disease is spreading its ravages over the whole Union. Cases have occured in Philadelphia, also in Jersey City, Newark and other points in New Jersey:—it also prevails in Brooklin, Albany, Buffalo, Chicago, Richmond, Va., and other smaller towns in different States. It does not appear to be so violent as yet in any of the above places as in St. Louis.

Mortality.—The most fearful instance of mortality caused by the cholera, that has ever come to our knowledge, says the Natchez Courier, occurred on the plantation of Mr. James Miller, Waterproof, La., during the past few days. We have been credibly informed that thirty-nine out of forty negroes on the plantation have died.

Frightful Accident at a Church.—The Philadelphia Ledger states that while the corner stone of a Catholic Church was being laid at Manyunk, on Sunday June 3d, the girders on the first floor gave way, and some 200 persons were precipitated into the basement. About fifty persons were injured more or less; from twelve to fifteen badly. A number of the sufferers had limbs broken, and it is feared cannot survive. One of the officiating clergymen was considerably injured. At 10 o'clock it was reported that one of the injured persons had died.

We publish Bro. Felt's letter to-day, not because we endorse its suggestions, but because we have a great respect for the writer. Bro. Felt manifests much charity and good feeling towards Col. Benton. This we are glad to see, because it is a proof that the writer is not vindictive. But we have expressed our views in this matter in a few words in another place. We hope Bro. Felt will take no exceptions at our publishing a private letter. We have our reasons for doing it.

St. Louis, June 19th, 1849.

Dear Bro. Hyde: Seeing among the news from the Valley, that Dr. Burnhisel was appointed to carry the petition for Territorial government, etc. I take this liberty of laying before you, certain impressions upon my mind in relation to that subject, leaving them to your greater experience and wisdom to use or not, as may seem to you best.

It is said that Thos. H. Benton, in 1832 or three made the remark that "the Mormons must be exterminated," now many suppose this to have proceeded from a settled animosity to the church, but I should view it differently.

It is generally admitted, I believe, that as a statesman, Mr. Benton is as comprehensive in his views of State Policy as perhaps any of our modern statesmen. Now it seems to me, standing as he did, in his relations to the United States, and particularly to this State. With almost prophetic view into the future, he saw that "little stone," &c., and to him there was but the alternative. But after the lapse of years, the scene is changed. He sees already the pillars of that temple in which he has worshipped years, tottering to the base. Would it be surprising then, that a man of his penetration, should be looking around him, for a place of security, ere he is buried in the fallen ruins.

Thus we find him laying plans for the future. Carefully withdrawing Missouri from the coming conflict between the North and South, while pushing his son out into the western wilds, to gather new laurels and familiarize his name along the Pacific shores. And to make the foundation still more secure, he offers to cement the great Mississippi Valley, and the rich provinces of Upper California and Oregon together, with a "Great National Road." Now he finds the pivot upon which all this grand machinery rests, is the "little stone."

I remarked before, after the lapse of years the scene is changed. There is a community that fifteen years ago "must be exterminated." Now, in the face of all obstacles, its numbers swelled into importance, and locating itself in the Grand Central Depot of all this shifting scenery.

Thus it would not be surprising if he had concluded that it was too late for extermination, and not too early to commence negociations of Peace.

Of course I do not suppose that all the ramifications of the above are, or have been, clearly defined in his mind. But enough, no doubt, to turn his mind with some degree of interest in that direction.

But I will now endeavor to give my reasons for inflicting so long an epistle upon you. It is, whether under these circumstances, or appearances, you would consider it wisdom to suggest to Dr. H. to call upon Col. Benton before going to Washington, and thus perhaps obtain a more ready access, and possibly a powerful and willing advocate in the Halls of Congress.

Excuse me for seeming to be thus officious, in that which, perhaps, I have no business, but feeling assured that if it done no good, it could do no great harm. I have taken this method to forward these broken ideas to you before the arrival of Dr. B. at Kanesville.

Receive my kind love to yourself and family, and, remember me also to all our friends in Kanesville.

Respectfully yours in the gospel,

NATHANIEL H. FELT.

The Cholera still rages fearfully in St. Louis. The total number of interments during Saturday and Sunday last was 159, of which 130 are reported having died of cholera. For the week ending Sunday June 24st, the total number of interments was 402, of which 402 died of Cholera. These reports are not full, therefore we may safely set down the number of deaths per day at about one hundred. Our latest dates from New Orleans are to the 8th inst. There had been one hundred and twenty deaths reported for the week ending on the 6th, sixty-nine of which were of Cholera. Three cemeteries, however, sent in no reports. On the 17th there were, in New York, 42 new cases of Cholera and 26 deaths. The average number of cases in Cincinnati was about 30 daily; deaths 7. Deaths of Cholera are reported in all the eastern cities.

Cholera in St. Louis.—Still Later.

The Cholera is raging in St. Louis more than at any previous time. We insert the official report, which we copy from the St. Louis Republican of June 28th:

The official report of interments for the week ending Monday June 25th and including all the Cemeteries in the neighborhood of the city, shows the total number for that period to be 763, of which 164 were children of the age of five years and under. The deaths from cholera for the same period are reported at 589.

On Wednesday June 27th, there were 127 deaths, 99 of which were of cholera. On Thursday the 28th, 114 deaths, 94 of cholera.

The whole number of deaths by cholera from April 2d, 1849, to the week ending June 27th, was 1813 as officially reported. Add to these the number that is buried in family Cemeteries, will bring it up to 2,000.

The St Louis Reveille estimates the number that died the week ending June 25th, to be 900.

Private letters fully confirm the above accounts.

We hear the most heart-rending accounts of extreme suffering—some are found in a state of actual starvation—children left without any protector—persons in the last agony of death, with no one to administer to their wants—others found dead, without any knowing it—persons fleeing from their friends—and other things which makes the heart sicken to contemplate.

The Inundation of New Orleans.—The Delta of the 3d inst., contains a map on which the extent of the district submerged is marked through Lafayette and New Orleans.

The following is the estimate it gives of the number of squares and tenements inundated in the First and Second Municipalities:

Inhabited squares inundated,	160.
Tenements do,	1,600.
Persons dwelling in the same,	8,000.

Mr O'Reilly has issued a circular in which he states his determination to extend the magnetic telegraph to the Pacific as soon as Congress shall give him aid. Mr. Sandford J. Smith is immediately to traverse the route to Fort Leavenworth, to arrange with the citizens of the various towns which may be desired to be included on the telegraph line to the Missouri frontier—to be completed this summer.

Cholera.—We learn that the Indians are dying off very fast of the cholera at Bellevue, on the opposite side of the river, so much so that they have left their dead unburied. We did not learn the number that had died.

California Emigrants.—Up to the 19th ult., 309 vessels had sailed from the Atlantic ports, says the New York Herald, for California, with an aggregate of 19,717 passengers.

The Rollin California Enterprize Company was organized at Winter Quarters, June 20th, 1849. Judge Thos. H. Owen was chosen captain, from Hancock co., Ill.; Thomas Kealy, First Lieutenant, from Lawrence co., Mich.; Ridley Benter, Second Lieutenant and clerk, Wyoming county, N. Y. The company consisted of 79 persons. There were several families in this company, who intend making California their future home. They intend to cultivate the soil. We received the Constitution and by-laws—the crowded state of our columns prevented us from publishing it.

Murder.—Joshph R. Ross, killed Dr. George M. Wright, of Ottumwa, Iowa. A dispute about some land sales, and other previous difficulties are said to be the cause of this rash act. He was shot with a six shooter. Dr. Wright it is said, was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

MARRIED,

In this town by the Editor on Sunday, the 1st inst., Mr. DANIEL SHEARER of Council Point, to Mrs. MARY HARD, late of Detroit, Mich.

The Printer Boys say that the cake was excellent, and indeed, so it was. It was neither Hard nor cut, but whole, sweet, and united, just as we hope this couple may ever remain.

At Council Point on Sunday the 1st inst., by Elder William Snow, Mr. JAMES W. WEBB to Mrs. SARAH C. BOTSFORD, all of Council Point.

We saw the boys luxuriating on the fine loaf that was received, all covered with hearts and kisses; we could not resist the temptation, but turned in and lent them a hand. Most unbounded happiness was wished the devoted couple. Those who thus remember the printers cannot fail to enjoy connubia felicitas.

DIED,

At St. Joseph, Mo., May 29th, CLARKSON CHASE, Son of Lissom and Dorothy Chase, aged 26 years.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE CAMBRIA.

ST. JOHNS, N. B., June 15.

The express from Halifax announced the arrival of the steamer Cambria at that place on Wednesday at noon.

There has been no further debate in Parliament in reference to the Canadian affairs.

Lord Clarendon has returned to Dublin.

It had been determined to pardon the State Prisoners now under sentence of death.

Intense misery and suffering pervaded Ireland. In one District a corpse was washed ashore, which was no sooner discovered than eaten by the starving inhabitants.

The cholera had broken out in London, and prevailed in many parts of the country.

The French army had not entered Rome. The French troops show evident signs of sympathy with the Roman people.

The negotiations by the French ambassador had failed, the Romans refusing to admit the French either as enemies or friends.

Oudinot's army was exposed to malaria, and his troops were becoming more and more disaffected.

The old French Assembly was dissolved on the 27th, and the New Assembly convened on the 28th of May.

A scene of terrible confusion grew out of an imputation made by the President that the Assembly was in danger of being invaded by a mob, in consequence of the intrigues of Ledru Rollin. This imputation was resented. Four Secretaries resigned and a number of members were about quitting the Chamber. The explosion that was anticipated was only averted by the president apologising and retracting his offensive remarks.

The ultra-Radicals have from 210 to 240 members.

A motion for a general amnesty was offered in the old Assembly, but was lost by five votes.

A vote of thanks was passed to the army in Algeria.

Duke D'Aumale, elected to the new Assembly, being under sentance of exile, cannot be allowed to take his seat.

The Neapolitans have withdrawn from Rome.

The Austrians are also inactive in Italy.

The Danish war continues without any speedy prospect of peace.

The town of Tredica has been taken by the Prussian division.

A Russian fleet has appeared in Danish water.

There is little of interest from Germany. Commotions continue to prevail.

In Hungary nothing decisive has yet transpired. Vast armies of Austrians and Russians continue to pass into the country, and the Hungarians were retiring into the fastnesses of the country, where their chances of success will be much better. The city of Budois is in their hands, and it is said they treacherously massacred five or six hundred of its inhabitants. The alleged victories of the Hungarians over the Prussians have not been confirmed.

It is said the Russian force employed against Magyars reached 170,000.

After a bloody fight, in which several hundred were killed, Baden fell into the hands of the Hungarians.

On the morning of the 21st ult. All the officers of the Croats were cut down without quarter. The loss of the Hungarians is estimated at 150 men and 40 officers.

Offen has been captured, and the Georgians, numbering 30,000 persons, heretofore captured, have been set free.

It is said that the Magyars, have again utterly defeated the Imperial forces in the neighborhood of Ollenburgh.

Great surprise is expressed in Vienna at the non-appearance of the Russians in Hungary, and persons are asking what has become of them. Probably Bem and Dembrinsky could furnish some information on the subject.

A sanguinary conflict has taken place between the Prussians and Magyars, near Ralbi, the victory of which is claimed on both sides.

It appears from a Magyar pay list of military in service, that there are new about 180,000 men in the field, one sixth of whom hold that the Hungary Republic has been proclaimed at Kaschaw.

Accounts from Vienna announce that the fortress of Buda was taken by assault on the 21st by the Hungarians.

Dentiniski has defeated the Prussian on the confines of Galatia.

Pariezel had addressed a note to the Prussian government, informing it of the establishment of a Republic in Hungary, and refusing any token of friendly understanding.

All the roads in Hungary were described to be covered with crowds of new recruits, all of whom are going to Debrezien for the purpose of being drilled, armed and incorporated in the army.

The fanaticism was even more intense and the general feeling of the people in behalf of the Republic greater than ever, now that a certainty of an invasion by the Russians is known.

Intelligence from Rome says the French have approached nearer and surrounded the city. The adjacent heights have been taken possession of by a detachment recently stationed at Cevita Vechia. The French seemed determind to enter the city, but, if possible without the effusion of blood. It is said that the service in which they are engaged is extremely distatsteful to the French troops.

The latest intelligence from Rome states that the constituent assembly having essentially rejected the proposition of M. Lesseps, had given authority to the triumvirate to treat again. The triumvirate then proposed to the French Plenipotentiary, the following conditions:

1st. That the people shall again be called to exercise their sovereignty by means of universal suffrages.

2d. That the Austrians, Neapolitans, and Spainards, shall all immediately evacuate the territory and Republic, as universal suffrage would be a mockery under preference of foreign arms.

3d. That the French troops move away from Rome; the Republic, always generous and paternal, will grant them for a garrison a place exempt from fever, where they shall meet mutually to settle the adoption of that courtesy which is due to each other by Republican brethren. They shall remain their friends, but not their protectors, for the democracy of Rome will constitute itself, without foreign interference.

It is also understood that a deputation will be sent to Gaeta with proposals to the Pope, inviting him to return under limited temporal rule, and with the total exclusion of Cardinals from all political voices.

LAND WARRANTS.—The whole number of land warrants issued up to the 1st of May, was 55,000 of 160 acre warrants, and 1,000 of 40 acre warrants. A close estimate of the whole amount issued, and to be issued, is 85,000 160 acre warrants, and 5,000 40 acre warrants, leaving 30,000 of the former, and 4,000 of the latter, yet to be issued. There are about 9,500 applications before the Department. The new applications average 40 per day, and the issues about 140 per day.

DETROIT, June 16.

The steamer New Orleans was lost on her way to Chicago. She struck a reef of rocks near Sugar Island on Thursday evening. The boat is a total loss. The passengers were saved in fishermens' boats,

LOUISVILLE, June 16.

A reconter took place to-day in Madison county, at a public speaking, between Cassius M. Clay and Joseph Turner. Both parties drew pistols, which were snapped without effect. They then attacked each other with bowie knives, and Mr. Clay was stabbed through the heart, and instantly died. Mr. Turner was severely wounded in the abdomen and groins, from the effects of which he has since died.

By a later dispatch we learn that Mr. Clay is still living, and some hopes are entertained of his recovery.

LOUISVILLE, June 16.

The intelligence from Nashville, to the 14th, says, that Ex-President Polk was not expected to live through the night.

We have since learned that Ex-President Polk is no more, it is reported that he died of Chronic Diarrhœa.

NEW YORK, June 16.

By an arrival at Boston, we learn that Montazas, President of Venezuela, has been obliged to seek safety by flight, to save himself from the hatred of his people.

NEW ORLEANS, June 12.

The steamer Crescent City arrived yesterday from Charges, bringing nearly a million of dollars in gold dust and 126 passengers. Among the passengers are Gov. Mason and Captain Forbes, who arrived at Panama by the mail steamer California. They confirm all previous statements of the abundance of the precious metals; indeed, they state the representations are far short of the reality.

The steamers Oregon and California had sailed from Panama for San Francisco, taking all the passengers that were waiting at that point.

Nothing has been done towards establishing a provisional government for California.

The advices from California are highly favorable. The markets appear overstocked with everything else but provisions. Sixty vessels were in the harbor of San Francisco, principally from the United States and South America.

BOSTON, June 16.

The steamer Zanobia, from Baltimore was captured by an English sloop of war on the coast of Africa, having on board 550 slaves, 33 of whom were women. Some of them were branded on the breast with hot irons.

Memphis was visited by a tremenduous storm of wind and rain, last Sunday night week. It did great damage. Houses were blown down, others unroofed, and trees torn up by the roots. The tornado was also very severe at Fort Pickering. No lives were lost, so far as known.

NEW YORK, June 11.

The ship Lexington arrived at this port yesterday, from San Francisco, with a quarter million dollars in gold dust. There were ten deaths from cholera yesterday.

The News from Europe—Danger of a General War.

We received by our last mail the papers containing full accounts of the News brought by the Europa.

The full accounts are calculated to increase the apprehensions which the telegraph reports excited, that a general war in Europe is pending.

In the French Chamber, on the 22d of May, the manifesto of the Emperor of Russia was made the subject of debate, and the force of opinion, even by those who are regarded as among the most moderate, was very decidedly that the manifesto was calculated to provoke a war. In order that our readers may understand in what respects this manifesto is objectionable, we copy it entire:

"By the grace of God, We, Nicholas I., Emperor and Autocrat of the Russias, &c., declare to the nation, having, by our manifesto of the 24th March, 1848, informed our subjects of the miseries which afflicted western Europe, we at the same time made known how we were ready to meet our enemies wherever they might show themselves, and that we should, without sparing ourselves, in conjunction indissoluble with our sacred Russia, defend the honor of the Russian name, and the inviolability of our frontiers.

"The commotions and rebellions of the west have not since then ceased. Guilty delusion, enticing the thoughtless crowd with visionary dreams of that prosperity which can never be the fruit of wilfulness and obstinacy, has entered the East and the dominions contiguous to us, subjects of the Turkish Empire, viz: Moldavia and Wallachia. Only by the presence of our troops, together with those of Turkey, has order been restored and maintained; but in Hungary and Transylvania the efforts of Austrian government, distracted already by another war with foreign and domestic enemies in Italy, have not yet been able to triumph over rebellion. On the contrary, strengthening itself by hordes of our Polish traitors of 1831, and of other foreigners, outcasts, runaways, and vagrants, the rebellion has developed itself there to a most threatening degree.

"In the midst of these unfortunate events, the Emperor of Austria has addressed himself to us with the wish for our assistance against our common enemies. We shall not refuse him

"Having called to the assistance of this righteous enterprise, the Almighty Leader of Battles and Lord of Victories, we have commanded our armies to move forward for the extinction of rebellion, and the destruction of audacious and evil-intentioned men, who endeavor to disturb the peace of our dominions also.

"Let God be with us, and who shall be against us?

"So—we are convinced of it—so feels, so hopes, so aspires our God preserved nation, every Russian, every true subject of ours, and Russia will fulfil her mission.

"Given at St. Petersburg, the 26th day of April, in the year from the birth of Christ, 1849, and the 24th of our reign.

[signed] "NICHOLAS I."

In the French Chamber this manifesto was denounced by the Red Republicans, as a declaration of war against the late revolution in France, and as calling for some decisive action on the part of the Chamber. The following resolution was proposed by M. Joley:

The National Assembly, considering that the manifesto of the Emperor of Russia, and the treaties concluded between Russia, Prussia and Austria, are an encroachment on the principles of public right, proclaimed by the French revolution, and sanctioned by the order of the day of the 24th of May, 1849; and protesting, in the name of the French people, against this new coalition which menaces the liberty of Europe; enjoins on the Government to take the most energetic measures to cause the principle of the liberty and independence of nations to be respected; and passes to the order of the day.

Cries on the left: Supported!

Several voices on the left: The recognition of the Roman Republic should be added.

M. Joley modified his order of the day, and handed it to the President.

The President read the order of the day with the following modification: "The National Assembly invites the government to take energetic measures to cause the independence and nationality of the Roman Republic to be respected" [interruption on the left.]

Gen. Cavaignac opposed the adoption of the order in this form, and said:

The rejection of the order of the day which has been presented, and against which I shall vote, should not be interpreted as a proof that the National Assembly is indifferent to what is taking place in Europe, which, on the part of Russia, "completely changes the state of affairs in Europe, and consequently the attitude of France towards foreign powers." I think that attitude may, I fear that it will "become the cause of war in Europe," but I would not that the Assembly should seperate, and let an idea be entertained that it was indifferent to these facts.

He then proposed the following substitute:

"The National Assembly calls the serious attention of the government to the events and movements of troops taking place in Europe, and seeing in the state of affairs dangers for liberty and for the Republic, recommends the government to take energetic measures necessary for their protection."

The substitute was warmly opposed by M. Joley, Ledru Rollin, and others. Ledru Rollin denounced the manifesto of the Emperor of Russia, as a "declaration of war against the French Republic," and that it ought to be met by a counter-declaration.

The debate was adjourned to the next day, when M. Bastide said that it was desirable that the vote should be as unanimous as possible, he and M. Joley had decided on uniting with the order of the day of Gen. Cavaignac, with a slight change, which merely consisted in adding the words at the end, "and to protect the independence and nationality of all people."

M. Gustave de Beaumont said he feared there was something concealed beneath the apparent unanimity, and it was inconsistent with the previous declarations of men whose cry had yesterday been for war.

General Cavaignac said, that to put an end to any equivocation or doubt, he should insist on his proposition without any addition.

M. G. de Beaumont said he was satified with the explanation of the gallant General, and would now vote for his proposition without any addition (Loud exclamations on the left.)

The President: I shall now proceed to put the propositon of Gen. Cavaignac to the vote, and afterwards the proposed addition. A division will afterwards take place on the ensemble.

The order of the day, as drawn up by Gen. Cavaignac, was then put to the vote, and adopted almost unanimously.

The President: I shall now put the second part to the vote, containing the addition of M. Joley, and M. Bastide.

A division being demanded, that course was proceeded with, when the addition was rejected.

The ensemble of the order of the day of General Cavaignac was when put to the vote, and adopted by 436 to 134.

This unanimity, not less than the proceeding itself, is most significant of what part France will take, if the Emperor of Russia has attempted to carry out the declarations of his manifesto.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENTS AND LOSS OF LIFE.—We find several terrific accidents in our late papers that have occurred upon the waters: Surely the "destroyer rideth upon the face thereof:"

LOUISVILLE, June 11.

The steamer Embassey, collapsed both flues of the starboard boiler, on Saturday last, when just below the mouth of Green river. Many of the crew and several of the deck passengers were killed, and many others thrown overboard. Twenty-eight were severely scalded. Many of the wounded lie in a critical situation. The Embassey was from Pittsburg, and bound for St Louis.

ANOTHER.—Tornado.—Steamer Memphis Wrecked.—Loss of Life.

The steamer Memphis, when about ten miles above New Madrid, coming up, was struck by a tornado, about 11 o'clock P. M. June 22d, on the larboard side. She careened very much, but righted, and the wind apparently rebounding, threw off the hurricane deck on the side from which came the wind, completely unroofing the whole cabin and a number of state-rooms. All except the engineer, carpenter, and two more, sleeping on the larboard side, were lost. These persons came up among the peices of the Texas, immediately, at the side of the guard, upon which they climed. The second clerk, Mr. Short, and the barkeeper, Mr. W. C. Wilcox, were taking down the sign at the time. Mr. W. was blown overboard and lost, and the clerk thrown to the after part of the boat. The commander, Capt. Mann, standing on the boiler deck, was hurled to the bow, where he struck a wagon, which alone prevented him from going overboard. He was bruised, but not seriously injured. Two cabin passengers were missing—one a young man from Memphis, and the other Mr. Briggs, from New Orleans. About twelve are known to be lost.

STILL ANOTHER.—We learn from an extra of the Apalachicola Commercial Advertiser of the 31st ult., that a most appalling explosion, took place in that city on the 27th ult. The steamboat Emily burst a boiler as she was leaving the wharf. The number of killed and missing were seven.

The Hungarian revolution is carried on with great determination and bravery. It is not strictly true, perhaps, to call it a revolution. It was not a revolt; but a movement of defence against an attack of their neighbors of Croatia. The nobility of Hungary, or the great landholders, it seems, had lately made over to the tenants of their lands, the laboring peasantry, in fee, a large part of the lands held by the former and cultivated by the latter as vassals; and also voluntarily gave up their privilege of exemption from taxation which was guaranteed to them by the old constitution; and submitted to be taxed. The Emperor of Austria as King of Hungary, approved of the changes in his public official capacity; but it is said, secretly stirred up the Croatians's to hostility against them. Kossuth, the present commander of the Hungarian army, went from place to place, addressing the people, who became excited to such a degree upon listening to his appeals, that they demanded often to be led forthwith against the enemy. The most vigorous measures were taken by the oppressed and fiery Huns. Kossuth was appointed their leader; the women shouldered the musket and took their place in the ranks. The contests were marked with determined obstinacy, and in some cases, crowned with decisive victory. Russia has offered her assistance to Austria in subduing the Hungarians. It is said that Hungary can bring into the field an army of 100,000. And it is probable that the Poles may assist the Hungarians with half that number. If such a combination of forces, made of such metal, are to be subdued, it will only be through a long succession of the most terrible and bloody conflicts.—[St. Louis Union.

THE CUT WORM.—Complaints come up from our farmers thick and fast of the ravages of the cut worm. In every part of the county so far as we have learned, and in all the counties adjoining, but especially upon the praires, they have been very destructive. The coldness of the spring, and the worm together have caused some of our farmers to replant their corn as often as four times. The worm is confined chiefly to the corn crop. In all the western and southern States—in Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, &c., &c.,—the army worm and cut worm, in conjunction are laying waste the corn, cotton, and grass fields. Crops everywhere are reported as unpromising.—[Missouri Statesmen.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA—MORE GOLD—"DIAMONDS AS BIG AS HEN'S EGGS."—A dispatch dated New York, 30th ult., has the following:

Mr. Parrot, U. S. consul, left Mazatlan on the 10th of April, and arrived in this city yesterday. He brought with him $40,000 in gold dust. He estimates that at least $30,000,000 in gold dust will be taken from the different placers during the present year. Three or four new quicksilver and two silver mines have been discovered. Platinum does not exist in considerable quantity. Diamonds nearly the size of hen's eggs have been found in the Sacramento Valley. The finder of one demands $180,000 for it.

A New York volunteer has built himself a small frame house, which was offered for rent to Gen. Smith at $18,000 a year; he gave him a day to consider the proposal.

The crews of the Oregon and California receive $100 per month, and the cooks $150.

From the London Times, May 10th.

THE THREE GREAT EVENTS IN EUROPE.—Three great events claim at the present moment, our chief attention—the advance of the Russian troops into Hungary, the approach of a French army to Rome, and lastly, the prospect of a serious contest between the existing governments of Germany and large masses of the people, already pledged to risk everything in defence of national unity and democratic institutions. We believe, that, in this country, these events are unanimously regarded by men of all parties with serious apprehensions and sincere regret. They bode no good to Europe or to the times we live in. They menace the world with a conflict of extreme parties. But, as the tempest blackens day by day, it is impossible to deny that the chances of any rational compromise or adjustment of these differences diminish, and they are left more and more to the arbitration of the sword. Yet, even when this conflict has been fought and won, the victorious party, whichever it may be, will be alike embarrassed to restore the tranquility of society and the authority of government, either by the force of military despotism or by the license of unlimited democracy.

A fire occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, June 1st, destroying the large warehouse of Barry & Waring, containing 10,000 bushels of wheat and 5,000 bushels of corn. The building was valued at $10,000, and fully insured. The grain was partly insurad.

Foreign Postages.

Considerable difficulty having occurred in different parts of the country, especially in places remote from the large cities, in ascertaining correctly the rates of postage under the new postal treaty with Great Britain, the New York Courier has obtained from the Post Office Department the following schedule of the various rates, which will be found of importance and convenient to all having occasion to correspond with parties in Great Britain or on the continent:

Letters by the British or American steamers to England, Ireland and Scotland, twenty-four cents a single rate, to be pre-paid or not. Newspapers two cents each, to be pre-paid.

To the continent of Europe, by the British steamers, five cents a single rate, and newspapers two cents each, to be pre-paid.

Letters by the American steamers to Portugal, France, Spain, Belgium, Holland and Italy, twenty-four cents a single rate, must be pre-paid, with the inland postage to New York to be added. Newspapers three cents each, to be pre-paid.

Letters by the American steamers, to other places on the continent of Europe, not mentioned above, can be paid or not, postage to New York to be added. Newspapers three cents each, to be pre-paid.

Letters must be pre-paid to Havanna, twelve and a half cents. Chagres twenty cents. Panama, thirty cents a single rate.

Letters to California from any part of the United States, can be pre-paid or not, forty cents a single rate. Trancient newspapers three cents each, to be pre-paid.

By single rate, is meant letters weighing a half ounce or less.

The Postmaster General has decided that the British West India steamers do not come within the provisions of the postal treaty, and letters sent to them hence, must have the inland postage pre-paid.

GRATITUDE TO GOD,

EXCITED BY A CONTEMPLATION OF HIS WORKS.

AFTER ROUSSEAU, BY LEILLA.

The starry heavens instruct the earth
Their mighty Author to revere;
A great Creator shineth forth
In every burning, rolling sphere.
What a sublime, a heavenly song,
Bursts forth from that celestial choir!
What swelling music rolls along
From every sweet seraphic lyre,
Blending in one full harmony,
Almighty King, in praise to thee!

Oh Lord, Thy might, Thy wondrous glory,
Each fair thing in Creation tells;
Day unto day repeats the story,
And night unto the night reveals.
Not Man's the language, faint and weak,
Obscurely falling on the ear;
Not thus doth mighty Nature speak—
Her voice is loud, her tones are clear;
She readeth from an open book,
And all who hear may turn and look.

How grand Thy works, Thou gracious Lord,
Thy blessings boundless, great, and free:
How rich, how sweet, the full reward,
Of creatures faithful unto Thee!
In humble love, in holy fear,
The weakest spirit dwells secure;
Here springeth light to warm, to cheer,
To strengthen, to inspire, assure;
And kindle in the feebiest mind
Bright gleams of wisdom, clear, refined.

Remember, Lord, my trembling faith,
And fill me with a watchful fear,
To fly the works of sin and death;
To see thy law in letters clear.
Thy blessed law of light and truth,
In all its force to me unfold;
And let its precepts guide my youth,
More precious far than gems and gold.
More sweet that holy Law to me,
Than honied treasures to the bee.

Without those beams of sacred light
Thy Spirit and Thy Word impart,
Ah! who can tell the depth of night
That broods upon his inmost heart?
Oh, lend me one pure, burning ray,
My own dark spirit to explore,
To fright mine inward foes away:
And, that it may return no more,
Lord, let it gleam forever there,
Expelling darkness and despair.

If thus, dear Lord, thou deign to bless
My soul with Thy reviving smile,
To fill me with Thy righteousness,
And keep my wandering feet from guile,
My grateful soul shall draw supplies
From thy pure fountain, full and free;
And upward evermore shall rise
The glory and the praise to Thee.
For all who see the change divine,
Shall own the work, great God for Thine.

MISCELLANY.

A Yankee Trick on a Hoosier Landlord.

In a quiet little Ohio village, many years ago, there was a tavern where the stages always changed, and the passengers expected to get breakfast. The landlord of said Hotel was noted for his tricks upon travelers, who were allowed to get fairly seated at the table, when, the driver would blow his horn (after taking his "horns") and sing out, "Stage ready, gentlemen," whereupon the passengers were obliged to hurry out and take their seats, leaving a scarcely tasted breakfast behind them, for which, however, they had to fork over fifty cents! One day when the stage was approaching the house of this obliging host, a passenger said that he had often heard of the landlord's trick, and he was afraid they would not be able to get any breakfast.

"What! how? No breakfast!" exclaimed the rest.

"Exactly so gents, and you may as well keep your seats and tin."

"Don't they expect passengers to breakfast?"

"Oh, yes! they expect you to it, but not to eat it. I am under the impression, that there is an understanding between the landlord and driver, that, for sundry and various drinks, etc., the latter starts before you can scarcely commence eating."

"Why, wot on airth air yew talkin' 'bout? Ef you calkerlate I'm goin' to pay fourninepenses, fur my breakfuss and not git the valee on't you are mistakin'!" said a voice from the back seat, one Hezekiah Spaulding—though "tew hum" they call him "Hez," for short. "I'm goin' tew git my breakfuss yere, and not pay 'nary red, till I dew."

"Then you'll be left."

"Not as yew knows on, I wont!"

"Well, we'll see," said the other, as the stage drove to the door, and the landlord, ready to "do the hospitable," says—

"Breakfast just ready, gents? Here's water, basins, towels, and soap."

After performing their ablutions, they all proceeded to the dining-room, commenced a fierce onslaught upon the edibles, though "Hez" took his time. Scarcely had they tasted their coffee, when they heard the unwelcome sound of the horn, and the driver exclaim "Stage ready!" Up rise eight grumbling passengers, pay their 50 cents, and take their seats.

"All aboard, gents?" inquires the host.

"One missing, said they.

Proceeding to the dining-room, the host finds Hez very cooly helping himself to an immense piece of steak, the "size of a horse's lip."

"You'll be left, sir! Stage is going to start!"

"Wal, I haint got nothin' tew say agin it!" draw's out Hez.

"Can't wait, sir, better take your seat."

"I'll be gaul-darned ef I dew, nuther, till I've got my breakfuss! I paid for it, and I'm goin' to git the vallee on't! and ef yew calkalate I ain't, yew air mistaken."

So the stage did start; and left Hez who continued his attack of the edibles. Biscuits, coffee, steaks, &c., &c., disappeared rapidly before the eyes of the astonished landlord.

"Say, Squire, them there cakes is 'bout East; fetch us nuther grist on 'em. You," (to the waiter,) "nuther cup ov that air coffee. Pass them eggs. Raise yew're own pork, Squire?—this is mazin' nice ham. Land 'bout yeare tolerable cheap, Squire! Hain't got much maple timber in thes e parts, hev ye! Dewin' right smart trade, Squire? I callate, Don't lay yew're own eggs, dew ye?" and thus Hez kept quizzing the landlord, until he had made a hearty meal.

Say, Squire, now I'm 'bout tew conclude payin' my devowers tew this ere table, but ef yew'd jist give us a bowl o'bread and milk tew sorter top off with, I'd be much obleeged tew ye."

So out goes landlord and waiter for the bowl, milk and bread, and set them before Hez. Spewn, tew, ef you please!"

But no spoon could be found. Landlord was sure he had plenty of silver ones laying on the table when the stage stopped.

"Say yew! dew you think them passengers is going to pay yew for a breakfuss and not git no compensashun!"

"Ah! what! Do you think any of the passengers took them!"

"Dew I THINK? No I don't think, but I'm sartin. Ef they air all as green as yew 'bout here, I'm goin' tew locate immediately and tew wonst."

The landlord rushes out to the stable, and starts a man off after the stage, which had gone about three miles. The man overtakes the stage, and says something to the driver in a low tone. He immediately turns back, and on arriving at the Hotel, Hez comes out to take his seat, and says—

"Heow air yew' gents? I'm rotten glad tew see yew!"

Can you point out the man you think has the spoons!" asked the landlord.

"Pint him out? Sartinly, I ken. Say, Squire! I paid you four ninepences fur a breakfuss, and I callate I GOT THE VALLEE ON'T! You'll find them spoons in the coffee-pot!"

Go ahead, ALL ABOARD, driver!—[Spirit of the Times.

The marriage customs of the natives of New Holland are rather more curious than agreeable. Before a girl is given to her husband, her two front teeth are knocked out. The lover then throws a kangaroo skin over her shoulders, spits in her face several times, marks her with stripes of different colors, orders her to march to his hut with his provision bag, and if she does not go fast enough to please him, he gives her a few kicks by the way. These savages generally steal wives from some tribe with whom they are at enmity; and frequently, when they observe a girl without any protector, rush upon her, stupify her with blows of a club, and drag her through the woods with the utmost violence. Her tribe retaliate merely by committing a similar outrage. There are no other wedding ceremonies.

The salary of the President of France is $110,000 per year, with a furnished palace.

Carpenters, for the most part speak PLANELY—but they will CHISEL when they can get a chance. Not unfrequently they are BORES, and often times annoy one with their "old saws!"

Many women are beloved without knowing it, but more women think they are beloved when then are not. They generally dsicover their mistake after marriage.

Light and Vegitation.

Light has a peculiar influence upon all things here below, but especially is its effects perceived, apart from common observation, on the flowers and herbs of the field. The vegetable world in many respects resembles the animal. Life, death, decay, and reproduction, are properties belonging to the vegetable kingdom, and are observable in the countless varieties of branch, leaf, and flower. Yet although vegetation exhibits herself in innumerable forms, her elementary constituents are indeed but few. The gases nitrogen, oxygen, hydrogen, and carbon, combined in different proportions, form the different compounds which constitute the vegetable structure. The plants derive their food from the soil, and require for their existence air, heat, and light. The roots drink in moisture from the soil, and that moisture is impregnated with different salts conveyed to the extremeties of branch and leaf through curious hollow tubes. The upper surfaces of leaves are covered with innumerable pores through which large quantities of vapor are exhaled during daylight. A single sunflower plant will exhale, it is computed, "thirteen thousand grains in one day." On the other hand, there are pores on the underside of leaves that inhale carbonic acid gas, and the sap thus charged with carbonic gas and relieved of a portion of its oxygen and hydrogen, serves to produce new vegetable matter and add to the thickness of the branches. If light be witheld from plants, they become unhealthy. Like the prisoner in his dungeon they pine away and die. The reason of this is, that when the light is absent carbonic acid gas is given out and oxygen inhaled. It is owing to the carbon mingling its dark color with the yellow of the plant which produces the fine deep healthy green color, and therefore sickly plants are always pale. Grass that springs up under a board is not green, and flowers grown in a mine removed from the influence of light, are always of a pale appearance. An eminent chemist is of the opinion that the sap of plants is never green, but has a green appearance, owing to a little chlorophyle reflecting green light. There can be no boubt but the chemical action of the ray of light affecting the compositions of vegetable stricture, is the cause of the varieties of color in flowers. It has been found that flowers of a yellow color contain a greater proportion of sugar, oils, gum, and wax, than those of other colors. Red flowers contain the greatest quantity of acids; blue, green, and violet, the greatest quantity of alkali. Still no data can be laid down upon these facts, as some flowers contain every variety of color and shade. In the majority of flowers the centre is yellow, and therefore contains the most sugar and wax, and well does the industrious bee know this as it dives into the little cell and quaffs the pellucid nectar. Watery infusions of blue flowers are changed to red by adding a very small portion of acid, and red infusions are changed to blue by adding a small portion of alkali. If a single drop of acid is put into an ounce of water, and a blue hyacinth immersed in it, the flower will soon change to a red color, and so small is the quantity of acid taken up by the flower, that it does not exceed the one hundred thousandth part of a grain. In this case the chemical influence of light acts like electricity; it composes and decomposes the substances that form the structure of the vegetable kingdom. The sap of plants and flowers is singularly sensitive in photography. The juice of poppy, or infusion of Brazil wood, answer for making photographic paper. Common paper, washed with a decoction of Brazil wood, and exposed to light beneath an engraving gives a negative picture, thus showing the influence of light upon vegetable substances in a wonderful clear manner. Without light the green field and the lovely flower would be unknown, but all the vegetable world presents beautiful evidences of the adaptedness and collocations of vegetation to draw out our admiration and devotion towards the great Creator—Him who is designated "Light," to bespeak his effulgent glory, and the "Rose of Sharon" and "Lilly of the Valley," and cold and stoical must the heart of that man be who sees no splendor in the sun and no beauty in the flower.

Rousseau says, "The empire of the woman is an empire of softness, of address, of complacency. Her commands are caresses, her menaces are tears."

Fidelity.

Never forsake a friend. When enemies gather around—when sickness falls on the heart—when the world is dark and cheerless—is the time to try true friendship. The heart that has been touched with true gold, will redouble its efforts when the friend is sad and in trouble. Adversity tries real friendship. They who turn from the scene of distress, betray their hypocrisy; and prove that interest only moves. If you have a friend who loves you—who has studied your interests and happiness—be sure to sustain him in adversity. Let him feel that his former kindness is appreciated, and that his love was not thrown away. Real fidelity may be rare, but it exists in the heart. Who has not seen and felt its power? They only deny its worth and power, who have ever loved a friend or labored to make a friend happy. The good and the kind, the affectionate and the virtuous, see and feel the heavenly principle. They would sacrifice wealth and honor to promote the happiness of others; and, in return, they receive the reward of their love, by sympathizing hearts and countless favors, when they have been brought low by disease or adversity.

The Wages of Sin is Death.

The sentences and judgments of Holy Writ are positive and unmistakable. This being the case, it is strange that so many are able to deceive themselves into the belief that God's mercy will triumph over his justice, vnd that they may persevere in their wickedness with impunity. There is an element in each individual which persuades him that he will be an exception to the general rule, and that though to some the consequences of sin may be heavy, yet he, through the clemency of God, or by a late repentance, may escape. What consistency is there in this? Are we not to believe the express assertions of the Holy One? "Hath He said it, and shall He not do it?" These flattering whisperings of the soul, these serpent-like suggestions, are in themselves blasphemous, for the make GOD A LIAR!

"The wages of sin is Death." It is true literally and figuratively. When the first sin was committed in Paradise, man was disinherited of eternal life; with that fatal disobedience "came Death into the world, and all our woe." Death is the ultimate, though not the immediate punishment of sin. Ananias, it is true, fell dead even in the midst of his transgression; yet more iniquitous than he have escaped. The Death referred to in this passage is punishment, and it is declared that either here or hearafter punishment must follow sin. Often an interval of impunity occurs; all sinners are not, like Gehazi, on the instant clothed as to the surface, with the leprous scales that deform their souls; and this fact often leads the sinner to think he will altogether escape. The voice of the serpent is heard with his wily insinuations—"Thou shalt not surely die!"—and men yield it a credence which their inclinations, but not their convictions, warrant. The evil day may be put off for a season, but come it must, at last. Will He falter, who doomed bright Lucifer to eternal woe? Will He who banished Adam from Eden, exempt thee from the penalty? Nay—nay! True, thou mayest enjoy the sunshine for awhile, and forget thy amenity in vicious pursuits and pleasures, but when the evening comes, and the Almighty's voice shall say in accent speaking terror to thy conscience—"Where art thou?" then wilt thou be afraid and hide thyself; for then wilt thou recollect awful as the sentence is—"the wages of Sin is DEATH!

Here, then, we have a positive assertion of our Lord, an assertion which it is blasphemy to call in question. He, therefore, who, thus warned, commits sin, does thereby make out and sign his own death-warrant. There is no peradventure—it is a solemn warning—a heavenly voice. Let us remember, then, when temptation would lure us when Satan whispers, "ye shall not surely die"—let us remember God hath said, THE WAGES OF SIN IS DEATH.

Model Houses.

The exporting of Model Houses to foreign countries has been the fashion lately. They take to pieces and put together again like a Chinese puzzle. They have likewise the advantage of being packed in a very small compass. A gentleman who went to California this year assured us he had his drawing room in his truuk, the parlor in his portmanteau, the attic in his carpet bag, the kitchen in his hat-box, and the scullery in his coat-pocket. A contractor has sent us the following specifications:

A MODEL LODGING HOUSE.—This has been arranged upon the plan of the lodging-houses in cities. The house is made to contain as many rooms as possible. Cupboards are fitted up as bedrooms, and beds are ingeniously concealed in piano fortes, side-boards, and chests of drawers. Two keys have been sent to every lock—one for the use of the lodger, and the other for the landlady. The pantry is small, as it has been found that nothing ever keeps in a lodging-house pantry longer than a day. A large pump is also fitted up in the cellar. The most singular thing is, that for the number of rooms in this Model House there is only one bell, which communicates with the drawing-room; the other rooms have bells, only all the wires are broken. One mustard-pot, one coal-scuttle, one dish-cover, one teapot, one pair of sugar-tongs, have been sent out as the furniture. A long list of "extras," as charged here, has also been sent out. It includes boot-cleaning, attendance, towels and the use of a Britannia fork and spoon. A big cat accompanies this Model House; it has a very broad back, so as to be able to bear all the broken things that, in a lodging-house, are always put upon it.

A MODEL THEATRE.—This theatre is like most theatres, half the seats being so uncomfortably arranged that the spectator cannot see, and the other half that he cannot hear. A French Dictionary, and a complete set of "La France Dramatique," have been sent out with the Model.—[Punch.

From Lamartine's Pilgrimage.

Ancient Tyre.

We parted from Kanta an hour before daybreak, and ascended several barren and rocky hills, stretching into the sea. From the summit of the last and most elevated of these ascents, Tyre is beheld, appearing at the extremity of a vast and barren elevation. Between the sea and the last heights of Lebanon, which here rapidly diminish, extends a naked barren plain of about twenty miles in length, and four or five in breadth, of a yellow tint, covered only with thorny shrubs, browsed by the camels of the caravan on their passage. Tyre is built on a peninsula stretching into the sea, and connected with the continent by a narrow neck of land covered with a golden sand, wafted by the wind from Egypt. This city, at present called Sour, by the Arabs, is situated at the farthest extremity of the above-mentioned peninsula, and seems to rise out of the waves. At a distance, you would still imagine it to be a new, beautiful, white, and animated city; but it is nothing more than a fine shadow, which vanishes on approaching it. A few hundreds of falling houses, in which the Arabs fold large flocks of sheep, and black goats, with hanging ears, which defiled before us on the plain, are all that remains of Tyre! She has no longer a port on the sea, no longer roads upon land: the prophecies respecting her have been long since accomplished.

We traveled on in silence, occupied by the thoughts of this desolation, and of the dust of an empire which we trod under our feet. Passing along the paths between the ruins and the gray and naked hills of Lebanon, which here descend to the plain we arrived at the city, now flanked by a sand-bank, which seems its only existing rampart, but which will doubtless, ere long, bury the town under its mass. I thought of the prophecies, and endeavored to bring to my recollection some of those eloquent warnings with which the divine spirit inspired Ezekiel. I could not recall the words, but I discovered the meaning in the deplorable waste before my eyes.

I had now before me the "black" Lebanon; but I said to myself, my imagination has decieved me; I see neither the eagles nor the vultures which, according to the prophecies, were to descend unceasingly from the mountains to despoil even the remains of the city, accursed of God, and the enemy of his people. At the moment I made these reflections, something huge, grotesque and motionless, appeared at our left, on the summit of a pointed rock, which advanced into the plain not far distant, close to the route of the caravans; it looked to me like five statutes of black stone, placed on the rock as on a pedestal; but from certain motions, almost imperceptible, of these colossal figures, we fancied, on approaching nearer, that they were five Bedouin Arabs, clothed in their sacks of black goat's hair, who were looking at us as we passed.

When, however, we came at a distance of fifty paces from the rock, we saw one of the five figures display an immence pair of wings, which flapped with a noise resembling that of a sail shaking in the breeze, and it now became clear that the figures were those of five eagles, of the largest kind I have ever seen in the Alps or menageries of our cities. They did not take flight, but remained unmoved at our approach. Seated like kings of the desert, they seemed to regard Tyre as their proper prey.

I could not cease from contemplating this prophecy in action—this wonderful fulfilment of the divine menaces, of which chance had rendered us witnesses. Never had anything more supernatural struck my eyes or riveted my mind; and it required an effort of reason, not to see behind these five gigantic eagles, the great and terrible figure of the poet of vengeance—of Ezekiel—rising above them, and pointing out to them, with eye and hand, the city which God had given to them for a prey.

I now found that my poetical imagination had exhibited to me the eagles of Tyre less faithfully, less impressively, less supernaturally than the fact warranted.

We arrived at noon, after a march of seven hours, in the midst of the plain of Tyre, at a place called the wells of Solomon. All travelers have described these wells: they consist of three reservoirs of limpid, running water, which issue, as it were by enchantment, from a low, dry, and barren soil, at the distance of two miles from Tyre. Each of these reservoirs, raised artificially about twenty feet above the level of the plain, is full to the brim, and is indeed continually running over. The excess of the fluid is employed to turn the wheels of mills, and the water is conveyed to Tyre by aqueducts, half ancient, half modren, which have a beautiful effect, seen on the horizon. It is said that Solomon ordered these wells to be made, to recompense Tyre and its King Hiram for the services he had received from that monarch's navy and its artists, during the building of the Temple.

These immense wells are each from seventy to eighty feet in circumference; their depth is unknown, and indeed is said to be bottomless. No one has ever been able to learn by what mysterious channels the waters from the mountains arrive, and there is at least every reason to believe that they are immense Artesian wells, constructed thousands of years before the discovery by the moderns.

TO DRY A COW OF HER MILK.—Circumstances frequently render it necessary to stop the lactescent action in cows, and when this occurs, all that is absolutely required is, to make a liquor by pouring into a fresh rennet bag two quarts of pure well, spring, or rain water; reduce the quantity of the liquid, by boiling briskly, to about one quart and strain it. Then let it cool to a lukewarm temperament, and give it as a drink to the cow. In forty-eight hours, she will be dry. For some days, her food should be dry and unsucculent, no water being allowed.

A man in Vermont has applied for a divorce from his wife, on charge of cowardice. It appears she was engaged in breaking a pair of steers, and showed signs of timidity which reflected on her as a lady of courage;

Newspaper Philosophy.

A writer, more philosophical than popular, in some periodical recently proposed the theory of educating men for the editorial profession systematically; deeming it as important to have qualified persons in the charge of the public press, as at the bar, in the pulpit, or the sick room. Although the project is not altogether practicable at this moment, still the time may come when it will be expedient to require such preparation; and with a view to aid the editoral tyro, the following manuel or catechism is submitted.

Question. "What is a daily newspaper?"

Answer. "It is a diurnal compendium of general intelligence."

Q. "What are the principal ingredients of a newspaper?

A. "Fancy, Fiction and fact."

Q. "How are those materials arranged?"

A. "That portion which comes under the head of Fancy is the editorial department (properly so called) embodying the editor's various favorite theories, chimerical, reformatory, political and otherwise, together with cogitations upon miscellaneous subjects—all of which are proposed as germs of public opinion. The ingredient of Fiction is that which treats of horrible murders, dreadful conflagrations, terrible catastrophes, births, deaths and marriages, commendation of arts and sciences, inventions and medicines, and general scandal, filled out with numerous incidental topics of great interest to nobody. The portion allotted to Fact embraces the advertisements, usually with such expansive and comprehensive ardor, as to occupy seven-eights of the entire sheet.

Q. "What is an editor?"

A. "An editor is an imaginary character supposed to preside over the general arrangments, and assume the responsibility, as well as praise or odium of all articles not otherwise provided for."

Q. "What is a subscriber?"

A. "A subscriber is a party contracting with the publishers, who agrees to find in the paper quid pro quo for his money invested."

Q. "What rights have subscribers?

A. "Subscribers are entitled to receive their paper regularly,, and, if advertisers, to have their notices promptly published, and to pay their bills when duly presented."

Q. "What other privileges do subscribers enjoy?"

A. "None.

Q. "What others do they demand?"

A. "Many expect, besides what they are entitled to, that the editor will conform himself in all respects to the peculiar views of each individual, no matter how diverse their sentiments may be and force of argument, the favorite theories of each—in short, to sell himself, heart and soul, body and mind to the fanaticism or idiocy of each subscriber, for the amount per annum technically called subscription, under peril of stopping their paper."

Q. "What course do subscribers pursue to subdue the contumacy of editors?"

A. "Stop the paper."

Q. "What is the result of this step?

A. Nothing."

Q. "What is the usual remedy in such cases?

A. "To resume the paper and be satisfied with it as it is."

Q. "What is a good editor?"

A. "One who minds his own business and expresses honest opinions."

Q. "What is a good subscriber."

A. "One who is satisfied with his own opinion when it does not coincide with that of the editor."

Q. "What is a good newspaper?"

A. "One with a paying circulation of ten thousand copies.—[N. Y. Jour. Com.

RULE FOR WEARING RINGS. When a lady is not engaged, she wears a ring on her first finger; if engaged, on her second; if married, on her third, and if she intends to remain unmarried, she wears the ring upon her fourth finger. This is the rule laid down in the latest work upon female proprieties that we have seen, and it appears to be generally recognized among the sex as one that should be scrupulously observed.

STOPPING NEWSPAPERS.—A class of conceited, touchy people, who stop a newspaper on account of any petty paragraph that displeases them; are cleverly ridiculed by an exchange as follows. The parable should be kept before the people:

"A certain man hit his toe against a pebble stone and fell headlong to the ground. He was vexed, and under the influence of anger and active self-sufficiency, he kicked old mother earth right saucily. With imperturable gravity, he looked to see "the vast globe itself dissolved" and come to naught. But the earth remained, and only his poor foot was injured in the encounter. This is the way of man. An article appears in the newspaper touching him in a weak place, and straightway he sends word to stop his paper. With great self-complacency, he looks on to see a crash, when the object of his spleen shall cease to be. Poor fool, he has only hit his own toe against a world that does not perceptibly feel the shock, and injures, to no extent, any one but himself.

RAILROAD TRAVEL.—The locomotive, the only good motive that can be given for riding a man on a rail.

WASHINGTON ON SWEARING.—August 3, 1776.—That the troops may have an opportunity of attending public worship, as well as to take some rest after the great fatigue which they have gone through, the General excuses them from fatigue duty on the Sabbath, except at the ship yards, or on special occasions, until further orders. The General is sorry to be informed that the foolish and wicked practice of profane cursing and swearing, a vice heretofore little known in the American Army, is growing into fashion. He hopes the officers will, by example as well as influence, endeavor to check it, and that both they and the men will reflect that they can have little hope of the blessing of Heaven on our arms, if we insult Him by our impiety and folly. Added to this, it is a vice so mean and low, without any temptation, that every man of sense and character detests and despises it.

PRIESTCRAFT IN DANGER.

A DRAMA.

BY WILLIAM M'GHIE.

Saun.—And I was determined, if anything was advanced contrary to the sacred book, I would oppose them to the teeth. But never was a man mair disappointed in his expectations, if sound, solid reasoning, backed up by an inexhaustible torrent of scripture, be matter of excellence, then a more excellent resonable discourse never fell from the lips of man: the whole being wound up by an appeal to reason, so earnest and so pathetic, it must hae been a flinty heart, indeed, could hae refused a torrent of tears; for myself, I sat rivetted to the seat in silent astonishment, and when he prayed for the light of truth to dawn on benighted Britain, I cried Amen as loud and as hearty as any of them.

Dr. C.—Hum,—hum,—I—I—I. Hum,—hum,—hum,—Saunders! you are not serious, surely!

Saun.—(Hastily.)—I'm no what, sir? D'ye think I could tamper wi you or any man, on matters o' this kind. Na, na, sir, that may be your heart, but its no mine.

Dr. C.—I'm sorry, indeed, that a man of your knowledge and experience, can be so grossly deceived.

Saun.—Be unco cautious sir, be unco cautious, and hae a care the delusion dinna be on your ain side.—(Lifts the book from Janet's lap.)—For instance, where's your authority for denying the supernatural gifts of the spirit, when Paul says expressly—

Dr. C.—(Interrupting him.)—I have no time now to enter into controversy, but must tell you once for all, I pity your ignorance.

Saun.—And I, sir, maun just use the same freedom to tell you, that you and your systems are a disgrace to humanity and a stink in the nostrils of Jehovah. And as ye hae shown the white feather, in stannin' the test o' scripture, ye hae shown yersell unworthy o' the name ye bear. But ye ken, sir, the hireling flees when he sin's the sheep in danger. I doubt ye wad understand better how to follow the hounds at the sound o' the bugle, than to o'erturn the work o' God.

Dr. C.—What do you say, sir; do you think that because I'm a minister, I should never spend a day in hunting!

Saun.—Deed, sir, if my humble advice was sought, I would advise ye never to do ought else.

Dr. C.—(In a rage.)—Sir, you shall suffer for your insolence.—(Stamps with his foot.)—Sir, you shall hear of it, and that in a way which will surprise you. (Exeunt.)

Saun.—(Smiling.)—There's the first o't; truly he has the spirit o' his maister to perfection this morning. What think ye o't now, Janet!

Janet.—Mair than ever. My certy, ye did not miss him. I just fin' mysell in the state o' yan wha has a bright light thurst in on them after being a lang time in black darkness.

Saun.—It's an apt illustration: but it's amaist time I was at my wark. Let us kneel down and return thanks for sic a signal victory.

SCENE V.—A beautiful secluded Glen, at the foot of Lord Aimwell's pleasure grounds. Enter Lady Emily Aimwell and Lucy Lappet.

Emily.—I think this is about the place mentioned in my note. Don't you think so, Lucy!

Lucy.—Yes, an' please your ladyship, I think it is the very spot. But would it not be better to retire into yonder arbor; it would be more free from observation?

Emily.—No, we shall remain here, our presence will show him where to come. You know he is a stranger. Lucy, I am in a strange state of mind this morning. Do you think the disguise in which we went to the meeting last night, will be found out?

Lucy.—Your lady has no occasion to be afraid of that, I believe there was not one about Tythington but who took us for girls who had just left the byre. And I can assure you, our presence was never missed from the castle. So, my dear lady, keep your mind easy. I assure you there is no danger.

Emily.—Oh! it's not about that I'm uneasy, I only regret having disguised myself for such a purpose. I had heard so much from Dr. Clamour against them, that really I was afraid to be seen, but now I feel that they alone have the words of eternal life. I have no doubt the preacher was gifted with the spirit of inspiration. Do you not feel so, Lucy!

Lucy.—Why, my lady, I am very ignorant in matters of religion; but I assure you I thought it very true, and should like much to be better instructed in it.

Emily.—I have a long list of scripture proofs taken down from last night's discourse. We shall commence and take these as the foundation of scripture lessons for the evenings.

Lucy.—La! my lady, how I should like this. But see! there comes the strange minister.

Emily.—I see him; but how am I to meet him? What am I to say? My heart palpitates strangely. But we must try to meet him as composedly as possible.

Enter H. C. Kimball.

H. C. K.—All hail. May the peace of God that passeth understanding be upon you, my sisters. I received a note to meet some one here at this time. Judging from your appearance here that it was you, may I enquire for what purpose we are here?

Emily.—Most Revd. sir, it was, indeed, we who requested this interview. We heard you preach last night, and believe you sent from God for the regeneration of the world. We feel interested in your welfare, and would like to know a little of your history.

H. C. K.—I assure you I shall feel much pleasure in giving you every information in my power; let me request you to throw off all reserve, and use the same freedom you would do with a brother. Allow me to ask, is it my own individual history you want to be instructed in, or the history of the church to which I belong?

Emily.—Oh! it is of yourself we want to be informed, and I hope we shall have more knowledge of your religion by and by.

H. C. K.—My name is Heber C. Kimball, I am an American by birth, and an Apostle in the Church of Jesus Christ. When our beloved president and prophet, Joseph Smith, received a revelation that we (the Twelve) should disperse ourselves amongst the nations of the earth, to open the kingdom of God to the nations by proclaiming faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, it fell to my lot to visit Britain.

Emily.—You gave us some interesting information of this nature last night. It must have been at a vast expense that you have traveled so many thousand miles by sea and land to reach this country. May I ask how you are remunerated for such great labor, and how are the funds raised from which you are paid?

H. C. K.—My dear lady, we are not amongst those who preach for hire and divine for money. The curse of my master rests upon those who make merchandise of the gospel of the Son of God. Like the primitive apostles we go forth without purse or scrip, relying wholly upon the liberality of those amongst whom we go, for if we minister to them of our heavenly things, it is but a little matter if they minister to us of their earthly things, so saith God.

Emily.—And truly it is so, and in it I see the order of the kingdom, as revealed in scripture. But I fear the same effects will flow from it now as did anciently, viz., poverty and tribulation, and their consequent attendants, persecution and reproach. Pray, sir, have you not found it so?

H. C. K.—I left my home in the wilderness of America, without a farthing in my pocket, and were I to detail all my privations and persecutions to which I have been exposed, and all the perils and dangers from which I have escaped, you would be astonished. These things are not suited for such delicate ears; to myself they are nothing, knowing they are not greater than the sufferings of my master before me, and you know "The servant must not be above his master," and Paul has said, "All who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution."

Emily.—My God! What self-devotedness in the cause of truth, and with what sufferings is it recompensed! You mentioned a home in the wilderness,—are you married? have you left behind you a wife and little ones! and, if so, how have you left them!

H. C. K.—(With emotion.)—Alas! my lady, you have touched the only chord by which my heart can be moved. I have a wife and pretty little babes, whom I love dearer than myself: as for myself, I am ready to be sacrificed for the gospel of Christ, but when I reflect upon the probable fate of my wife and little ones, I am sometimes like to be overcome; in such moments as these, I recommend them to God in earnest prayer, and I receive such answers in their behalf as restores me to myself again. Yes, I know that God will protect them, till we meet again in joy.

Emily.—(Bathed in tears.)—Surely this is more than mortal. O God! protect them all in health and safety till they meet again; (Lucy.) Amen.

H. C. K.—(Embracing them.)—My dear sisters, (for such indeed ye are,) God has heard your prayers, and they are recorded in the archives of heaven for your benefit, as well as mine.

Emily.—(Putting a note into his hand.—Accept, sir, of this small token of esteem, 'tis a mere trifle, but we hope to see you soon again.

H. C. K.—(Looks at the note.)—Fifty pounds.—(Offers it back.)—Surely my lady, you are mistaken!

Emily.—No mistake I assure you; I beg you to put it up without further remark or compliment, and inform us how long you remain here.

H. C. K.—At the earnest desire of the people we preach again in Tythington to night; we then go to visit other cities which are yet without the knowledge of the truth. But we hope soon to be back again, and spend a night of rejoicing over the progress of the work in this region. But before I go, it would afford me much pleasure to know who my guardian angels are, who have given me such consolation this morning.

Emily.—(Smiling.)—I suppose we must introduce ourselves, I am Emily Aimwell, sister of Lord Aimwell, who owns that castle and these lands, and this is Lucy Lappet my maid. When you come again, be so kind, as to drop me a note, and I shall see you, at present it must be in private. Oh, that my brother might hear and obey the gospel, then could we receive you into the castle, and entertain you in a way more suited to your merits.

H. C. K.—God has commanded me to tell you that your prayer is heard. The time is at hand when your brother and you shall together rejoice in the light of the gospel.

Emily.—Oh! how I rejoice in this news from heaven, and shall cherish it as food to support me in your absence.—(Looking at her watch.)—Lucy, our time is up, we must return to the castle.

H. C. K.—(Taking them by the hand.)—Since I parted with my dear wife and family, I have never with so much regret said farewell. May the choicest blessings of the daughters of Israel rest upon you till we meet again.—[Exeunt.]

The Assassination of Gen's Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, First Presidents of the Church of Latter-Day Saints; who were Massacred by a Mob, in Carthage, Hancock County, Ill., on the 27th June, 1844.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar, the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held:

And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled."—Rev. 6:—9, 10, 11.

Ye heaven's attend! Let all the earth give ear!
Let Gods and seraphs, men and angels hear—
The worlds on high—the universe shall know
What awful scenes are acted here below!
Had nature's self a heart, her heart would bleed;
For never, since the Son of God was slain
Has blood so noble, flow'd from human vein
As that which now, on God for vengeance calls
From "freedom's ground"—from Carthage prison walls!

Oh! Illinois! thy soil has drank the blood
Of Prophets martyr'd for the truth of God!
Once lov'd America! what can atone
For the pure blood of innocence, thou'st sown?
Were all thy streams in teary torrents shed
To mourn the fate of those illustrious dead;
How vain the tribute, for the noblest worth
That grac'd thy surface, O degraded Earth!

Oh wretched murd'rers! fierce for human blood!
You've slain the prophets of the living God,
Who've borne oppression from their early youth.
To plant on earth, the principles of truth.

Shades of our patriotic fathers! Can it be,
Beneath your blood-stain'd flag of liberty;
The firm supporters of our country's cause,
Are butcher'd while submissive to her laws?

Yes, blameless men, defam'd by hellish lies
Have thus been offer'd as a sacrifice
T' appease the ragings of a brutish clan.
That has defied the laws of God and man!
'Twas not for crime or guilt of theirs, they fell—
Against the laws they never did rebel.
True to their country, yet her plighted faith
Has prov'd an instrument of cruel death!

Where are thy far-fam'd laws—Columbia! where
Thy boasted freedom—thy protecting care?
Is this a land of rights? Stern-FACTS shall say
If legal justice here maintains its sway,
The official pow'rs of State are sheer pretence
When they're exerted in the Saint's defence.

Great men have fall'n and mighty men have died—
Nations have mourn'd their fav'rites and their pride;
But two, so wise, so virtuous, great and good,
Before on earth, at once, have never stood
Since the creation—men whom God ordain'd
To publish truth where error long had reigned:
Of whom the world, itself unworthy prov'd
It KNEW THEM NOT; but men with hatred mov'd
And with infernal spirits have combin'd
Against the best, the noblest of mankind!

Oh, persecution! shall thy purple hand
Spread utter destruction through the land?
Shall freedom's banner be no more unfurled?
Has peace indeed, been taken from the world?

Thou God of Jacob, in this trying hour
Help us to trust in thy almighty pow'r;
Support thy Saints beneath this awful stroke—
Make bare thine arm to break oppression's yoke.
We mourn thy Prophet, from whose lips have flow'd
The words of life, thy spirit has bestow'd—
A depth of thought, no human art could reach
From time to time, roll'd in sublimest speech,
From the celestial fountain, through his mind,
To purify and elevate mankind:
The rich intelligence by him brought forth,
Is like the sun-beam, spreading o'er the earth.

Now Zion mourns—she mourns an earthly head:
The Prophet and the Patriarch are dead!
The blackest deed that men or devils know
Since Calv'ry's scene, has laid the brothers low!
One in their life, and one in death—they prov'd
How strong their friendship—how they truly lov'd:
True to their mission, until death, they stood,
Then seal'd their testimony with their blood.
All hearts with sorrow bleed, and ev'ry eye
Is bath'd in tears—each bosom heaves a sigh—
Heart broken widows' agonizing groans
Are mingled with the helpless orphans' moans!

Ye Saints! be still, and know that God is just—
With steadfast purpose in his promise trust:
Girded with sackcloth, own his mighty hand,
And wait his judgments on this guilty land!
The noble martyrs now have gone to move
The cause of Zion in the courts above.

Nauvoo, July 1, 1844.

LOVE OF PRAISE.—How prevalent is this disease among mankind! It engrosses their better nature, and, like the jaundice, colors the actions of all around them with its own sickly hue. Goldsmith, speaking of one of these victims, says:

"Of praise of mere glutton, he swallowed what came,—
And the puff of a dunce, he mistook it for fame;
Till his relish, grown callous, almost to disease,
Who peppered the highest, was surest to please."

From the Millennial Star.

Letter to Mr. D——, Merchant, Liverpool.

Dear Sir: Since I called upon you, I have meditated upon your objections, arguments, and assertions; and I most freely own the interview has confirmed me in my belief—that the Church of Jesus Christ of these the Latter-days, is of a truth, the Church and kingdom of God,—and that I have a good foundation to build my faith upon, I think must appear evident, from the following review of our conversation.

I would first remark, your desire to evade conversation on our doctrines and ordinances, or rather the doctrines of Christ and of the Bible, is not less remarkable than common; almost all men, especially those commonly called preachers, purposly avoid these, and prefer haranguing for hours on the practises [illegible] "The life that we now lead in the flesh"—The character of Joseph Smith, of whom they know nothing, but manifest a credulity in newspaper stories so great, that I am led to enquire; have they so entertained the seducing spirit that they are given over "to believe a lie" rather than the truth?

You think the Saints act as "hypocrites"—if they take any medicine, because they believe these promises—"They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—"Are any among you sick? let him send for the Elders, who shall annoint him with oil, and pray over him, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord will raise him up."

I believe the best of the Saints "pray when they are afflicted, and sing spiritual songs when they are merry." They also know that "the prayer of faith avails much." But I also commend those who "cleanse their stomachs, bowels, and blood, with mild herbs, administered by the hands of a friend." If I should partake of any infusion or decoction for this purpose, say of senna, rhubarb or sarsaparilla, and these preparations had been made by a druggist, if he has added any drugs or poisons to make this medicine more effective, and should I partake of the same, ignorant of the addition of poison, would this harm me? Most assuredly, no. Else there is no truth in the promise of God. "If ye drink any deadly poison, it shall not harm you." Let the Saints know in all such cases when these herbal purifiers are not made by themselves, ask the spirit and blessing of God to rest upon them—that this and all His promises to His children may be realized by them. We have in our churches, those who like Luke the physician, have forsaken the arts of men, in the exhibition of medicines, that they may minister the word and the spirit; having been called and set apart to this more acceptable work; and from these, a preference to others, if I required it, I would take the herbs, leaves, decoctions, and infusions of woods and roots that God has so abundantly provided for cleansing the blood, and causing the wheels of life to move more freely on. Again you would limit the liberty of the Saints, "you must not wash in mineral waters for the cleansing of the diseased skin—no, no, only the laying on of the hands." For my own part, if I required to cleanse my skin, I would wash either in the waters of Harrowgate, Cheltenham, Saratoga, or of the Great Salt Lake, and if wisdom dictated, imbibe them also; and with God's blessing on medicines of his own preparing, not only consider myself safe, but have great—much greater faith in this, than I possibly could in any prepared by the degenerate wisdom of apostate man.

You ask, "have not our chemists, druggists, and doctors acquired much useful knowledge from schools, books, and practical observations?" I suppose they have; but tell me, if you can, how many more they have killed than they have cured? Have they not "sought out many inventions?" Have they not speculated, theorised, and experimented on the body of man? Have they not dug deep in the human body, lacerated and defaced that which is the image of God, and hid their works in the dark? They have, and I hesitate not to say, with them God is not well pleased; indeed the dissecting room and its indescribable indecencies which I have occasionally witnessed are an offence, an abomination, and a stink in the nostrils of the great God. If he had intended that man should by his own invention discover various modes of curing sickness, would he ever have set an ordinance in his church for the healing of the sick? No! Again, if a man's work is done on the earth, and "there is an appointed time to man upon the earth," can the medicine or wisdom of man, preserve or prolong the days of such a one? No! Or if sickness lay hold on him whose work is not yet done on earth, can the destroying angel or death cut short his days? No! What so simple and effective in such a case for the speedy removal of the disease, as the ordinance of God "lay hands on the sick, and they SHALL RECOVER."

I would here pause and compare the wisdom and power of God as revealed unto us in the Gospel,—and the folly and weakness of fallen man, so abundantly manifest in his innumerable inventions to save sinners and heal the sick. To me, the simplicity of God's plans shows forth in majestic grandeur His almighty power. When man asks what he must do to be saved, God replies, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, FOR THE REMISSION OF YOUR SINS, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands."—but the tedious, drivelling, expensive, guady, and innumerable inventions of man purposely to receive and confer these blessings, appear to me as foolish as they are in vain. Were I to proceed and show what, in the wisdom of man, is considered necessary for salvation—the essentials and non-essentials, the orthodox and heterodox, my object in this letter would not be attained; their forms, ordinances, doctrines, creeds, and sects are as the number of a man—666! God's scheme is simple, noble, and like himself. "Arise and wash away thy sins."—Again, the sick are commanded to call for the Elders, who are to lay hands on them, pray over them, annointing them with holy oil, and the Lord will save and heal them—how simple! and who doubts the ability of God thus to heal? Compare with this the nostrums, unintelligible, and as innumerable as the minerals, poisons, drugs, and systems of cure invented by man. The called and sent of God go forth to administer for the remission of sins and the healing of the sick in the name of the Lord, without purse, without price; but, alas! alas! how different is it with men and their systems, "no pay, no cure," neither can their salvation be obtained by the living, or for the dead unless these hirelings are well paid for—what? nothing, and worse than this—the displeasure of God.

Am I not at liberty to have my teeth and gums cleaned and attended to by the dentist, as I am to have my clothes made by a tailor? Certainly I am, or is the practical skill of the surgeon altogether to be laid aside, because of the erroneous theories of Physicians? No! In certain cases of broken bones, &c., under the directions of the priesthood, the skillful manipulation of a practical surgeon, accompanied with the ordinances God has set in His church are commendable, and a speedy cure to the faithful will follow. If matter has collected from cold and inflammation of weak parts, say a gum boil Is this sickness? I think not. Shall I then take my own knife—perhaps not very clean or the cleaner lancet of my brother, if he has one, and who can see this better than I can, or of a surgeon and thus get quit of my pain sooner? Or shall I continue to suffer till nature throw off this painful matter? Let others do this that will, I should prefer the former course, and who can condemn me? The law of God does not. So then you perceive the Saints of God have "the liberty of the sons of God," and use it in this, as well as in other matters, and are not be judged by the world. "Know ye not that the Saints shall judge the world." We pretend to have received the spirit of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, the comforter that leads into all truth, and so long as we are guided by this heavenly intelligence, we are not likely to err—and surely they who are much if not altogether in error—in "gross darkness and under a thick cloud," are not well calculated to judge, however much they may be inclined to condemn us.

I now proceed to another subject in our conversation—"that the Lord should ever have a righteous seed on the earth." If there were present with Jesus some, or even one that should not taste of death,—if he would that they should remain on the earth till he came again,—it these words of the Savior were fulfilled, and I think you would find it difficult to prove that John the beloved disciple ever died, then there has been a righteous seed on the earth; you seem to be under the impression that the above quotation is from the bible; I do not at present remember that it is, and I am unwilling to say that it is not; nor have I time at present to examine whether it is; but I think I can clearly prove from the same record that an apostacy—a great falling away was to take place in the last days, a time when men would not endure sound doctrine, when the gospel would not be on the earth; "Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats." (1 Timothy iv, 1, 2, 3.) "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." (2 Tim. iii, 1—5.

John saw an angel bringing the gospel to the earth; had it been on the earth at this time, is at all likely that God would send it again? No. The sending of it, and that too, by a holy angel, proves that it was not on the earth that no man held it, or had the authority of God—the priesthood, to minister in its ordinances; if he had he could have confirmed the priesthood on his fellow, by revelation, as Moses did to and upon Aaron; but no, the gospel had to be brought back from heaven, and that too by one who held the Melchisdec Priesthood, which is after the order of the Son of God; who could confer it upon one on the earth: further, it is evident, whenever God had faithful and obedient sons on the earth, he communicated his will to them, by sending holy messengers, or by the revelations of his spirit, Rom. i, 16, 17, and those men have always held the power of God in earthern vessels; hence it is also evident that God has not had a church—His church on the earth; for the churches of men have had no revelations—no ministering angels—no power; they have in some instances had the form; but they most strenuously "deny the power," or the necessity for such a power as the power of God; they emphatically say—if not in as many words,—we admit there has been no revelations, no ministering of angels, and no power of God; "these are all done away, and no longer needed!" Oh, what delusion! Have these not received strong delusion, that they might believe a lie and be damned? Paul says, "The gospel of Jesus was, and it always is the power of God unto salvation."

Let this forever stand true, and let all others that hold for aught else, have the portion of the liars unless they repent; that whenever God has a church and people on the earth he REVEALS his mind an will to his people, and they believe and obey him in all things; and his church will always be built upon and by apostles, prophets, evangelists; &c.; and never without these. From this also you may decide, whether any of the sects for ages, or now are His church. They are not. See, what is their foundation? a pope and cardinals from the foundation of one; a king and bishops of another, Mahommed of a third, Knox, Calvin, Luther, Wickliff, Wesley, Whitfield, &c., &c.; all form foundations for different parts of the same rotten and tottering edifice, that soon must fall; for it is not built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. There is much brawling and crying aloud about Jesus and about their bodiless God; but he answers them as the prophets of Baal were answered, when the power of God was made manifest, when the faithful Elijah offered his offering [illegible] Some of the sectarians of modern [illegible] louder and louder to their God, tell him to come down in their midst and make manifest his power! but fortunately for them he hears them not; could they endure or abide his presence? No. Indeed they do not believe in revelation, and how then could they expect to get it?

If you say we have a priesthood legally called and ordained, I reply let us examine it: you refer no doubt to the laying on of hands of the Presbytery practiced still in John Knox's church. Has this any power in it? Is there any conveyed? Have they any who impose their hands? NO. If so, what are its effects? Where did these get it? Did they obtain it from Knox, or the German reformers, or the English? If from any of these, whence came their calling and ordination? From the Church of Rome. Is this a pure fountain? What do all sectarians—her own daughters—say on this subject? That she is the MOTHER OF—HARLOTS! This places the daughters in a position neither to be envied nor mistaken, and their name! Do they, indeed, deserve it? Suppose for a moment however that the Church of Rome was a pure fountain: are not all her descendants by their schism and secession cut off? They are. Had she the power to do this? Certainly she had; for the apostolic power conferred was to bind on earth and it should be bound in heaven, to loose or cut off on the earth and it would be loosed in heaven: and what she imparted in the name of Jesus she could withdraw. But if you reply she herself had become an impure apostate, then I ask whence have your ordinations come? From an impure fountain? certainly, for you do not believe in revelation, and none of the above weak foundations ever claimed, having received their gospel or ordination from any one on the earth, then holding the Priesthood of God in purity, or from any angel or heavenly power. You will at once admit that the antiquity of any system or church is no proof of its being genuine, or the true church of God; or all others must give place to the Romish, and the dissenters to the Church of England, &c.

There is another point I would draw your attention to: In the Church of Jesus Christ established in these the latter days—the fulness of the everlasting gospel is preached and practised—whereas among the sects you find only the broken fragments scattered, each having a small portion, some more and some less; in one you find some of the ordinances that were and are in the Church of Christ; in another, ordinances altogether disregarded; in one, faith and repentance alone are taught as necessary to salvation, in another grace is obtained solely by good works; in one the salvation of the living only attended to; in another, the dead are not forgotten, but a great price is paid for their pretended deliverance; in one, plain dress seems to form a marked portion of their religion, in another the work of God is all unseen, and in the heart; the outward man being only—

A heavy clog and burden of clay, for the Dissolution of which they long and pray,
That their spirits may speedily flee away,
To bask and sing, in everlasting day!

Each holding for and advocating that form approved by the founders of his sect, and its propagators; but ALL "denying the power of God." In the Church of Jesus Christ, you have the fulness of the everlasting gospel, which is the power of God unto and upon all them that believe and obey—you have faith, repentance and baptism by the living, and for the dead—you have the form of God-likeness, also the power, and administered by men, in the order of God, who hold his power.

How is it that you and most others, clergy and laymen, prefer declamation to argument—heap, and repeat innumerable newspaper stories, but decline comparing your doctrines and theirs with those of the Saints, with those in the bible? Is it a consciousness that all is not right in your state? It is. We have suffered much from slander; all manner of evil has been spoken against us falsely for the truth's sake. Surely the promised blessings will be ours one day. Amen.

Allow me, dear sir, before I close to show you if possible, that these are the calamitous times of the last days so often spoken of. Have not perilous times come? Are not men's hearts failing them for fear, looking for the things that are coming on the earth? Have there not been signs in the sun and moon, and great distress of and among nations? Have not pestilence and faming been stalking through the earth and wasting the inhabitants thereof at noon-day? Doth not the earth waste away as well as the inhabitants thereof? Has not the earth lost power to bring forth roots that were too man as the staff of life? Have not thrones been cast down? Do not others totter to falling? and who by the wisdom of man can tell when and where these things shall end? Look well and mark our social, political, and commercial condition in this kingdom, whither have peace, union, and prosperity fled? they are measurably gone! Did not the angel that John saw coming from the heavens, and bringing back the gospel to the earth, cry aloud, "the hour of his judgments is come, fear God and give him glory"—that is, become his sons by obedience. Solomon says, the crown and glory of an old man are his children. Are his judgments over? surely no. Who shall abide the yet father-pouring out of the vials of his wrath, and the day of his coming! Only those who enter into an everlasting covenant with Him, by obedience, and who flee from the wrath to come, for the refuge that is set before them in the gospel—even those who gather to the land blessed for the gathering of the sons of Zion—Israel's seed—the pure in heart.

Oh! say you, I can do very well with your doctrines, inasmuch as they are scriptural; but this gathering and Joseph Smith, I cannot do with at all. Could you not as well begin to build churches in this country and teach those correct scriptural principles in them; and are not some of every nation to be saved?" John saw those that had been saved "out of," not "in," but "out of every nation, kindred, and people," &c. We dare not disobey God, neither the teachings of his priesthood and spirit, all these cry aloud, "come ye out of her my people"—Yes, come out of Babylon or confusion. And regarding Joseph Smith, let Christ declare to he who now despise, but will when he comes "wonder and perish," why he chose a young man, weak and illiterate—a man "despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," and caused him to be ordained as a Prophet, Revelator, and Restorer to his church again on the earth; for my own part, I can wait this public defence of a man much beloved in the heavens, and much abused, as all his brethren the prophets have been, on the earth, for I already know him to be sent of God, through whom a dispensation of the gospel of power has been committed again to this earth.

Should you, sir, be convinced that we are the church of God, how great your trials to enter and become one of us, and how much greater after you have received the spirit of God! to descend from an honorable position among the sons of men, and commingle with the despised poor, endure the scoffs and sneers of your rich compeers and former companions, the disobedience, frowns, disapprobation, and partial rebellion of your wife, clerks, brothers, sisters, and friends, and the possible loss in a measure of your business and connexion. Alas! how hard it is for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of God, and to endure and be saved therein! how many apostate fashions, customs, and luxuries of "civilized life" have to be given up! But, sir, reflect for a moment, do these confer and increase the real happiness or enjoyments of men? no; they often add to his sorrows and bring misery, ruin, and pain. And "what will not a man give in exchange for the salvation of his soul!" Were not the ancient, patriarchal, pastoral enjoyments of the sons of God far more conducive to peace, health, and happiness, than the artificial, collected, civilised chicanery of this enlightened age! most assuredly they were.

That you may be led and guided by the Truth to the obedience of Faith, and share in the salvation, blessings, and enjoyments of the sons of God in His kingdom is my earnest prayer in the name of the Lord. Amen.

Predictions.

Some of the newspapers are publishing the following prediction, which they say appears in a late letter from Rome. The letter says:

"There was lately found in the library of the Augustine Convent, a very curious prediction. It is in a work entitled "De Fluctibus mysteris Noris," authore Ridolpho Gethner; Augustæ, 1678.

The prophecy, given in English, is—"before the middle of the 19th century, seditions will be excited every where in Europe; republics will arise; kings will be put to death, together with the nobility and ecclesiastics; and the religious will desert their convents. Famine, pestilence, and earthquakes will spread desolation over many cities. Rome will lose her sceptre by the invasion of false philosophy. The Pope will be made a captive by his own people, and the church of God will be placed under tribute, divested of its temporal possessions. In a short time there will be no Pope. A prince from the north will overrun Europe with a great army, destroy the republics, and exterminate all rebels. His sword, wielded by God, will vigorously defend the church of Christ; uphold the orthodox faith, and subdue the Mahometan power. A new portion, the final one, will come by a heavenly sign from the shore, in simplicity of heart, and in the doctrine of Christ, and peace will be restored to the world."

Weather for July.—Mr. T. S. Shaw, writing from Andover, Ills. to the Rock Island Advertiser, on the science of Meteorology, presents the following as the aspect of the weather for July. His letter is dated 20th, June. So far, we may remark, he is not much out of his reckoning:

"According to my calculation for July, the aspects and configuration of the planets indicate much for rain. On the 3st, Mercury squares Saturn, giving a windy and unsettled atmosphere followed by two or three days of bright weather, but towards the 7th, heavy weather may be expected, a few days attended with thunder and lightning. On the 11th Mercury becomes stationary previous to his going direct, causing rain and thunder. On the 16th, Venus sextiles Saturn, giving rain at that period. On the 21st, Saturn becomes stationary in the sign Aries previous to his retrogradation, producing unsettled weather; and on the 25th, Jupiter trines Herschel, giving rain again—after this we may expect fine hot weather for the remainder of the month with clear skies."

We have sent on to Elder Appleby, who is the chief clerk of one of the emigrating companies to the Salt Lake, Mr. Sheen's endorsment of Wm. Smith's prophecy, that Elder A. may be notified of his own death by the cholera. These champions must be proud of such backing.

We have not yet received the nomination of candidates for the board of public works in the State. We shall defer the printing of our tickets till the eleventh hour in order to get the nomination. Printed tickets will be had at the polls. Come every legal voter, and exercise your rights, and if the above ticket does not please you, make one that will.

To Our Subscribers and Patrons.

This thirteenth number of the Guardian closes the first six months' subscription, and we avail ourself of this opportunity to tender to you our unfeigned thanks for your prompt and liberal support, and for the interest you have manifested in our behalf. It has been our aim and purpose to make that impression upon your minds, that might lead you to form characters, in this life, in which you would not be ashamed to appear hereafter in the celestial courts, among the redeemed millions whose bright examples on earth have shed a ray of light on the pathway of those who are now contending against the prince of darkness and against all his auxiliaries. If we have failed to effect so desirable an object, we console ourself with this reflection, that we have not lacked the will, if we have the ability. We have endeavored to make the "Guardian" interesting to all its readers; and we only regret that we have not displayed greater wisdom and a more refined taste in the selection of matter to lay before you. We will try, however, to improve by every available means. It is true that we have published some tales and stories, yet none that we are conscious of, that do not afford useful and instructing lessons. We wish to tap every fountain of wisdom and intelligence, however obscure, deep or isolated it may be. These tributary fountains should all be opened that they may mingle their offerings with the great current that is destined to deluge the world with the knowledge and glory of its Creator. Some of these tributary fountains are so deep that nothing but our folly conveyed in some novel can reach them. If therefore, our folly will search out and expose your wisdom to the world, don't consign us to the lowest condemnation; but remember that the wrath of men and the folly of men may be made to redound to the glory of HIM whose honor we should all be zealous to support.

We have had no very serious obstacles in our way since we began the publication of the Guardian. We have met, however, with several losses of money that has been forwarded to us through the mail. To those who do a heavy business, such losses would be but slightly felt; but to us, it has been rather a serious draw-back upon our prosperity. Still we are not discouraged or disheartened. Several of our mail subscribers complain that their papers, (when they are fortunate enough to get them at all,) come to them without covers and are badly worn, &c. Our papers are enclosed in good and substantial envelops, according to law, we believe, when they go from us; and if our good Postmasters will allow them to pass on to the place of their destination, according to gospel, we think you will get your papers in order, and by due course of mail.

The present year, thus far, is distinguished by many calamities among all people, nations, kindreds and tongues. Our martyred Prophet foretold us of these very things, and also said, "the Saints shall hardly escape." The cholera has swept off its thousands and tens of thousands,—famine has done much in Ireland and in other countries. Hungary, Austria, Russia, Italy and France, with many states of the German Confederacy, are cursed with the horrors and calamities of war. Who so dull of perception that he cannot see and realize that many of the prophecies of Joseph Smith are now being fulfilled? As face answers to face in water, so does the present scenery of the world answer to the prophetic visions of that murdered Prophet. When in life, he was called by many an impostor, a juggler, a money digger, a drunkard, a disturber of the peace, a tyrant, a knave, a false prophet, a scoundrel. While we thus write about the Prophet, some sort of prophetic spirit rests upon us, and we will venture to predict that many of his bitterest accusers will live long enough to discover that, although they basely and treacherously murdered his body, the ALMIGHTY DISPOSER of events, is honoring his words by fulfilling them,—and that too, to the joy of the pure in heart, and to the consternation, shame mortification and despair of those who rejoiced in his murderous end. Ye Saints of the Latter-day whose hands are clean, whose spirits are pure, and whose hearts are innocent and free from guile, lift up your heads and rejoice, not because misery and desolation cause the world to mourn; but because your redemption draweth nigh.

Fire is a most powerful agent of destruction. Ungodly and unprincipled men will burn millions to get a chance to plunder ten dollars worth perhaps. Evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse—a consumption is decreed upon all the earth—the day of burning has begun; and men who, before of old, were ordained to this condemnation, will apply the torch. See Rev. xvii, 16 and 17; also xviii, 8. The great whore there spoken of, or modern Babylon is the aristocratic and commercial world. Rev. xviii, 24th, will tell what was found in her, and the 20th verse of the same chapter will tell what should be done at her downfall.

We are now within the wake of the commotions troubles and disasters of the last days: and it shall be one part of our duty to "cry aloud and spare not."

Sometimes our feelings have been harrowed up and soured with indignation at the conduct of some of our former persecutors; but when we look forward through the glass of ancient and modern prophecy and see the "fiery flood of ruin," that is about to sweep over the world, our indignation is calmed, and compassion rises up within us and says: "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."

We ask our friends to come nobly forward and subscribe for the Guardian, and thereby prove to us that our past efforts have met your approval, if, indeed, such be the case. If they have not met your approval, give us your aid and thereby encourage us to do better. We will try to keep you faithfully apprised of all important matters connected with the church, and show you as far as we are able, the connection of ancient and modern prophecy with the events of these days.

Departure of the Last Train.

On Friday evening, the 13th inst., we visited the Ferry opposite Winter Quarters, and all the emigrants were across the river except the Burlington company, consisting of some dozen wagons.

While we were there, we drew nigh to the wagon of Mr. Leonard, a blind man, and entered into conversation with him and also with his wife. They appeared to be above the medium for intelligence and seemed to possess fine feelings and were interesting. We should judge them very well off for the goods of this world, &c. They told us about their teams and wagons being attached in Burlington just before they were ready to start.

A certain lawyer there, whose life, an angel of mercy, in the person of Mrs. Leonard, had been the instrument of saving in an earlier day when disease fatal raged there, had been employed by Mr. L. to transact some little business in the line of his profession. Mr. L. frequently asked him for his bill, but received for answer that he need not trouble himself about that, intimating that the gratitude he owed to his wife for her kind attention to him when disease had disarmed him of almost every power, would not allow him to make any charge for his professional services. Mrs. L. being an excellent seamstress, did sewing for this advocate of men's rights to the amount of some thirty or forty dollars as an additional offset for the professional services rendered her husband.

But when just on the eve of starting, slap came the attatchment upon the teams and wagons of the blind man, at the instigation of a lawyer (we won't tell his name) whose life perhaps had been saved by the kind care of Mrs. L. A town lot worth seventy-five dollars and ten dollars more appeased the rapacious disposition of the legal gentleman. He was taken to do rather unceremoniously for his conduct by a jolly, plain "rough and ready" sort-of-a-permitted-to-say-any-thing. "Leonard" said he. "did not owe you anything, for I have heard you say so, and why did you jump on to him now?" "Oh," says the man of justice, "the Mormons are getting away all his property, and I might as well come in for a share as not." This reminds us of a couple of lines from Dr. Watts:

"How vain are all things here below,
How false and yet how fair."

"Better that a mill-stone be hung about your neck and be cast into the sea than to offend one of these little ones that believe in me." Woe unto you lawyers. "You say you see, therefore your sin remaineth."

But you may meet Mr. and Mrs. L. when you are blind and they both can see. But you need not fear any injustice, for Paul hath said: The Saints shall judge the world," and they will do right.

Subscribers—Attention.

It is desired and expected that those of our home subscribers whose subscription expires with this number will make immediate arrangements for the continuation of their papers if they desire them continued. Our six months' subscribers abroad will make the necessary arrangments also, for the continuance of their papers with our agents in their own vicinity. Our agents will be supplied as usual, and whoever wishes his paper continued will signify it to the agent by paying in to him the amount of his subscription.

Sow Fall Wheat.

We again call the attention of our readers to this important branch of agriculture. Spring wheat does not do so well. It is subject to become foul and weedy, is later in getting ripe—more liable to rust or blast, and at best, the flour is not so good. Bread made from it is clamy, heavy, and of a dark color.

Now is the time to prepare to sow Fall or Winter Wheat. Begin to sow it by the middle of August, and continue sowing till the middle of September.

Election.

The election for county officers takes place on the 6th of August next. Every legal voter in the county should remember that he owes an especial duty to himself and his country on that day.

Cholera!!—We hear various reports of the ravages of this fatal disease among the Indian tribes across the river. Rumor says that it is particularly fatal among the Pottawatamies at Kaw river. The French and half breeds are said to suffer most by it. We hear that our old friends, Messrs. Parks and Hardin, have crossed over on this side and are waiting for the disease to abate. We are sorry to hear this sad news from our old neighbors, the Pottawatamies. They are an honest and honorable nation. We wish them well, and are sorry to hear of any misfortune befalling them.

More Victims of the Cholera.—We hear that Miss Rebecca Holeman, her mother, and brother, died a few days since at Bellevue on the opposite side of the river, of cholera. Miss Holeman, we believe, was an instructress there, and on being seized with the cholera, her mother and brother went over to attend upon her. Her mother and brother died there—Miss H. we hear, was brought away while the cholera was raging upon her, and died soon after she arrived at home. There is now but one sister we believe, left of the family. They have suffered in the various persecutions of the Church—have endured much hardship and privation for the truth's sake; but are now gone to rest from their toils and labors here, and to throw the weight of their testimony into the scale, suspended from Jehovah's hand, in which the destinies of all will be weighed.

We have on our table the 4th number of "the Republic," published at Washington city, daily and tri-weekly, and edited by Messrs. Bullitt & Sargeant. It will support the principles of Gen. Taylor's administration. It comes to us full of interesting matter, and edited with ability.

Cholera.

From the St. Louis Republican of the 10th inst. we copy the following official report:

By the daily reports made to the Register's office, for ten days ending Sunday July 8th, it appears the total number of interments was as follows:

Friday, June	29,	140	in all,	115	of cholera.
Saturday, "	30,	125	"	98	"
Sunday, July,	1,	139	"	118	"
Monday, "	2,	127	"	99	"
Tuesday, "	3,	114	"	94	"
Wedns. "	4,	140	"	115	"
Thursday, "	5,	155	"	123	"
Friday, "	6,	162	"	119	"
Saturday, "	7,	122	"	83	"
Sunday, "	8,	125	"	100	"
Total for ten days,		1,349		1,061

Cincinnati.—The Cholera is equally as bad as in St. Louis. The Republican dispatches says that the number of cholera interments, up to noon on Sunday July 1st, were 99, other diseases 23. There had been very heavy rains and the atmosphere was pure and invigorating.

To noon of the next day, Monday, the deaths from cholera were 134, and 43 from other diseases. Of these interments, 145 were Germans. The great increase of the epidemic was attributed to the sudden change of the weather, from oppressive heat to unseasonably cool weather.

Telegraphic news from New York and other eastern cities report the Cholera on the increase.

Thus is this fatal malady sweeping off its thousands and tens of thousands. Strange indeed is the course of Providence; yet it is all right. Not a sparrow falls to the ground without His notice. His chastening rod spreads terror and consternation wherever it falls; yet it is applied in mercy to the victims that fall under its strokes. The glorious end must be obtained though the means employed are sometimes severe.

This disease is raging in various parts of Illinois. Business appears to be at a stand-still, or nearly so in St. Louis, Cincinnati and other parts. France and England are suffering much from the ravages of this plague—six hundred die daily in Paris.

We have great reason to be thankful that we have escaped here as well as we have. There has not been a case as yet in our town and only six or eight in the county. This is a high and elevated country, considerably north, water pure, sky clear, and lying on the borders of the great western plains, where the winds from the snow capped mountains far in the west, sweep along, driving before their powerful currents, the seeds of disease, generated in the impure atmosphere of the lower counties. If we only had plenty of stone and timber here, we should have almost a paradise.

We will, however, here insert an extract from a revelation given through Joseph Smith, Sept. 22d and 23d, 1832.

"Therefore let no man among you, (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church, unto the ministry,) from this hour take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom. Behold I send you out to reprove the world of all their unrighteous deeds, and to teach them of a judgement which is to come.—And whoso receiveth you, there will I be also: for I will go before your face: I will be on your right hand and on your left, and my Spirit shall be in your hearts, and mine angels round about you, to bear you up.

"Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple; and by this you may know my disciples. He that receiveth you not, go away from him alone by yourselves, and cleanse your feet even with water, pure water, whether in heat or in cold, and bear testimony of it unto your father which is in heaven, and return not again unto that man. And in whatsoever village or city ye enter, do likewise. Nevertheless search diligently and spare not; and wo unto that house, or that village or city that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony concerning me. Wo, I say again, unto that house, or that village or city that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony of me; for I, the Almighty, have laid my hands upon THE NATIONS TO SCOURGE THEM FOR THEIR WICKEDNESS; AND PLAGUES SHALL GO FORTH, AND THEY SHALL NOT BE TAKEN FROM THE EARTH UNTIL I HAVE COMPLETED MY WORK WHICH SHALL BE CUT SHORT IN RIGHTEOUSNESS; until all shall know me, who remain, even from the least unto the greatest, and shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and shall see eye to eye, and shall lift up their voice, and with the voice together sing this new song, saying,

The Lord hath brought again Zion
The Lord hath redeemed his people, Israel,
According to the election of grace,
Which was brought to pass by the faith,
And covenant of their fathers.
The Lord hath redeemed his people,
And satan is bound, and time is no longer:
The Lord hath gathered all things in one:
The Lord hath brought down Zion from above:
The Lord hath brought up Zion from beneath;
The earth hath travailed and brought forth her strength;
And truth is established in her bowels;
And the heavens have smiled upon her;
And she is clothed with the glory of her God:
For he stands in the midst of his people:
Glory, and honor, and power, and might,
Be ascribed to our God, for he is full of mercy,
Justice, grace and truth, and peace,
For ever and ever Amen.

Dr. John M. Bernhisel, is recognized as a traveling agent for the Guardian. We will be responsible for any monies paid to him on subscription for this paper.

The Last Train.

On Saturday, the 14th inst., about noon, the last wagons left Winter Quarters, and began to bend their way westward over the boundless plains that lie between us and the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. Slowly and majestically they moved along, displaying a column of upwards of three hundred wagons, cattle, sheep, hogs, horses, mules, chickens's, turkies, geese, doves, goats, &c., &c., besides lots of men, women and children. In this company was the Yankee with his machinery, the Southerner with his colored attendant—the Englishman with all kinds of mechanic's tools—the farmer, the merchant, the doctor, the minister, and almost every thing necessary for a settlement in a new country. Provisioned for nine months from the time of starting. They were led by Messrs. Geo. A. Smith and Ezra T. Benson. They have our best wishes for their prosperity and safety on the journey, and we hope they may be able to make for themselves comfortable homes in the distant and secluded valleys of our American Piedmont.

River.—The river has been receding slowly at this point for sometime,—but in good boating condition.

We publish below Elder Appleby's statement concerning Capt. Brooks and the steamer Lightfoot. We have been acquainted with Elder Appleby for many years, and do know that he is not hasty or apt to exaggerate any matter.

The whole company corroborate his statements, and we are forced to look upon Capt. Brooks and the steamer Lightfoot almost as a piratical concern. Many complain that their goods and boxes were not delivered but taken back by that boat, and particularly caution our own people against it.

Some men consider that they are not only justifiable, but quite gallant in committing almost any offence against the Mormons. But while it is said: "Blessed are you who mourn and lament now, for you shall rejoice," we will endure in the best possible manner, these offences knowing that the tables will turn sometime.

Indian Territory, Omaha Land, West Side Mo. River, July 13, 1849.

Br. O. Hyde:—Having recovered in part from my indisposition, according to promise, I give a brief but true account of the ungentlemanly and dastardly conduct of Capt. Brooks, of the Steamer Lightfoot towards me and all the company of Saints, amounting to some 160, young and old, while on the Missouri River, and which I wish published in the Guardian, that if possible, he may not have another opportunity of fleecing, and abusing any more of our people or friends.

I was on board of his Boat, while at St. Louis, conversing with him in regard to a passage up the river, but I did not like his appearance, although he there had a member of our Church as mate, who as I was informed he had soliciting passengers for Council Bluffs. However, in few days after Elder Scovill arrived at St. Louis from New Orleans, with about 130 Saints, and chartered the Lightfoot to convey him and his company to Council Bluffs, after which it appears the former mate was discharged, and a nephew of Capt. Brooks, by name of Allen, a young insolent upstart, appointed to fill his place. It is well known that myself and company left St. Louis on the Steamer Monroe and only succeeded in reaching Jefferson City on account of Cholera, and where many of my friends fell. After tarrying at Jefferson City about one week, the Steamer Lightfoot landed at that place, with Elder Scovill's company on board bound for Council Bluffs. Being desirous of pursuing our journey, I made a contract with Capt. Brooks to convey those of our company desirous of going to the Bluffs, his charges being the same from there as from St Louis, ie. $12, cabin, $5, deck, and 62½ cts. per hundred for freight—those of the company not going in the cabin to have the use of the boiler deck, with the offer of given my wife, (as is customary, I being agent of the company) a free passage in the cabin. When our trunks, beds, provisions, &c, were brought on board, every article by order of the mate, Mr. Allen, was thrown into the hold, against all our remonstrances. When we arrived at Lexington, we had through much trouble recovered some of our trunks, &c., and had them on the boiler deck, which we had chartered, when the Captain ordered all them removed, and us also among the sick, &c., on the stern of the boat. I protested against it reminded him of his contract, for which I only received abuse both from him and the mate. However, we held fast to the contract, as we had paid for our freight and passage to the Bluffs, the following morning after we came on board—staid on the boiler deck, and in a day or two, had our things removed back again, at St. Joseph, he took on board several tons more of freight which impeded the boat's progress so much, the engine being old, and of but little power, a boat unfit for any Captain to undertake to stem the current of the Missouri River. After two or three days endeavoring to stem the current, after we left St. Joseph, some times going down stream a great deal faster than up, over rocks, snags, sand bars, &c., endangering our lives, we made Iowa Point, where the Captain ran the boat ashore, and put an additional fifty cents per day for every cabin passenger. Those that went on deck and had provisions in the hold were denied the right of getting them out. Myself having provisions, &c., solicited one of the hands to get me out a barrel of crackers, I opened the same took some out, and was charged by the mate of stealing crackers! These I had purchased and paid for in St. Louis, and when some had scarcely any thing to eat, the Captain ordered the mate to close the hatchways, and let no one into the hold, to get any thing, and if they attempted it to put them on shore.

After laying at Iowa Point for nearly a week, in the mean time several of our friends, and some of the crew had died of the cholera, the hands of the boat being drunk, fighting, and abusing, by kicking and striking, without any provocation, some belonging to our company in the midst of affliction, the Captain looking on and laughing at the same and insulting us in other ways. He comes to the determination of going no farther, but leaving us some 175 miles from our place of destination, retaining all our monies paid in full for freight and passage, putting the whole of the company sick and well, together with some 100 tons freight all on shore in the woods, and leave us to shift for ourselves the best way we could, and when we protested against it he threatened hostilities, if we obejected, and because I remarked "is there no law to protect a man's rights here, &c." He damned me and abused me beyond every thing I ever received or took from any man before, and I will here say perhaps it was well for Capt. Brooks that my revolver was in my trunk down in the hold under the hatches, or else it is quite likely he would never abused me again or cheated and wronged another company of my brethren, and if the counsellors of the companies had been of the same mind and determined as I was, we would have made Capt. Brooks done right and made him fulfil his contract, and not swindle us out of hundreds of dollars, or else he and his old boat too, would have found the bottom of the Missouri River. However, he carried his determination into effect by dropping down to Savannah landing, and putting all on shore, and returning back to St. Louis.

Our trunks, chests, boxes, &c., were broken and torn to peices, several articles were missing, among the rest one gentleman had twenty gallons of brandy on board the whole had been extracted, and the barrel filled with Missouri River water, another five gallons, and all taken but about one gallon. When the articles belonging to Br. Brown, shipped at St, Louis, in good order and was reshipped at St. Joseph on board the St. Croix, they were shipped, as per bill of lading in bad order. After tarrying at Savannah landing for a few days the steamer St. Croix came along and conveyed our company and freight up to Council Point, the captain and officers, being gentlemen, and whom I would recommend to our friends to travel up the Missouri. But warn them against Capt. Brooks, whom I consider a swindler and a blackguard, devoid of principle, refinement, manners, or breeding, and wholy incompetent to fill the station of steamboat Captain, a man that has wronged the widow, the sick, the poor and the orphan, by demanding and receiving full fare for services agreed to be performed, but never rendered. I might say more but let this suffice. I call upon every passenger on board to corroborate what I have here stated, they will all respond it is truth. May heaven reward Capt. Brooks.

W. I. APPLEBY.

If our mail subscribers do not get all their papers through our agents, let them enquire at the Post office for themselves, individually, and they may find them.

Died at St. Joseph, Mo., of congestive fever, a few days since, Mr. George Smith, of the firm of Smith & Bedford, of St. Joseph, of the firm of Smith & Tootle of this town, and of the late firm of Smith & Stutsman.

Mr. Smith was a very enterprising merchant, and we believe an honorable man. He was respected in this community so far as he was known, and we believe justly shared the respect and confidence of the citizens of his own town.

The country has lost a valuable citizen, and his wife and children, an affectionate husband and father.

Special Conference.

A conference of the Church in this county convened on Sunday the 22nd inst., was to fill some vacancies occasioned by the removal of Elders. G. A. Smith and E. T. Benson to the Valleys of the Mountains.

The conference was unanimous in the choice of the High Council to stand as the legitimate advisers of the presiding officer of the Church in Pottawatamie County; and Elder Aaron Johnson was chosen as the presiding Bishop to receive the tithing, and with it to provide for the poor. He is a member of the High Council, and will receive his instructions from time to time, from that body. The day was unfavorable, yet the Tabernacle was nearly filled. A spirit of union and fellowship prevailed, and we believe the proceedings of the day were highly satisfactory to the body and mass of the people. We trust that every man will now be disposed to pay his tithing fully and promptly to Bishop Johnson or to his order, that the poor may rejoice, and that the blessings of a bountiful Providence may continue to descend upon us as a people.

MARRIED,

In this town, by the Editor, on Friday the 20th inst., Mr. JOSIAH REGISTER to Miss EUNICE E THOMAS, both of Kidds Grove in this county.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE HIBERNIA.

ST. JOHN, June 23.

The steamer Hibernia arrived at Halifax yesterday afternoon with 92 passengers, and will arrive at New York at an early hour Saturday morning.

Owing to the stirring events on the Continent, to which the week has given birth, business was somewhat restricted, though not to the extent which would have been apprehended.

FRANCE.—Wednesday an incipient insurrection was attempted at Paris by about 25,000 of the Mountain party, headed by M. Arago, and supported by the troops, whose numbers amounted to 60,000.

Several attempts were made to erect barricades. In the evening, the Assembly declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Thursday, the alarm considerably subsided, business, which was entirely suspended the previous day, was generally resumed.

At one time the peril was imminent. Numerous arrests had taken place, including several members of the Assembly. M. Arago and Ledru Rollin are among them. The latest accounts report a state of tranquility. All Socialists or Red Republican journals at Paris, except the "Nationale," have been suppressed. A very alarming demonstration on the part of the Red Republicans, took place on the 13th, and for a time a revival of the terrible insurrection of June appeared probable. The affair commenced in a demonstration got up by the Red Republicans as a protest. The city of Rheims is reported to be in full insurrection, and to have established a Government of Red Republicans.

HUNGARY.—Kossuth has arrived at Pesth, and was received in the capital as President of the Hungarian Republic. It would seem that hostilities are still carried on in the South between the Hungarians and the scattered remains of the Austrian army, supported by the Russians, but the reports which have reached us are so vague and contradictory, that it is not advisable to send them by telegraph.

The Russian General has issued a proclamation to the Hungarians, the pith of which is—"if they do not lay down their arms and submit to their fate with good grace, they will be made to feel the consequences of their presumption." Every effort is being made to rouse the people. The Magyar Government has ordered clergymen to preach against the Russians.

GERMANY.—In Baden a revolutionary struggle is in full play. The Prince of Prussia has left Berlin, to take command of the army of the Rhine. In Baden, Wurtemberg and Bavaria, the democrats are preparing for a conflict.

ITALY.—From Rome, we learn that the French army had commenced an attack on the 30th. After a sanguinary engagement, in which the Romans lost 300 men, they succeeded in entering several important posts; a series of attacks have since taken place, at which victory is variously stated. The invading army has suffered most.

The French papers publish conflicting accounts of the operations of the army, but from accounts received it is clear Oudinot had not then gained access, though he had gained possession of the north of Rome, which would enable him to command the city. The latest dispatch from Oudinot is to the 6th inst., at which time he opened trenches and had regularly besieged the city. There is no appearance of yielding on the part of the Romans, on the contrary, every thing goes to confirm the belief that they will make a desperate and determined resistance to the invaders.

The United States arrived at Liverpool in a crippled condition, the same day the Hibernia left.

The cholera was raging frightfully in Paris; eleven thousand had died since the commencement; 900 cases and 600 deaths are reported in one day. The cholera was also prevailing in Manchester and other parts of England.

The bill for the abrogation of Navigation laws has passed the House of Lords, and received the Royal sanction. It goes in effect on the 1st of January.

The British Government repudiate the proceedings of France in their treatment of the Romans.

IRELAND.—The counsel of Smith O'Brien deny the legality of the commutation of the sentence of death to transportation for life.

The crops throughout England and Ireland are very promising.

Additional Foreign News.

By Electric Telegraph.—The news prevailed at Paris on Friday evening that Oudinot had succeeded in entering the city of Rome in consequence of a rising of the populace against the triumvirate. The French Government, however, had received no such information officially, but negotiations for that purpose had been renewed with the probability of a successful conclusion. The news from Rome is vague. According to accounts from wounded men returned to Toulon, the siege was proceeding warmly. The heat was intense, and it was feared that the number of sick would be increased.

The news of the insurrection in Paris caused great excitement in the Departments. Disturbances were apprehended at Lyons, Marseilles, and Havre. The Government was prepared for such emergencies, relying upon the faithful attachment of the troops of Paris. The legion of artillery of the National Guard were discharged and partially disarmed in Guiseame. The Colonel has been arrested. Ledru Rollin was arrested on his way to Lyons. The Assembly had concurred in the proposal to close the clubs for one year, as a matter of urgent necessity. Paris was tranquil at the latest dates.

LONDON, 1½ P. M.—The daily newspapers have news from Rome to the afternoon of the 6th, as follows:

The attack has been resumed at the same point as yesterday, and cannon are again thundering behind fort Pancraglo. The palace Zorpada, palazza Modonna, and church Santa Zabina, on the Aventine, already show the effects of the enemy's shells. The damage no doubt will be frightful before the destruction is over. A tremendous thunder and lightning storm just now adds to the warring elements of man, and the scene is awfully grand. The quarter Gransteven, which was bombarded on the 5th, has been almost destroyed. Oudinot has summoned the Romans to surrender by the 6th, or that an assault would be made on that evening on the city. The journals are void of anything further as to the defeat and retreat of the French.

NEW YORK, July 3d.

ARRIVAL OF FATHER MATHEW.—Father Mathew reached the city this afternoon from Staten Island, he was received by the Mayor and conducted to his lodgings by a large escort of Temperance Societies, &c. Great enthusiasm was manifested.

Three thousand two hundred emigrants arrived to-day, 900 in one packet ship.

CINCINNATI, July 3—7 P. M.

CHOLERA.—For the twenty-four hours ending at noon to day, there have been 127 interments of cholera, of other diseases, 39. For the week ending at noon to-day, 127 interments of cholera, and 251 of other diseases.

To day has been observed as a day of fasting and prayer, no business has been transacted.

NEW YORK, July 3d.

There has been 138 cases of cholera, and 39 deaths. In Philadelphia 65 cases and 26 deaths, and in Boston 2 cases, both fatal.

NEW ORLEANS, June 22d.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS ON THE TEXIAN FRONTIER.—The Indians are committing great depredations on the Texian frontier. Major Van Horn of the 6th infantry, left San Antonio to operate against them. It is said that 500 California emigrants have been killed by the Indians in Mexico. The cholera is raging violently in the interior towns of Mexico.

BUSINESS IN THE CITY.—There is, at this time, an almost entire suspension of business in our city, and especially on the Levee. What is done is at a ruinous expense. Sales are but seldom effected on the wharf or from the boats, and from the frequent showers, almost every thing has to go into store. Drayage on a hogshead of tobacco is fifty cents, on a bale of hemp ten cents, and other things in proportion; and even at these prices it is difficult to procure laborers.

At the risk of offending some of our city friends, we would say to the country dealers and shippers not to send forward their produce at this time. It is not only subjected to higher and unusual charges, but it cannot now be sold to advantage. There is a general prostration, and indisposition on the part of any body to attend to business. The question of money is less engrossing just now, than that of health and life.—[St. Louis Republican.

BOSTON, June 26.

FEARFUL FIRE IN THE WOODS.—A Whole Village in Flames.—From St. John papers of yesterday, we learn that the fire raging in the woods in New Brunswick had increased with fearful rapidity, threatening great destruction of property.

A letter dated St. Andrews, 18th inst., says that a whole village at New River had been destroyed, together with the extensive Saw Mills belonging to Messrs. Frye & Farnham, and large quantities of timber.

About one hundred persons had been compelled to fly to the beach for safety. The fire was bursting out on both sides. Several other saw mills were destroyed, Robbinstown, where eight large vessels are being built, is threatened with destruction. The loss of property, grain and lumber, is said to be very large. No one can tell when or where the fire will stop.

Gen. Avezzan, the leader of the Roman Republicans has an interesting family in N. Y. city, consisting of his lady, six daughters and one son. Gen. A. was 15 years in prison in Rome for broaching Republican Principles. He afterwards assisted Mexico in throwing off the yoke of Spain, and left a prosperous business in New York to go to his present field of operations. His wife has just received a letter from him, and the note inclosing it at Rome, May 1st, says:

"The French advance guard attacked Rome yesterday, and after several hours' fighting were repulsed. There were many wounded and killed on both sides. To-day it is said a treaty is being made. The French are five miles from Rome."

HERR HECKER, an aid, adjutant, and some three or four other Germans, left Belleville last week on their way to Germany, to take part in the struggle for liberty now making by the Republicans of that country. A large number of their countrymen assembled to witness their departure.—[Republican.

JAMES R. FAYERWEATHER, Esq., of this city, has received the appointment of Mail Agent for the States Iowa, Missouri and Illinois. The rouges must now look sharp, for we known of no better individual to detect such chaps than squire Fayerweather.—[Burlington Hawk-Eye.

We wish that Mr. Fayerweather would visit the route between this place and St. Louis. He might possibly detect a rogue somewhere on the route.

Bishop Doane of the New Jersey Diocese of the Episcopal Prot. church has falied for the sum of $250,000. The New York papers say that he must have been very extravagant to make way with that amount. Besides the enormous debt he has contracted his wife had the sum of $12,000 settled upon her annually, and the amount of his income as Bishop. The New York Tribune is anxious to know what he has done with the money. Some men get their reward in this world and others hereafter.

Important From California.

NEW YORK, June 26, 7 P. M.

A letter to the New York Courier, dated San Jose, April 30th, says "over 7000 Mexicans had left lower California for the mines; most of the towns on the Gulf have been deserted. The Americans who desire mining on the Gila river, are prevented by disparity of numbers and by fear of the Mexicans. Fifteen thousand stand of English muskets have been sent to the mouth of the Gila from Mazatlan.

"Rumors prevail that the Mexican Government intends action against our Commissioners in relation to the boundary, and claim the whole of the rich mines on the Gila and its tributaries."

John Bull has a long head and an avaricious heart, and he may have thought it good policy to make the Mexicans believe that through sympathy and disinterested benevolence, he would espouse their cause against the Americans—stir up the Mexican Government against our commissioners, become the media tor between the two powers, or rather the dictator, then demand the whole of the mining country for services rendered. But Johnny Bull "can't come it." "Them are Yankees" won't take the opium, "no how."

VERDICT FOR INFRINGEMENT OF PATENT.—In the United States Circuit Court at New York, Tathan & Brothers, assignees of C. & J. Hanson, the inventors, have recovered $11,394 damages of T. O. Leroy, O. Smith, and R. W. Lowber, for infringement of a patent in the manufacture of leaden pipe. The Hansons discovered the welding property of lead, whereby the former processes of manufacture were almost entirely superseded. The court declined entertaining a motion for a new trial.

LATE PAPERS.—We return our thanks to Mr. Nuckolls, of Linden, for late papers in advance of Uncle Sam's slow line. How long will it be dear Uncle before you increase the speed upon this route? Give us an answer as soon as you can.

TROUBLE IN BRAZIL.—Letters from Rio Janeiro state that there had been some fighting at St. Catherine's, between the Brazillians and some California adventurers, of whom there are some 700 or 800 at the Island, principally New Yorkers. One American has been killed. Exagerated accounts of the affair were sent to Rio Janeiro, and the United States brig Perry proceeded to St. Catherines, April 21st, to inquire into the circumstances.

THE IOWA REPUBLICAN.—Easter n Morris, Editor of the above paper has resigned his seat in the editorial chair, on account of ill-health, &c. The Republican has lost an able and efficient editor. We hope that the paper will receive a more liberal support from the Whigs of Iowa, than we are led to believe it has heretofore done. The Republican is published at the Capital of this State, well conducted and well printed, and we certainly wish it success.

WEATHER.—The weather has been generally good for the past two weeks for our farmers—and they have harvested nearly all their fall wheat. The crop is very heavy, and we may soon expect an abundance of good new flour in our market. The rains for the past three and four days have probably injured the Spring wheat to a great extent.

Our Postmaster has received official notice from the Department at Washington that there has been a mail route established between this point and Fort Desmoines, to run weekly. Leaves Fort Desmoines every Monday morning, arriving here on the following Thursday at 12 o'clock, M., returning at 2 o'clock, P. M., on the same day. We are glad that a mail has been established across the State, as it will afford us early intelligence from the seat of government. Heretofore the letters and papers have had to come by the way of St. Louis. The mail is looked for here every day.

One thing more is much needed to facilitate our getting early information, and that is the establishment of a direct mail from St. Joseph to this place and to be carried by a coach.

IRELAND—The State Prisoners.—The English Government has resolved to commute the sentence upon Mr. O'Brien and the other Irish State Prisoners convicted of treason, to transportation for life. A petition, signed by 150,000 persons, for a further mitigation of the sentence, proved to be unavailing for the present, but the prisoners will be treated with consideration, and there is no doubt that ultimately they will receive a free pardon.

THE ASTOR PLACE RIOT.—The New York Grand Jury of the Court of Sessions brought in twenty-one bills of indictment on Saturday against individuals concerned in the Astor Place riots. It was stated about the Court that among those indicted were Captain Rynders, John S. Auetin, and other members of the Empire Club.

THE WEATHER.—The weather in New Orleans, says the Picayune of the 28th, is now quite pleasant and healthy. We have fine showers daily, which do much to cleanse the gutters and cool and purify the air. We hear but little of sickness, and we believe the cholera has nearly disappeared.

Two of our national ships, it is said, are to be detailed forthwith in search of the lost exploring expedition of Sir John Franklin.

PHENOMENON AT SEA.—The ship Portsmouth, just arrived at Warren from a whaling cruise, reports that on the 18th of March, lat. 57 S., lon. 74 W., she experienced a severe gale. While scudding before it, a dense cloud gathered in the West, out of which issued a violent hurricane and many balls of fire. One of these struck the cutting pendants at the mainmast head and fell in fragments on the deck, setting fire to the mast-head and rigging, and doing other damage. We do not remember ever to have heard of such an occurrence at sea. The Portsmouth has $20,000 in California gold dust on board.—[Boston Courier.

For the Frontier Guardian.

POTTAWATAMIE COUNTY, IOWA, July 1849.

MR. EDITOR—Sir: As a large portion of the Saints in the Eastern States expect to emigrate to this country next spring; and as I was frequently asked the question while on my mission in the east, what it would cost to go to the Bluffs? I have concluded to state briefly what it cost the company I had the charge of, and came out with one last spring from the east; and if you think it worthy of a place in your columns or will be beneficial to your eastern readers, it is at your disposal.

The company consisted of twenty souls, four of whom were children. Two of the children came on for half price and two for nothing.

We started from the city of Boston, Mass., on the 19th of April, taking our passage on the freight train on the railroad for Albany, for which, we paid $2 00 each, for passage, and thirty-five cents per 100 pounds for freight after being allowed 100 lbs. free for each passenger.

At Albany, we made a contract to Cincinnati for $9 00 for each passenger and $1 85 per hundred for freight. If the Erie canal had been open so that canal boats could run, our passage to Cincinnati would have only been $6 00, and freight $1 10 per hundred. From Albany to Buffalo, we tarveled by rail-road, then we took the steamboat on the lake to Erie; at Erie we took the canal to Beaver, and thence by steamboat to Cincinnati, at which place, we arrived on the 30th of April. Awaiting here four days for a boat, we started for St. Louis, paying $2 for passage and 20 cents per hundred for freight.

We arrived in St. Louis on the 8th of May. At this place we stopped till the 12th, and then, because there was no boat at that time coming to the Bluffs, we took a boat for St. Joseph, Mo., which lays 140 miles below the Bluffs; at which place we arrived on the 19th of May; paying from St. Louis $2 50 for passage and 25 cents per hundred for freight.

From St. Joseph each one came here the best way he could—some by teams, while others, after waiting a number of days, took a boat and came by water. If we had been a few days sooner or later in St. Louis, we should have found a boat that would have brought us directly to the Bluffs. Our passage then from St. Louis to this place, would have been $5 00 and freight 75 cents per hundred, making in all from the city of Boston to Council Bluffs or Kanesville, for passage $18 00, and freight $3 15 per hundred. If the Erie Canal had been open we should have saved $3,00 on each passenger and 75 cents per hundred on the freight; then all it would have cost in coming from the city of Boston to Kanesville, would have been, for passage $15 00 for freight $2 40 per hundred. A person in traveling can board himself for $1 00 a week and live well. Some of my company it cost them no more than 50 cents per week. I told the Saints, while I was in the east last winter, that it would cost them $25 00 to go from the city of Boston to Council Bluffs. I am now satisfied that they can get here well with that amount. I now can truely say, if any Saint at the east can raise $25 00 and has no more than 100 lbs. of freight, that, under ordinary circumstances, he can come from the city of Boston to Pottawatamie county, Iowa, with that amount of money, and have enough left after he gets here, to pay for a supper, night's lodging and breakfast, also to hire a horse, for one day at least, to ride round and see the country.

Many Saints, in starting from the east, cannot deny themselves of many things they see on the road, and often spend their money for that which they can do without, and, before they know it, their money is gone, or at least, much more of it than they expected; by which they become dissatisfied, feeling that the Elders or somebody else have deceived them, while if they would only stop and consider, they would find the fault their own.

J. HAVEN.

STOCKING.—We learn that one of the block inspectors of the sixth ward—after having been refused permission to inspect a certain house on Saturday until obliged to threaten coercive measures to effect his object—on going to the cellar, which had about one foot of water in it, found the body of a woman in a partial state of decomposition, having apparently been in the water some days. The man who occupied the house said that it was the body of his wife who had died, and that he put it in the cellar, because he could not afford to pay the expenses of a funeral.—[St. Louis Organ.

LATER FROM CHINA.—Late advices and papers up to the 30th march last, from the Celestial Empire, have been received in New York. The China Mail published at Hong Kong, states that a serious and probably a bloody contention was likely to break out between the Chinese and Foreigners, in consequence of a stipulation of the English Commander, Sir John Davis, that the gates of Canton, after a certain time, should be thrown open to the latter. The Chinese are bitterly opposed to this being carried into effect, and those engaged in the woolen trade with the foreigners, had a meeting and passed resolutions that they would not trade, either by buying or selling with the factories. The English had made a remonstrance through the Imperial Commissioner, Sue, to the Emperor, who returned an unsatisfactory answer.

SINKING OF LAND.—Some twenty miles below Ocala, the land for a considerable distance has been gradually sinking for a length of time; in places the tops of the tall pines have entirely disappeared, and the chrystal streams now flow where once the red man's knife glittered in the morning beams, and the startled buck bounded in fear at the crack of his rifle. The water has usurped the land; the prancing barb moves off for the light canoe—the stately oak humbles to aqueous secrations, and the wild game seek other coverts to make room for their finny victers. But this is a Florida peculiarly, and is daily illustrated in some one or other part of the peninsula. The country is continually sinking, no elevations are formed, save by the depression of a stretch of land; our annals record no earthquakes, no agitations of nature to create a mountain, or even a simple hillock; the subterranean conduits, with their swift and ceaseless currents, are ever wearing away the soil, and the crusty surface, unable to sustain its forrest burthen, plunges with the mass to unknown depths and abysses below.—[Florida Argus.

Gov. Ramsey, of Minnesota, has issued a proclamation announcing the organization of the new Territorial Government.—[Republican.

"BLOODY GROUND."—Kentucky has vindicated her title to this appellation within the last ten days. Besides the fatal duel at this place, and the rencounter between Clay and Turner, which has terminated fatally to the latter, there have been published accounts of two or three other murders. One in Woodford—William E. Blackburn was killed by Thomas Steele. A man by the name of Gorham was shot last week, between Lexington and Georgetown. A horrid and revolting murder was committed on the person of a Mrs. Foster, near Mt. Sterling. It is painful to read such barbarous details of depravity, so discreditable to the State.—[Lou. Dem.

SULPHUR AS A DISINFECTANT.—Mr. J. H. Alexander offers to unite in the proposition made yesterday by Messrs. Gray and others, for a contribution to clean the streets and disinfect the city. He proposes to furnish his subscription or $20 in sulphur, (about half a ton) to be used as deemed most advisable. Let it be tried and the result noted.—[Republican.

EFFECTS OF CHOLERA.—It cleans the streets, makes sensible men temperate, reduces the price of strawberries, raises the price of beef, allows salad to go to seed, raises the price of lime and sulphur, thins the theatres, crowds the churches, shuts off the soda fountains, depopulates the hotels, benefits the doctors, gives oysters and lobsters a holiday; and furnishes editors with a topic to write about.—[Cin. Nonp.

SPECIE IN BULK.—The British mail steamer has arrived at Panama, from Callao, with forty tons of specie. Two hundred mules have been loaded with her freight, which is to be taken to Chagres.—N. Y. Mor. Star.

The sum of $50,000 has been voted by the City Council of St. Louis, to be expended under the direction of a "Committee of Public Health," towards cleansing the streets, and for the adoption of such measures as the committee deem best for staying the progress of the pestilence.

ST. DOMINGO.—The city surrendered to Gen. Santa Anna, on the 24th ult. The President Jiminez, made his escape on board an English man-of-war. Some forty individuals were arrested, and the city was quiet.

BURYING ALIVE!—The Union of this morning relates an occurrence of a Mr. Schneider, living near the corner of Carondolet Avenue and Lafayette street who came very near being buried alive. It seems that Mr. Schneider was seized with the cholera, and his friends presuming at a certain stage of the disease that he was dead, his body was at once transferred to a coffin and hurried off to the grave yard. On reaching the cemetry last evening, and just as the coffin was on the eve of being lowered into the ground, a knocking was heard from the inside, which caused those around to remove the lid.—Upon this being accomplished, Mr. Schneider was discovered to be alive, and of course taken back home. It is said that he is in a fair way of recovering his health entirely. This should act as a warning to persons not to be so rapid in committing the bodies of their friends to the grave after death is supposed to have intervened. We fear that this is not the only instance of the kind that has transpired since the epidemic has been raging in our midst.—[St. Louis Era.

FROM SANTA FE.—We have received a file of the Santa Fe Republican, from April 21st, to June 4th. We have extracted such items of news as we could find room for:

Some ten days ago, Mr. Aubry's trunk was taken from one of his wagons, which was on the way to the United States. The trunk contained drafts to the amount of six or seven thousand dollars, three hundred dollars in money and a large number of private letters for the United States written mostly by gentlemen at Chihuahua.

The outrage was committed while the party in charge of the wagons, was at San Miguel and was sleeping under the wagons.—[Santa Fe Republican, April 28th.

A considerable portion of Colonel Fremont's property has been recovered. This property was abandoned on the mountains north of Taos, last fall or winter, by Fremont's unfortunate party, and a few weeks ago Dr. Kearnes and "Bill Williams," two of the party, took a few Mexicans and went out to collect it and bring it in. On the return of these Mexicans, they reported that the Eutaws had fallen upon them and killed the Doctor and "Bill Williams," and taken all the property.

Part of it has recently been found in possession of these same Mexicans who were out with them and acknowledged to have been present at the time these murders were committed.

Three or four of them are in confinement at Abiquin, on suspicion of having perpetrated or assisted in perpetrating this deed.—[Ib.

KANESVILLE MARKET.

KANESVILLE, July 25, 1849.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Address to Nature.

BY JOHN M. STEWART.

Oh! how beautiful, Nature, thou once did'st appear!
As in order thou roll'dst from thy Architect's hand;
"Very good," every part, he, himself did declare,
In the sea, in the air, and all things on the land.

Perfect, then, were all parts of thy works every where;
Perfect order then reigned through all things here below.
Sickness, pain, sorrow, death, were not known to come there—
But pure love, and good will, each on each did bestow.

There did'st form for thy Head a delightsome abode,
And for all living creatures that breath'd or that mov'd,
Ev'ry tree, and all plants, thy great Framer bestow'd
On the living "for meat," on the creatures he lov'd.

But my muse takes a turn: the vile Tempter came in Where thy Head and his Mate, and their neighbors did dwell
In delight, and in joy, and in peace, free from sin,
And his tale, to them there, he did cunningly tell.

Caus'd thy Head and his Mate to transgress the command,
Which thy Architect gave, when he placed them in bliss,
Brought a curse, for their sake, on the earth, or the land
Made them sweat for their bread, gave them plague and not peace.

Then thy works universal, oh Nature! were chang'd;
They became much deform'd, by this deed, which was done.
The productions of earth, sea, and air were derang'd,
And disease stalked abroad, and his work then began.

And from then, until now, sin hath work'd in thy way,
Spreading sickness, and death, and contention, and strife,
And will work till the coming of that bless'd day,
When the devil shall be bound, and cast into the pit,
And the saints reign with Christ during one "thousand years;"
In his glory, thy Head, on his Throne, then shall sit
And rejoice with his seed, who with him, have no fears.

Then, how beautiful, Nature, thou thyself, wilt appear,
As, in order, before thy great head, thou wilt stand;
"Very good," ev'ry part, he, himself will declare,
In the sea, in the air, and all things on the land.

MISCELLANY.

Plain Advice to Country Girls.

BY A LADY.

You know I said that I could quilt almost as fast again any two of you. The reason is, I take care of my hands. One half of you are too proud to do this. You would not be caught putting a glove on to sweep, or hoe, or weed in the garden, because you think it would look as if you wanted to be fine ladies. If you see any one taking care of her hands or careful to wear a sun-bonnet to preserve her complexion, you say she is proud and stuck up. But it is you who are proud—too proud to think you require any care to look nice. You have an idea you look well enough at any rate. So you just make yourself as rough and course as ever you can, by way of being independent. Your hands grow as stiff and hard as if you held a plough and swung a scythe, and when you take a needle you can scarcely feel it in your fingers. This is wrong. There are many things which women ought to do, which require their hands to be soft and pliable, and they should be careful to keep them so, in order to make them useful. Every woman who lives in the country should knit herself a pair of woolen gloves, with long fingers closed at the top—no mits, to let the fingers get hard. There should be a piece of ribbed work at the wrist to make them stay on.

When you use a hoe, rake or broom put on your gloves—when you take hold of a skillett, pot or kettle handle, take a cloth to keep your hands from being seared and hardened. When you wash clothes or dishes, do not have water so hot as to feel unpleasant. Many girls scald their hands until they can put them into water almost boiling. Such hands are unfit to use a needle or a pin. They are not so good to hold a baby or dress a wound. Take care of your hands and do not forget your faces. I have seen so many country girls who, at sixteen had complexions like alabaster, and at 26 their faces would look like a runnet bag that hung six weeks in the chimney corner. One reason of this is, they do not wear a bonnet to protect them from the sun. Another reason is the habit they have of baking their faces before a wood fire. I have seen women stand before a great roasting fire and cook, until I tho't their brains were as well stewed as the chickens: and they would get so used to it they would make no attempt to shield their heads from the heat. Nay, they would sit down in the oven and bake their faces by the hour; and this is one of the reasons why American women grow old, withered and wrinkled fifteen years before their time.

But another and the greatest reason, is your diet. People in this country live too well, and eat too much hot bread and meat. Country people usually eat richer food than those who live in the cities, and that is a reason why with all their fresh air, their average age is little greater than that of city folks. Thousands of beautiful blooming country girls make old sallow-faced women of themselves before they are thirty, by drinking coffee, smoking tobacco and eating hot bread. They shorten their lives by these practices about as much as city ladies with their fashionable follies. I do not know what you think about it, girls, but I think it is about as much a sin for women to get old, brown, withered faces, by eating too much, as it is for men to get red noses by drinking too much. Very few people think it a disgrace to have a bilious fever; but one would come from drinking too much, and the other from eating too much; where is the difference? All this is a very serious matter, for it affects health and life; and the reason why I talk about your complexion in speaking of it, is that every body loves to look well whether they will acknowledge it or not. Now people cannot look well unless they are well; and no one can be well very long who does not try to take care of herself. She who roasts her head at the fire, disorders her blood, brings on headaches, injures her health, and makes her face look like a piece of leather; when they swallow hot coffee, hot bread, greasy victuals and strong pickles she destroyes her stomach; rots her teeth, shortens her life, and makes herself to ugly for any use, except scaring the crows off the corn.

Everybody knows—or if he does not know by this time, then that same Everybody is a mere numb-skull, and there is no use sending him to school any more—that I never do believe a bad report about anybody, until I have the "very best authority." Almost anybody else may sometimes lend an ear to the tongue of the slanderer, but that important little personage, familiarly known to all, as "I"—my noble self—is always apt, amongst other virtues, to possess the rare gift of seeing clear through a false report at the very first glance. If you doubt this, just take notice of the first bad story that is current in your neighborhood! It will be no matter how many people tell it, talk about it, listen to it, and shake their heads over it; if it is clearly proven to be a false hood, you will find; no matter to whom you talk, that "I never believed a word of it." Now, I never would have believed the story I heard about you if it had not "come so straight!" You see, Mrs. Smith—that is John Smith's wife—told Sarah Brown that she heard Judy Stubbs telling Malissa Stubbs that Mrs. Thompson's girls heard Mrs. Johnson say somebody's cousin told it at a quilting, in our settlement somewhere, that you girls do not wash yourselves more than once a month, and some of you not that often! Now you see I never should have believed it, but I am sure Mrs. Smith would tell no lie about it; and the story is, that you wash your faces, hands and necks just because people can see them, and just on purpose to make folks believe you are very cleanly; but that the part of your person that is covered "never sees water," unless you take a notion to go and bathe for sport, once or twice in a summer. Now, of course this is like scouring off the outside of a churn or dough-trough, and leaving the inside to blue-mould. You good for nothing, baking, boiling, washing, scrubbing, scouring, saucy jades, how can you be so dirty? You deserve to have the cholera and yellow fever, and to die old maids into the bargain! Do you not know that your skin is full of little openings, called pores, through which a large part of the food you eat ought to pass off in the form of perspiration? Your body is perpetually decaying and being renewed. Your food forms new blood, new flesh, new muscles and bones; and the old refuse, decayed particles want to get away out of the road, or rather the new supply of vital matter wants to throw them off, just as living people bury the dead. The way for these little dead particles to get away is through these thousands of curious little doors in your skin, and if you let them stick fast until the doors get closed up, it will not be easy for any more to get through, so they must stay where they are not wanted, and load the fresh young blood with impurity, rottenness and disease, just as if people were left in the house after they were dead and decaying. When you do not wash yourselves, your skin is clogged with impure, foul matter, and it is no matter how much floor scrubbing or tin scouring you have done; no matter how many clean clothes you have on, you are dirty. Now, is that plain English?

Physiologists urge, in very pretty terms, the propriety of bathing, it is so good for the health; and it has now become quite genteel for people who can afford it, to have a bath house, and to the springs or sea shore to bathe. This is all well and right; but I have an idea that if some of them had always used a basin of water and a coarse towel at home, they would not require sea bathing so much. You have all heard the story of the doctor who told the anxious mother to take her sick child to the springs:

"What springs, doctor?" she drawled.

"O, no matter which, so you take plenty of soap along!"

Few doctors have the courage to tell their patients they are dirty, and recommend washing in a basin of water; but many a dose of medicine they give to drive away diseases that grew from the closing up of the pores of the skin. Cold water has a healthy, bracing effect that no one would believe who had not tried it. If you are subject to a sore throat, never roll your neck in flannel, but take the cold water you can get, every morning, or oftener, and bathe all round the back of your neck and ears with handfulls of it, and you will get rid of your quinsy in time. I used to have quinsy and putrid sore throat about three times a year, but I have not had an attack for nearly four. If you are predisposed to consumption, sit up straight, throw back your shoulders, and wear loose clothes, wash your shoulders and breast every morning in cold water, and rub them dry with a coarse towel, laugh with the children and sing with the birds, and the consumption will be apt to leave. If it gives you cold to get your feet damp, wash them well in cold water, every night, rub them dry, and the dew will never melt them. I do wish I could convince you how very easy it is to wash yourselves all over once a day. It does not take more than fifteen minutes, two quarts of water in a basin, a wash rag and a coarse towel; and how nice and fresh and clean you feel after it. It would do much towards counteracting the effect of your rich diet, by opening up thousands of little safety valves to let the surplus matter of coffee, &c., escape from the blood it is loading and retarding in its quick journeys through every part of your body. It would aid so much to preserve your health, cheerfulness and complexion—to keep away the sallow color from your cheeks and the dark shadows from your eyes. Just try it, and I will engage your roses will not be all May roses, but last until your June. J. G. S.

Some one, looking at a rich man, said, "Poor man, he toiled day and night until he was forty, to gain his wealth, and he has been watching it day and night, ever since, for his victuals and clothes."

Ozone.

The following letter from Dr. Merryman, to the editor of the Springfield (Ill.) Journal, explains the mode in which ozone (now supposed to be the generating cause of cholera) is produced, and recommending some remedies for removing it. But we must say, however, that no benefit to the living could induce us to endorse the recommendation of speedy burial. We consider it the duty of every man to see that the dead are retained unburied till the commencement of decay or other circumstances shut out all possibility of returning life. There are so many well authenticated cases of resuscitation several days after life was supposed extinct, that not until the evident decay of the subject should the burial be allowed. And it appears from the letter that phosphorus is expelled from the body only when putrefaction commences. Till this begins, the corpse does not in any way promote disease. The suggestion is inhuman in the highest degree.

To the Editor of the Journal.

OZONE.—Having no doubt that the opinion of Dr. Bird, of Chicago, is true, that ozone may have an agency in the generation of cholera, I desire to lay before the public, through your paper, some account of its properties and the manner of its production, that the public may guard against its evolution, and the danger of disease arising from it.

Ozone is produced in the atmosphere in two ways; first, by the decomposition of water by electricity. The quantity produced by this means may not be appreciable, except in very moist weather; and, if it were, there is no means of preventing the action of electricity on the moisture of the atmosphere, yet the ozone itself may be neutralized by proper agents. It is probable that the most abundant supply proceeds from the action of phosphorus upon atmospheric air, particularly when the air is much impregnated with water. Now as phosphorus is known to be eliminated from dead bodies by animal putrefaction, it will be apparent to every one, that as a preventative, it will be important to move from the vicinity of dwellings, and bury, or otherwise destroy, all animal matter that is likely to become putrid. But as this cannot be always entirely accomplished—as there will be more or less animal matter accumulating about cities—it will be necessary to use an agent that will neutralize the phosphorus and prevent its effects upon the atmosphere. This can be accomplished by spreading quick lime profusely over the surface of the streets and lots. The quick lime will combine with the phosphorus and form a compound that will not act on the air.

Another important measure would be to drain the surface of the streets and lots as dry as possible, so as to prevent evaporation, and consequently lessen the moisture of the atmosphere. But when, by using the proper tests, ozone is detected in the air, it will be necessary to use such agents as will neutralize it and its effects. The cheapest and most convenient means of doing this would be to sprinkle a watery solution of chloride of lime freely over the floors, bed-clothes, and furniture, more particularly in houses where persons laboring under the disease are, or have been lying. A good plan would be, likewise, to scatter sulphur freely over the grounds around dwellings. I am inclined to believe that ozone emanates with great rapidity from the bodies of persons who have died of cholera. If this be the case it would be expedient to bury them as soon as it might be done conveniently. As this article is only intended for public utility, I have endeavored so to frame it as to be easily understood by the citizens generally, and therefore have deemed it unnecessary to go into an elaborate disquisition on the subject, and hoping, too, that these hints may induce some of the practising physicians of our city, who are more competent than myself, to give a more extended and scientific publication of the history, cause, and nature of the infective principle.

Very respectfully,
E. H. MERRYMAN.

The Alexandria Gazette acknowledges its obligations to Caleb. S. Hallowell, of that place, for the following remarks on Ozone:

"Ozone, to which Dr. Bird accredits the cholera, was discovered by Professor Schonbein, the inventor of gun cotton. It is generated by the passage of electricity through air, and is the cause of the peculiar odor perceived during the working of an elcetric machine, or after a stroke of lightning. It bleaches powerfully, and is in many respects analagous to cholorine.

"Ozone, it is said, may readily be generated by exposing common phosphorus to moist air, and it is probable the peculiar smell of phosphorus arises partially or wholly from the presence of this substance.

"The question has been asked, what is ozone? In answer we give the words of Berzelius: 'We have thus arrived at the highly important result that ozone is no peculiar element, or combination of elements, but is oxygen gas peculiarly modified.'

"Lench has asserted that galvanized air, owing to the ozone it contains, can be used to advantage for bleaching, and is, in fact, one of the most effective bleaching agents known."—[Union.

Woman's Smile.

There is a star that brightly gleams,
Calm in the sky above,
And throws o'er life its golden beams
Of happiness and love;
A beacon pure, whose radiance bright
No lowering cloud confines;
But in affliction's stormy night
With heavenly lustre shines.

There is a star, whose magic power
So firmly binds the soul,
That e'en in joy's most sunny hour
Man feels its sweet control;
A glorious light, whose mystic spell
Life, hope and joy imparts—
And calms the wild tempestuous swell
Of earth's despairing hearts.

The star that from its glittering sheen,
Gilds life's declining slope,
And throws o'er youth's resplendent scene
The rosy tints of hope,
The star that drives the clouds away,
Though dark they frown awhile;
And ever shines with peerless ray—
Is woman's angel smile.

A writer in an Irish newspaper, after mentioning the wreck of a vessel near Sherries, rejoices that all the crew were saved except four hogsheads of molasses.

FROM CALIFORNIA.—Lieut. Beall, whose arrival at Mobile is announced in the Register, reached N. Y on the 30th ult., making the trip from San Francisco to N. York in forty-four days, the quickest upon record; he crossed the Isthmus in seventeen hours. His speed was doubtless quickened by the importance of dispatches for the government, and continued his trip to Washington the same day, May 30th. He confirms all the golden reports from California. Indeed previous reports about the abundance of gold are not only confirmed but surpassed. Everybody there is rich; people living in tents and empty hogsheads have gold enough to buy palaces in other parts of the world. Emigrants from all parts of Europe are continually arriving, and it is estimated that seven-tenths of the inhabitants of California will be foreigners, and that 100,000 men will be engaged at mining, and produce a least $100,000,000 this summer!

The prices of everything are most enormous. Board is from 12 to $21 a week; potatoes are 1s. a pound; pistols sell from 50 to $150; wood is $10 for a small load; spades are worth $3; picks, small ones, $5; horses 300 and $400; saddles from 25 to $50; boots from 16 to $25; shoes 8 to $12; knives 5 and $6 a piece; pantaloons 16 to $20, and coats in proportion; flannel shirts 8 and $10; blankets from 20 to $25, 30, 50, 75 and 100; some 150 and $200; liquor is from 5 to $8 a quart, it retails at 25 cents a glass; cigars 4, 5 and 6 cents a piece; houses rent from 1000 to $10,000 a year; lumber is worth $800 a thousand feet, and cannot be purchased at that. Carpenters are paid 10 and $12 a day, and can scarcely be hired at that. Clerks are paid from 1,200 to $2,000 a year. Men in the custom-house are paid $100 a month, and hard to be obtain.

Genuine Official Politeness.

The late Sheriff Summer (says the Pathfinder) was remarkable for his great attention to matters of etiquette. Nothing could make him forget his natural politeness, and at times this quality was exhibited when it had a most ludicrous effect. Towards criminals he was especially polite, and, on one occasion, when an unfortunate prisoner was to be executed, the sheriff, with that kindness of heart which was one of his prominent characteristics, paid every attention to the culprit which his dreadful situation seemed to require, and when the poor fellow was led upon the scaffold, and the rope had been adjusted, Mr. Summer inquired, in the most friendly manner:

"Does the knot suit you, sir?"

"Yes, I don't know but it does," said the prisoner.

"If I could make it more comfortable to you I should be extremely happy," said the sheriff. "Will you do me the great favor, when you are ready, to drop your handkerchief?"

"I havn't got any handkerchief, sobbed the prisoner.

"Oh! excuse me. Will you oblige me by making use of mine for the occasion?"

The handkerchief was accepted, and the black cap was drawn over the doomed man's head. After a short pause, the handkerchief was dropped. Mr. Summer cut the cord, and, as the body dropped down, he raised his hat from his head, and said, with a most polite bow and bland smile:

"Good morning, sir."

From the Bombay Times.

Petrified Forest.

There is scarcely perhaps a spectacle on the surface of the globe more remarkable, either in a geological or picturesque point of view, than that presented by the forest near Cairo. The traveller having passed the tombs of the Caliphs, just beyond the gates of the city, proceeds to the southward, nearly at right angles to the road across the desert of Suez, and after having travelled some ten miles, up a low, barren valley covered with sand, gravel and sea shells, fresh as if the tide had retired but yesterday, crosses a low range of sand hills that has far some distance run parallel to his path. The scene now presented to him is beyond conception singular and desolate.—A mass of fragments of trees, all converted into stone, and, when struck by his horse's hoof ringing like cast iron, is seen to extend itself for miles and miles around him in the form of a decayed and prostrated forest. The wood is of a dark brown hue, but retains its form to perfection, the pieces being from one to fifteen feet in length and from a foot to three feet in thickness, strewed so thickly together, as far as the eye can see that an Egyptian donkey can scarcely thread its way among them; and so natural, that were it in Scotland or Ireland, it might pass without remark for some enormous drained bog, on which the exhumed trees lay rotting in the sun. The roots and rudiments of the branches are in many cases nearly perfect, in some the worm holes eaten under the bark are readily recognizable. The most delicate of sap vessels, and all the fine portions of the centre of the wood, are perfectly entire, and bear to be examined with the strongest magnifiers. The whole are so thoroughly silicified as to scratch glass, and to be capable of receiving the highest polish.

CONSTITUENTS OF JOHNNY CAKE.—Three teacupfuls of corn meal; one of wheat flour; two of milk; one of cream; one or two eggs; one teaspoonful of salæratus dissolved in hot water, and half a teaspoonful of salt. Girls, hurry up the breakfast.

It is said that an editor at the South has purchased a race horse at an expense of $2,000, for the purpose of catching his runaway subscribers.

TYPOGRAPHICAL RACE.—A race in composition was about to come off in New Orleans, at the last accounts, for a bet of one hundred dollars, between Mr. Wat. Smith, the "fast man" of the Delta, and Mr. Pace, a compositor of the Bulletin. The latter is said to be equal to two ordinary compositors, while his competitor has set up two thousand an hour in burgeois type.

CHAPULTEPEC AND ITS ENVIRONS.—The following is a graphic description of Chapultepec and scenery. It is written by a gentleman from Xenia, a member of the California company from that place:

I have visited Tuscabaya and Chapultepec—Scott's battle grounds—passed over the very spot where Major Twiggs, of the Marine corps fell, visited and walked round the celebrated cypress trees of Montezuma, &c. There are a great many of these trees within the walls of Chapultepec; I measured one which was sixteen long-stride paces in circumference. The walls may enclose twenty-five acres, and the castle occupies a height at the north east end of the enclosure. It is very rocky and precipitous towards the city. I picked up a ball from the point of the castle where Pillow's Division stormed it, went round the castle, and from its bomb-proof top had a view of the valley and city of Mexico, surrounded with mountains, and dim and blue with a soft October haze, which renders everything gloriously beautiful. The whole valley lies at your feet—the city and surrounding towns and villas—the level and highly cultivated plains—the low range of mountains in the distance—the isolated ones nearer—every road marked with its lines of trees in full vegetation—the two long aqueducts in innumerable arches occupying the two roads branching at Chapultepec and leading to the city by the garitas or gate-ways of San Cosme and Belan-Churubusco—in plain view to the south-east are Tacabaya and the Governor's Palace, Scott's head quarters to the south, and Molino del Rey still nearer to the south-west. Looking at Chapultepec, and actually seeing its natural advantages merely, it is wonderful that it ever was taken, or even thought of being taken, and so, too, of Cerro Gordo, and every other place that I have seen. But the castle still shows in perhaps a hundred places the skillful and destructive effects of our artillery—a large 32 lbs shot (I suppose it to have been,) remains enclosed over the arch of the gateway—the walls are plentifully perforated and parts of the same broken up. We were in a cavern (artificial) which was charged as a mine, but which the Mexicans had not time to spring—it runs in various directions through the entire hill. Beneath the castle is a large cave the ventilating well of which opens on the bomb-proof top of a part of the castle looking towards the city. From Chapultepec springs the water, whence the city is supplid by the Belan gate—the archways of the aqueduct served to protect the soldiers from the fire of the Garita and other intermediate battles. They bear innumerable marks of the balls, musketry and occasional cannon shot—how a body of men ever got to the gate of Belan without being annihilated is wonderful—Molina del Rey is in full view; perhaps a mile and a half from Chapultepec—and how that place could be taken is also wonderful.

Late from California.

The long hiatus in the correspondenbe of our special and exclusive epistolary agent in California, led us to fear that he had been lynched or had died suddenly of some other disease common to newly settled countries; but we were pleasantly dissapoint, ed last week by the reception of the following letter under his own hand and seal. We had some difficulty in decyphering the original, and which appears to have been written with tobacco juice, and had had it not been for the gold dust used by the writer instead ot common sand, and which in most measure illuminates the dingy manuscript, the communication would have been wholly illegicle. It will be seen that the statements of our correspondent, upon whom the most implicit reliance may be placed, more than confirm the most favorable accounts heretofore received:

VALLY OF THE SACRAMENTO, April 20, 1849.

EDDYTURS OF THE SUNDAY TIMES: When I wrote before, spades was trumps—now it's dimunds. These preshus stuns is found in brilyant perfusion on the brow of the Sarah Navady, and several as large as fenix eggs has been seen in a mounting of gold, diskivered last week, near the Sam Joking; and when the snow melts it is supposed that many of the first water will come down with the current. Seed dimunds is remarkabul plenty, but a law has been made agen gatherin 'em, because it spoils the futer crop. None is aloud to be gethered under the size of a piece of chauk. Emrulds abounds, but nobody is green enough to pick 'em up when they can get dimunds. Other jooils is a drug. Beyand the plains, on what they call a plate of the mountings, bushels of little pieces of silver has been dug up, which is very convenyant for small change. A stream runnin' into Feather River, and partikarly rich in gold, has recently been diskivered by a German kumpany, and they have skewered the joint onership by threatening to knife any one they catch poaching on their fork. In honor of some outlandish Dutch water privilege, they call it the River Roine o. Some of the xplorin 'sociations which has gone far into the interyur, sends word that the alle there is all solid gold sot with roobees, but nobody bleves these outlying parties.

The depth of the oderiferous sands on the Sacryment is forty-eight feet eleven inches and three quarters. Wherever we find traces of gold, we sink shafts and draw it up with horses. The sand is so tarnation heavy it puts the mustangs to their metal, I tell you; but theres no help for 'em; they must hang on with all their might and mane, or down they go, and then its all up with 'em.

'Mense quantities of gold, at the very least, has been sent to San Francisco for some time back, and as fast as it is got in it is turned into ingots. Theves cannot egsist at the diggins—bein hung on the slightest suspishun. Grub is moderate; floods of a spiritus nater very dear. All kinds of salt provisions is sohl for a song; the tavern keepers 'most givin 'em away in order to permote thirst. Salt pork is five dollars a hogshead, and brandy ten dollars a half pint. Howa'ever as gold is plenty, every Jack has his gill.

This puts me in mind of the noose by the steamer California, that a ship load of young wimmen was coming out on a marryin' spekelashun, with one Mrs. Farnham as shoopercargo. We look for the same anxshusly. What is gold—what is preshus stuns without wimmen? Nuthin but vanity and vexsashun of spirit. Solomen says—I red it 'tother day on a page of proverbs I was a-going to use for waddin—Solomen says a wartshus 'ooman is more preshus than roobies, and in a kuntry without petycoat one feels the force of the remark. When a man has wealth he wants hares to leave it to; and in course—no wives no hares. You couldn't send me out one could you? I mean a wife, not a hare. If she's some pitted with the small pox even, I woodent care. The ordinariest goods is valuable when there is none in the market. There's duzzens I woodent a looked at in the States, that 'ud now be thankfully received and no questions axed. You can say, and truly, that I'm worth more 'an my weight in gold, for I've got a quarter of a ton of it in store at San Francisco, besides a sprungling of dimunds.

We have a sort of make-shift government here, (no allushun to the parrygraff above,) got up extumperry as one may say, that ansers purty wel for a new kuntry. Gen. Smith aint nobody. He's a clever chap and a spunky, no doubt o'that; but he haint got no more authority than a child in arms, if there was such a thing in the settlement. He ishoos general orders and proclamashuns and such truck, and the people read 'em, perlite literatoor bein scarce; but when they've red 'em, they larf, and shet one eye, and go and do just as they d—n please. It's allus so in nu kuntries.

Agricultur in Californy is purty much left to natur. It sticks in folks' crop to be soeing corn when they caa dig gold, and so they all go to the placers to make hay while the sun shines. This is the monster deposit bank of the universal world, and we'ae all cashiers and directors. Bring yer taters here if you want 'em dug, we can't take the trubble to raise 'em. The only wegetable we cultyvate is the root of all evil, and if you'll send us the rutes of the airth, you can have that in exchange.

The rainy season bein over, the weather is settled. I bleeve the heat hasn't been below 99 for a week, which, with the bad rum, has prooved fatal to some constitooshuns. Emigrants of all kinds and kuntries keeps pourin in by land and water, and the popalashun is very promiscous. We Mericans keeps the upper hand of the furriners so far, but it takes considerable powder and ball. Colt's pills is fine for mutiny. The bottle often causes a good many musses, but the barrel allus stops 'em. I shall probably ship my pile by the Criforny, next trip; and if I escape the cholera, the injuns, and the yaller fever going through Mexico, you may 'spect to see me befoye very long, and perhaps sooner.

A DISBANDED VOLUNTEER.

POETIC ANATHEMA.—A Boston contemporary utters the following malediction:

"Oh! for a tongue to speak the doom
The wretch deserves so basely vile
As to sneak into the editor's room
And steal his very best and latest exchange from off his file!"

HOW IT GREW!—The story of a lady who swallowed a wortleberry, which remained a month in her throat, and was then ejected in a fresh state, is thus "improved" by a Boston daily:—The berry was propagated in her throat, and a full grown wortleberry bush was ejected. Two quarts of wortleberries were gathered from it, and the family lived on puddings for a week, besides giving sone away to their neighbors."

BOISTEROUS PREACHING.—A celebrated divine who was remarkable in the first period of his ministry for a loud and boisterous mode of preaching, suddenly changed his whole manner in the pulpit, and adopted a mild and dispassionate mode of delivery. One of his brethren observing it, inquired of him what had induced him to make the change? He was answered: "When I was young I thought it was the thunder that killed the people; but when I grew wiser, I discovered that it was the lightning; so I determined to thunder less and lighten more in future."

"KISSING—HUMAN NATUR."—When a wild spark attempts to steal a kiss from a Nantucket girl, she says "come sheer off, or I'll split your mainsail."

The Boston girls hold still till they are well kissed, when they flare up all at once and say "I think you ought to be ashamed."

When a young chap steals a kiss from an Albany girl, she says, "I reckon it's my turn now," and gives him a box on the ear that he don't forget for a month.

When a clever fellow steals a kiss, from a Louisiana girl, she smiles, blushes deeply and says nothing.

In Pennsylvania when a female is saluted with a kiss, she puts on a bonnet and shawl and answereth, "I am astonished at thy assurance."

When a young man steals a kiss from a Lowell girl, she blushes like 'a new blown rose,' and says smartly—'you darsn't do that twice more."

Reply to a Pamphlet Printed at Glasgow, with the Approbation of Clergymen of Different Denominations, entitled

"REMARKS ON MORMONISM."

BY ORSON PRATT, OF ENGLAND.

Among the numerous productions which have, for the last nineteen years been circulated against the doctrine believed and taught by the Saints, it seems that another pamphlet has been palmed upon the world by some unknown author, who was ashamed to have his name appear in connexion with his own glaring misrepresentations.

As this secret author, in the first page of his pamphlet, has used no arguments, therefore there are none to answer; instead of arguments he seems very much inclined to apply to the Saints and their doctrine such phrases as the following, viz.: "absurd notions"—"a gross, a stupid, and an unphilosophical fraud"—"delusion"—"grovelling sensualism of Mormonism"—"clumsy and inartistic imposition"—"Atheism and blasphemy"—"fanatical followers"—"weak dupes," &c. Very polite terms, Mr. Author! Genteel epithets! Doubtless the "clergymen of different denominations" must feel themselves highly honored in approbating such irresistible logic!

On the second page of the "Remarks," a violent attack is made upon the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and Book of Mormon. The author condemns the revelations given through Mr. Smith, because he supposes they originated in selfishness. One of the extracts to which he refers reads thus:—"Therefore let no man among you (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church unto the ministry,) from this hour take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom. Behold, I send you out to reprove the world of all their unrighteous deeds, and to teach them of a judgement which is to come. And whoso receiveth you, there will I be also, for I will go before your face: I will be on you right hand and on your left, and my spirit shall be in your hearts, and my angels round about you to bear you up."

"Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple; and by this you may know my disciples. He that receiveth you not, go away from him alone by yourselves, and cleanse your feet even with water, pure water, whether in heat or in cold, and bear testimony of it unto your father which is in heaven, and return not again unto that man. And in whatsoever village or city ye enter, do likewise. Nevertheless search diligently and spare not; and wo unto that house, or that village or city that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony concerning me. Wo, I say again, unto that house, or that village or city that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony of me; for I, the Almighty, have laid my hands upon the nations, to scourge them for their wickedness; and plagues shall go forth, and they shall not be taken from the earth, until I have completed my work which shall be cut short in righteousness."

Now we ask the candid reader to compare the foregoing with the commands which Jesus gave to his apostles in ancient days, as recorded in the tenth chapter of Matthew, and he will find a striking analogy between them. A blessing was to attend those who administerd to their necessities, while a heavy curse, greater than that which Sodom should receive in the judgement day, was to befall those who would not "receive them nor hear their words." Is it not equally certain that similar blessings or cursings will be apportioned to those who receive or reject the servants of God in any age in which they may be sent? We leave it with our readers to judge whether it is more selfish to travel from city to city, without purse or scrip, trusting in God and to the charity of a cold-hearted coveteous generation, than it is to settle down in one place and hire out to preach for a good fat salary of some thousands per year like many modern clergymen.

Mr. Smith is called by this writer an "avavicious impostor," because he obtained a revelation requiring the Saints to contribute a certain portion of their property to build a house unto the Lord, and for other public purposes. But, we ask. Was Joseph, in Egypt, an "avaricious impostor." because he gathered up all the money, cattle, horses, and property in Egypt; and afterwards made a standing law that all the people should pay one-fifth part of all their annual increase. Was Melchisedec an "avaricious impostor," because he received tithes from Abraham? Was Moses an "avaricious impostor," because he received a revelation requiring all Israel to pay their annual tithes for the support of the Levitical priesthood, who officiated at the temple? Were the ancient apostles "avaricious impostors," because "as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles feet."—ACTS IV. 34 and 35.

This author next says that "Smith produces many revelations confirmatory of his headship in the church—that God would reveal his secrets to him only, and to no one else." This, sir, is a glaring misrepresentation; there is nothing in the Book of Covenants that limits the spirit of revelation to Mr. Smith only. The whole tenor of that book goes to show that every faithful person may receive revelation, in a greater or less degree. It is true, Mr. Smith, like Moses, was appointed the only revelator to the church, but this did not prohibit individuals from obtaining revelations for their own personal benefit, though they had no authority to obtain revelations to govern and direct others, or to control the church in its belief: this alone was confined to Mr. Smith, and to such as should be appointed to the same office. The seventy elders of Israel could prophecy and receive revelations in the days of Moses, but we are not aware that they were authorized to obtain laws or commandments for the governments of Israel, or to write revelations to control their faith; this appertains to Moses and to such only as were appointed to that authority. Hence the Lord said, "If there be a prophet among you, I, the Lord, will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream. My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house! With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold."—Number, xii.

This logical author seems to think that Mr. Smith could not possibly translate the Book of Mormon by the means of the "Urim and Thummim," which was before prepared, (which he contemptuously styles "Moroni's spectacles,") and at the same time translate by a power from on high. But we ask, when Aaron received the sentence of judgement through the "Urim and Thummim," will you not admit that he received it by a power from on high? Did ever any inspired man anciently receive a revelation through this sacred instrument, that was not given by a power from on high. This ignorant author finds fault with the prophet Moroni because he had writen this record, according to his knowledge, in the Egyptian characters. How would he have him write, if not according to his knowledge? Must a prophet write the revelations of God in characters or letters of which he has no knowledge? Every prophet that has ever written a revelation or vision, has written it according to his knowledge. Luke, in writing his history of the doings and sayings of Jesus, wrote according to his memory, at the same time having the Holy Ghost to bring all things to his remembrance, whatever was needful to write. —Luke, i, 3. Luke wrote according to his knowledge, and according to his memory. and yet he wrote by the inspiration of the Spirit; and so did the prophet Moroni; and what he wrote he professes to have written by authority, being commanded of God, though he admits the imperfections of the Egyptian hieroglyphics in which he wrote. Every person will admit that some languages have more imperfections than others. The revelations of God are perfect, though they may, like the Book of Mormon, be recorded in an imperfect language; yet, when they are translated by the inspiration of God into a more perfect language, like the English, they will be more perfecily expressed. Moroni, after acknowledging the imperfection of his record, (it being in the Egyptian characters,) says, "if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also; and if we could have written in Hebrew, behold, ye would have had no imperfection in our record." From this we learn that the imperfection of which he speaks did not appertain to the revelations which God had given, but to the language or characters in which they were written.

This author, finding nothing in the Book of Mormon but what is consistent, is at last compelled to invent a barefaced falsehood; and then he endeavors to palm it upon the public as though it was in that book. He says, that in the Book of Mormon "the Lord is made to say that they (the remnant of the tribe of Joseph, then inhabiting America) are the other sheep which are not of the fold of Israel." Now the Book of Mormon says no such thing: it only represents the Israelites in Ancient America as inhabiting another fold, separate and distinct from the fold occupied by the Jews in Palestine. The word "fold," in the Book of Mormon, has no reference whatever to the origin of the sheep, but only to the place they inhabited. That there are more folds than one, and that the word fold means place, is evident from Jeremiah, xxiii, 3, which reads thus: "And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their FOLDS."

In the next paragraph of your pamphlet you have falsely accused the author of the "Divine Authority" of ranking Joseph Smith with former impostors, and you pretend to quote my words to that effect; but you yourself, and all other persons who have read my tract on "Divine Authority," know that you have grossly misrepresented the same—that your pretended quotation is no where to be found in my tract, but is wholly a production of your own corrupt heart to deceive the public.

The next subject touched upon by this Dunfermline author, is the working of miracles. He seems to think that every person among the Saints, must, immediately upon entering the Church, possess all the promised miraculous gifts, or else, in his estimation, "Joseph Smith is demonstratively proved to be an impostor." But we know of no revelation, either ancient or modern, which says that these miraculous gifts promised, shall be received and exercised the moment one enters the Church. Christ did not say that these signs shall follow the believer the first day nor the first year after they believe in him. If these signs follow the believer at any subsequent period of his life, either at or near the time of his first entering the Church, or years afterwards, it would prove the promises true, and the message to be of God. Therefore if all the Dunfermline Saints (who are yet in their infancy in the Church) have not attained a full measure of all the gifts of the gospel, they need not be discouraged by their enemies, there is time enough yet to receive many blessings, and for all the promises of Jesus to be fulfilled. Thousands, since the rise of this Church, have been healed, both in the Church and out of it, insomuch that our enemies have been astonished, and have sought to impute these miracles to some other power than that of God. Therefore if miracles be a proof that this Church is of God, we have an abundance of evidence—in the blind seeing; the deaf hearing; the dumb speaking; the lame walking; the sick recovering, and in the copious manifestations of the power of God. As the Saints increase in faith, in knowledge, and in holiness, these miraculous gifts will increase in their midst, and all the believers in Christ will realise all the blessings promised, and shall eventually be armed with righteousness, and with the power of God in great glory; while all liars, and wicked, corrupt, and adulterous sign-seekers shall perish off the earth, and be trust down to hell.

On the fourth page of this Dunfermline tract, the author charges one of Saints in that vicinity of preaching contrary to the doctrines contained in our books, but when the candid reader reflects upon his numerous misrepresentations in many other instances, he will know how far to put confidence in this charge.

On the same page, this sage philosopher says that, "it is one of the established laws of optics, that no mortal eye can, by any possibility, see a spirit." Will this very wise author be so kind as to inform the public by whom this "law of optics" was discovered, and by what process of reason and demonstration it became an "established law"? Have any of our great modern opticians analyzed a spirit and ascertained its incapabilities of reflecting light, so as to effect the optic nerve of the eye? We are bold to assert that such a law of optics never was discovered; and no work on optics, either of ancient or modern times, demonstrates or establishes such a law. Were these three personages spirits who took dinner with Abraham, and afterwards walked with him quite a distance towards Sodom? or did Abraham see them with his mortal eyes? If he did not see them with his mortal eyes, we have good reason to suppose that he saw them through his mortal eyes as instruments; (all parts of the mortal body are only instruments by which the spirit of man sees, hears, feels, &c.) Abraham does not appear to have been in a vision or a sleep at the time, but apparently enjoyed the exercise of all his senses as at other times, yet one of these personages with whom he conversed the most, was the Lord, whom all acknowledge to be a spirit. Although we disagree with this author in regard to the spiritual man not being capable of seeing a spirit through his natural eyes, or the eyes of his body, yet we believe in the testimony of Jesus, that "No man (that is natural man) hath seen God at any time." The spiritual man may see God even through the natural eyes, or the eyes of his body, like Abraham—like Jacob—like Moses. While the natural man, or the man who is not born of God, has not this privilege, not that it is impossible and contrary to the "laws of optics," but that it is contrary to the mind of God that such a man should see him and live. This deceptive writer says, the book of Nephi (chapter xiii) speaks of nine persons being caught up into heaven, but if he will read the chapter again, he will find that it speaks of but three instead of nine, who were so caught up.

On the fifth page of the "Remarks," the author seems to think that it is contrary to scripture for God to authorize his servants to curse, or for him to avenge his enemies through his servants. But we inquire,—will not the Lord cause all his enemies, and those who reject his servants to be cursed? Did he not anciently give his servants power, that "whatsoever they bound upon the earth should be bound in the heavens!" Did not Paul curse those who loved not the Lord Jesus Christ? (1 Cor. xvi, 22.) Did he not curse, not only man, but even "an angel from heaven," if he should preach any other gospel than the one the Apostles preached? (Gal. i, 8, 9.) When Paul was smitten upon the mouth, did he not say to the high priest which caused it to be done, "God shall smite thee thou whited wall!" (Acts xxiii, 3.) If Ananias and Sapphira were smitten dead for telling a falsehood in the presence of Peter; and Elymas for his wicked opposition to the truth, was smitten with blindness in the presence of Paul; who can say that the Lord will not show forth like power in the last days, and acknowledge the blessings and curses that shall be pronounced through his servants, by his authority, in his name, and according to his will? Will not the two witnesses, mentioned in the 11th chapter of the Apocalypse, have power to smite and kill their enemies who seek to hurt them during the days of their prophecy? Will they not "have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy; and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite them with all plagues, as often as they will," until "they shall have finished their testimony" and be killed in the streets of Jerusalem? That God will execute vengeance upon the wicked through the medium of his Saints, is clearly predicted in the Psalm cxlix. The Psalmist says, "Let the saints be joyful in glory; let them sing aloud upon their beds; let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgments written: THIS HONOR HAVE ALL HIS SAINTS. Praise ye the Lord."

This author supposes that the Book of Mormon cannot, by any possibility, be the new covenant, as is stated in a revelation given through Mr. Smith, and refers to several passages of scripture, which he supposes to be contradictory to that idea. In reply we say, that their are many covenants which God has made with individuals in different ages of the world; as, for instance, the covenant with Noah, concerning seed time and harvest—the covenant of circumcision, made with Abraham and his seed—the covenant of the law upon Mount Sinai—the covenant made with Israel forty years after in the plains of Moab, (Deut. xxix, 1) —the covenant made with David and the Levites, concerning their posterity—the covenant of the Gospel, &c. Among these various covenants, there are two designated by the terms "Old" and "New." The old covenant of the law was done away in Christ, and by him the new covenant of the Gospel was introduced in its stead. The Jews, having rejected this new covenant, was broken off; the Gentiles, having received it, were grafted in. But soon after the Apostle's death, the Gentiles also "transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broke the EVERLASTING COVENANT," (Isaiah xxiv,) and have corrupted the earth with their abominations, having lost the authority, powers, and blessings of said covenant. But now, in the dispensation of the fulness of times, God hath renewed the everlasting covenant as made manifest in the Book of Mormon. This covenant, now renewed for the last time, is the same as introduced by Christ and his Apostles; and Paul testifies in Hebrews viii, that the gospel covenant is the New Covenant predicted by the prophets. Therefore, unless the Book of Mormon can be proved not to contain the gospel covenant, there is nothing unreasonable nor unscriptural in the Lord's calling it the "New Covenant." Now every one knows that the new covenant of the gospel, as revealed anciently, did not produce the results upon "the house of Israel and the house of Judah" that Jeremiah predicted; for that covenant was to cause all Israel and Judah to "know the Lord, from the least of them to the greatest of them." That same covenant renewed in the last days will produce the results predicted. The time for the gospel covenant to take effect among Israel, was placed in the future by Paul, (Rom. xi, 25, 26 and 27.) He says, "that blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: FOR THIS IS MY COVENANT UNTO THEM, WHEN I SHALL TAKE AWAY THEIR SINS." Here, we see, that the fulness of the Gentiles must first come in before the gospel covenant will save all Israel and take away their sins. To this end, and for this purpose the Lord has renewed it, and sent it forth by his angel to be preached to every nation, kindred, and tongue of the Gentiles first, to bring in their fulness, after which, it will produce all the results predicted upon Israel and Judah.

TRUTH WELL TOLD.—The New York Tribune makes the following forcible remarks:

It is a lamentable truth that the popular morality with regard to Debt and Non-payment is disgracefully lax in this Christian land. We have become so habituated to look to the Law for the collection of debts that most men have no idea of any pressing obligation to pay a debt other than the legal obligation. We understand that a man who can't pay is not culpable in neglecting to pay, but our "can't" has a very slippery significance. Many a man "can't" pay the mechanics and merchants whom he owes, simply because he lives extravagantly, hiring servants to do the work which belongs to his sons and daughters—because he lives in a more expensive house and spends more money for food, clothing, &c. than he has any moral right thus to dispose of. Many a man "can't" pay because he does not half work, nor exert himself near so much to get out of debt as he did to get in. The man who "can't" pay an honest debt has no right to indulge in luxuries—keep his sons at college nor his daughters at the piano. If he thus lives at the rate of three or four thousand dollars a year while the frugal and industrious importune him for what is their honest due, he is an outright swindler, no matter how high the circle he moves in nor how many churches he belongs to. These be truths, very obvious indeed, but apt to be forgotten.

SELF-RELIANCE.—The success of individuals in life is greatly owing to their early learning to depend upon their own resources. Money, or the expectation of it by inheritance, has ruined more men than the want of it ever did. Teach young men to rely upon their own efforts, to be frugal and industrious, and you have furnished them with a productive capital which no man can ever wrest from them.

"Men are made in the image of God." Gentlemen are manufactured by barbers, tailors, and boot blacks.

Two Minutes in Jail.

Possibly the following events, occupied near three minutes, but I think only about two, and have penned them for the gratification of many friends.

CARTHAGE, June 27th, 1844.

A shower of musket balls were thrown up the stair-way against the door of the prison in the second story, followed by many rapid footsteps. While Generals Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Mr. Taylor, and myself, who were in the front chamber, closed the door of our room against the entry at the head of the stairs, and placed ourselves against it, there being no lock on the door and no ketch that was useable. The door is a common panel, and as soon as we heard the feet at the stairs head, a ball was sent through the door, which passed between us, and showed that our enemies were desperadoes, and we must change our position. Gen. Joseph Smith, Mr. Taylor, and myself sprang back to the front part of the room, and Gen. Hyrum Smith, retreated two thirds across the chamber directly in front of and facing the door. A ball was sent through the door which hit Hyrum on the side of the nose when he fell backwards extended at length without moving his feet From the holes in his vest, (the day was warm and no one had their coats on but myself,) pantaloons, drawers and shirt, it appears evident that a ball must have been thrown from without, through the window, which entered his back on the right side and passing through lodged against his watch, which was in his right vest pocket completely pulverizing the crystal and face, tearing off the hands and mashing the whole body of the watch, at the same instant the ball from the door entered his nose. As he struck the floor he exclaimed emphatically; "I'm a dead man." Joseph looked towards him, and responded, "Oh dear! Brother Hyrum!" and opening the door two or three inches with his left hand, discharged one barrel of a six shooter (pistol) at random in the entry from whence a ball grazed Hyrum's breast, and entering his throat, passed into his head, while other muskets were aimed at him, and some balls hit him. Joseph continued snapping his revolver, round the casing of the door into the space as before, three barrels of which missed fire, while Mr. Taylor with a walking stick stood by his side and knocked down the bayonets and muskets, which were constantly discharging through the door way, while I stood by him, ready to lend any assistance, with another stick, but could not come within striking distance, without going directly before the muzzle of the guns. When the revolver failed, we had no more fire arms, and expecting an immediate rush of the mob, and the door way full of muskets—half way in the room, and no hope but instant death from within: Mr. Taylor rushed into the window, which is some fifteen or twenty feet from the ground. When his body was nearly on a bulance, a ball from the door within entered his leg, and a ball from without struck his watch, a patent lever, in his vest pocket, near the left breast, and smashed it in "pie," leaving the hands standing at 5 o'clock, 16 minutes, and 26 seconds —the force of which ball threw him back on the floor, and he rolled under the bed which stood by his side, where he lay motionless, the mob from the door continued to fire upon him, cutting away a piece of flesh from his left hip as large as a man's hand, and were hindered only by knocking down their muzzles with a stick; while they continued to reach their guns into the room, probably left handed, and aimed their discharge so far around as almost to reach us in the corner of the room to where we retreated and dodged, and then I re-commenced the attack with my stick again. Joseph attempted as the last resort, to leap the same window from whence Mr. Taylor fell, when two balls pierced him from the door, and one entered his right breast from without, and he fell outward exclaiming, "O Lord my God!" As his feet went out of the window my head went in, the balls whistling all around. He fell on his left side a dead man. At this instant the cry was raised, "He's leaped the window," and the mob on the stairs and in the entry ran out. I withdrew from the window, thinking it of no use to leap out on a hundred bayonets, then around Gen. Smith's body. Not satisfied with this I again reached my head out of the window and watched some seconds, to see if there were any signs of life, regardless of my own, determined to see the end of him I loved; being fully satisfied, that he was dead, with a hundred men near the body and more coming round the corner of the jail, and expecting a return to our room I rushed towards the prison door, at the head of the stairs, and through the entry from whence the firing had proceeded, to learn if the prison doors were open. When near the entry, Mr. Taylor called out, "Take me;" I pressed my way till I found all doors unbarred, returning instantly caught Mr. Taylor under my arm, and rushed by the stairs into the dungeon, or inner prison, stretched him on the floor and covered him with a bed in such a manner, as not likely to be perceived, expecting an immediate return of the mob. I said to Mr. Taylor, this is a hard case to lay you on the floor, but if your wounds are not fatal I want you to live to tell the story. I expected to be shot the next moment, and stood before the door awaiting the onset.

WILLARD RICHARDS.

THEY SAY—Yes, the Mormons say, that saints can live and die a natural death, without the aid of doctors or lawyers; but they cannot be saved in the celestial kingdom, without being baptised and confirmed by an elder.

PROVERB.—Where there is no counsel, the people fall; but in the multitude of counsellors there is safety.

The New York Herald gives the following enlarged description of the Salt Lake Valley and our settlements:

THE MORMON SETTLEMENT IN THE GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY.—The Mormon Saints, after enduring all the suffering of persecution in Missouri and Illinois, many of their leaders and apostles having been slain, and the whole body of the survivors having been hunted from place to place, have, at last, found a new Jerusalem or Holy Land in the Great Salt Lake Valley, situated between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada, which belongs to the territory of California, and may be called Eastern California. This is one of the most remarkable regions on the face of the globe.

The Mormons have just issued their first general epistle to all the Latter Day Saints throughout the whole earth. It appears that they have commenced a most prosperous settlement. Certainly they have a vast country before them. One of their fields contains eight thousand acres, and none of the corn patches number less than a thousand acres. There they count mountains and rivers, and gold mines, and the richest pasturage, and flocks and herds innumerable, amongst their possessions. It is generally supposed that the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada, and the streams running from it, will be found to be as full of gold dust as the western side on on the Sacramento. There is no reason to suppose that the geological features of one side of the mountain differ from those which have been developed on the other. Well, the Mormons possess all that country. They are an industrious race, and are well qualified to develope the resources of the rich region in which they have now located themselves. This is, indeed, probably their New Jerusalem, where they will be able to build up a city with pillars of gold, slated with silver, and paved with rubies and emeralds. Who knows? According to the observations on that region made by Fremont, and Abert, and Kearny, and others, some portions of that country are really wonderful. It seems to be a sort of Holy Land on a large scale. It has the Salt Sea in it, much larger than that of Palestine; and it has also a Jordan, a Mount Horeb, and almost all the great features of the ancient Holy Land, but on a tremendously large scale. Brigham Young seems to be the Moses of the whole concern.

This expedition of the Mormons has some analogy to that of the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt. Illinois, and Missouri, and Iowa have been to the Mormons the land of bondage from which they have escaped, and in which their leaders and saints were shot down, in the way that we shot down "the mob," in Massacre Place, up-town. Now they promise to become a free, powerful, and prosperous people. They have a great deal of religion, and a great deal of cant. But cant is a very necessary thing in a cold climate. It keeps them warm.

MARK THIS.—It is not the loudest professor of Religion who is the best Christian. On the contrary, he not only seldom possesses any religion at all, but he is the worst enemy of it.

NIGHT AND DAY.—Night and Day strove with each other for the precedence. Day, the ardent glowing youth began the strife.

"Poor, dusky mother," said he, "what hast thou like my sun, my heaven, my flowers, or my busy, restless life? I awaken to the feeling of a new existence, what thou dost benumb. I raise up that which thou causest to sleep."

"Do they thank thee always for thy raising up?" replied modest veiled Night. Must I not refresh what thou dost weary? And how can I do this better than through a forgetfulness of thee? I, on the other hand, take all which I beget, with contentment in my lap; and as soon as it touches the border of my garment, forgets thy false show and rests softly its gentle head. Then I raise up and nourish the quiet soul with heavenly dew. To the eye, that under the beams of thy sun, never dares to look towards heaven, I, veiled night, reveal unnumbered suns, countless images, new hopes, new stars."

Then tattling day touched the border of her garment, and silent and weary sank into her all-embracing lap.

SHE, in her starry mantle, in her starry crown, sat with ever placid face.

THUS IS LIFE.—If we die to-day, the sun will shine as brightly, and the birds sing as sweetly, to-morrow. Business will not be suspended for a moment, and the great mass will not bestow a thought to our memories. "Is he dead?" will be the solemn inquiry of a few, as they pass to their pleasure, or to their work. But no one miss us except our immediate connections, and in a short time they will forget us, and laugh as merrily as when we sat beside them.

Thus, shall we all now active in life, pass away. Our children crowd close behind us, and they will soon be gone. In a few years not a living being can say, "I remember him." We lived in another age, and did business with those who have long since slumbered in the tomb. Thus is life.

KNOWLEDGE.—If a man would know himself, he must, with great care, cultivate that temper which will best dispose him to receive this knowledge.

A proper means of self knowledge is, to converse as much as you can with those who are your superiors in real excellence.

Would you know yourself, you must be very careful to attend to the frame and emotions of your mind, under some extraordinary incidents.

If the head falters for want of proper nourishment and attention, the whole body will be feeble, sickly and faint.

☞ Notice.—All communications addressed to the Editor, must be post-paid to receive attention.

☞ Important—We will be responsible for all monies paid into the hands of any of our agents on subscription for this paper. Persons remitting money to us by mail, and not through our agents, must do it at their own risk. It will generally come safely, however, and there is not so much risk after all. The names of our agents will always be found in the Guardian; and in addition to which, they have written credentials from us.

Good current bills on any responsible bank in the Union will be received on subscription.

TAXES.

There seems to be some in this County who are not disposed to pay their taxes, and threaten violence to the officer if he attempts to assess or collect the revenue. Some of them urge, as a reason of their refusal, that our County is not legally organized, while others say that they intend to be attached to a new county that is to be formed and organized out of that portion of Missouri that has recently been ceded to Iowa with a portion of Pottawatamie County.

We cannot see how any man that is disposed to abide the law at all, can doubt the legality of our County organization. Would the auditor of State direct the officers in an unorganized County to collect the revenue? Would the Judicial power of the State give orders upon our commissioners for money to be paid over for State purposes, if we had no legal Commissioners? Would a Democratic Legislature try to disorganize a County that never was organized? How would you proceed to kill a dead man? Would the Secretary of State cause the official seal of the county to be executed, and forward the same to the District Clerk if he did not recognize the legality of our organization?

It is contended by some in the South part of the County, that they expect to be attached to a new County, that they say is to be set off there. Would it not be quite in season to refuse to pay taxes to this County after a County has been duly set off there? Perhaps they will get a new County there before the Session of the Legislature. But if they do, we shall add that item to our present stock of intelligence.

That portion of Missouri that has recently fallen to Iowa have some plausible pretext for not paying taxes to this County, but it exhibits a very bad principle in those citizens residing on the Southern borders of the County to refuse to pay taxes to officers of their own county, because they say that a new County is going to be made. We have no objections to a new County; but it will be quite in season to pay taxes to that new County when they are legally separated from this County.

We have many poor with us who have a legal claim on the County for a support; but to avoid this cause of complaint, the Mormon population (which is, perhaps, as twenty to one) pay a Church tax to support their own poor independent of the County and State taxes. The government of the County is conducted upon very prudent and economical principles. It can pay its liabilities on demand. The revenue is not squandered,—the books are open for the inspection of any proper person—we presume.

If we should not be thought guilty of a very heinous crime, and of Presiding over both Church and State, we would venture to offer our humble advice to the officers of our County. We would state, however, first, that the Mormon population, almost universally, have paid or are willing and expect to pay all their taxes. Note down the names of such as refuse to be assessed, of such as refuse to pay their taxes, and particularly the names of those who threaten violence to the officer who attempts to collect the revenue according to the order of the Auditor of State, and forward to him a faithful report of the State of affairs in relation to the revenue; and whatever course the Executive shall advise to be pursued, you can then act without doubt and without fear that you may not be sustained. If the government at Iowa City will not sanction the collection of taxes indiscriminately throughout the county, and uphold the officers in the discharge of their official duties, then we shall ask them to remit our State Taxes, and consent to let us make our own Government. We are content with the Government of the State, and we will try to honor it if we have it; but if we do not have it, we shall be forced to become a law unto ourselves. If liberality and equal rights are extended to us, we can appreciate them, and the world will, perhaps, have less cause to complain of us. Try us and see!!

Proposition for Public Consideration.

If it is really necessary for whisky to be sold in the place for pickles and medicine, and thereby make bad medicine that will keep many folks in a constant pickle, how would it do for the community to appoint a man that never gets in a pickle, and let him sell whisky under certain good and wholesome regulations, and the profits applied to the improvement of our streets—making bridges &c.? How soon, and how many applicants will there be for this berth? We shall see.

Did not the visions of the Lord clearly lay open the views and intentions of some men who secretly cherish the intention to bear the chief rule and sway in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but openly disavow any such wish or intention, they might succeed in their secret design; but by this they may know that the Lord hath spoken; When they enter to effect their diabolical purpose we shall have passed out unharmed and unobserved.

WEATHER AND CROPS.—The weather for the last few days has been clear and cool. The nights have been remarkably cool for the season—almost frosts

The wheat crop has come in bountifully, and is about all stacked in good order. The strong indications of early frosts should admonish every farmer to lay in liberally for hay, as the prairies are pressed with the enormous burden that now waves over their surface. The corn crop looks very promising at present, but very early frosts may prevent it coming to maturity. Therefore, "make hay while the sun shines." Weather warm and wet at present.

BENJAMIN R. HULSE, is our authorized agent in Oregon, Holt county, Mo., and also in that State generally.

A TOWN INDICTED.—The town of Danvers, Massachusetts, has been indicted for not establishing a High School. Good enough for it. The Town should not have been so forgetful of the character of the Bay State.

Salt Lake.

Many letters come to us enclosed in envelopes, addressed to the Salt Lake. This subjects us to a good deal of running back and forth to the Post Office. All persons wishing to write to the Salt Lake Valley, can direct their letters as follows:

Mr. A—— B——,
Salt Lake City, California,
By way of Council Bluffs.

You can mail your letters at your own post-office to the place of their final destination.

Some of our subscribers and correspondents request us to write them "long letters, and tell them all the news, &c." The Guardian is our letter and General Epistle. We have not the time to write long letters; and if some of our friends abroad would remember to write the very things they want of us, and trouble us with as little unnecessary reading as possible, we should have more time to devote to their real benefit. For an Editor to receive a large sheet of "foolscap" with three and a half pages closely written in a blind and illegible hand when he is in a hurry, or tired out, he is ready to exclaim over it: Oh mercy! what have we done that this should appear? We are always glad to hear from our friends, and to respond to their wishes so far as it may be consistent. But consider first the very thing you want when you are going to write to us or ask our counsel verbally: preface your communications with the very thing you want and with nothing else; and then the preface is all you need to trouble us with. Remember that our time is precious. We have the care and management of the whole Church in Pottawatamie County—have to attend at all her principal councils—must give individual advice in every vexed and intricate affair—preach on every Sabbath day, and on other occasions—must give counsel and advice to the churches abroad in Europe and in America—must select and send out elders—give advice and direction to them when in the field; and in fact, if any body wants to hire a man or woman, or collect a debt through the county, Br. Hyde must do it, or cause it to be done. He also edits the Guardian, provides for a large family—and also for many comers and goers, and he has to be on hand, and it is without fee or reward,—without salary, gift or donation. His own hands supply his wants, and none can say they have to support him. Were it not that some rascally postmasters rob us of about fifty dollars every now and then; with our labors in the field and in the chair, we could get along very nicely. Now just come forward and subscribe liberally for the coming six months, and we will try to find time to read all your letters, and respond to as many as we can.

Counsel.

We would counsel and advise our friends through the States to assemble here this Summer and Fall. There have so many oxen, cows, horses and mules been taken away from here by the late Western emigrants, that all your stock may be easily wintered here, as there is every prospect of a large surplus of food for man and beast. Your will be so far on your journey, and will be ready for an early start in the Spring. Come then with your stock and winter here if it is consistent for you. Our wagon makers are all busy in making wagons for your western expedition. Come then to the place of preparation and out-fitting, tarry not, but come—if at all consistent.

The New York people are playing Boz with Father Mathew. They have discovered that he is of noble blood. A very fortunate discovery—as it would not be becoming in the citizens of that emporium to be making another Boz out of common blood.

Health of Kanesville.

We are doubly thankful to our Great Creator that we are enabled to say that there was never a more healthy time with us. Not a case of sickness in town of any kind that we know of: neither has there been for a long time. Persons coming here from below express great surprize at seeing us indulging freely in the use of cucumbers, roasting ears, green peas and beans, and in the use of all the usual vegetables of the season which abound in this section. The blessing of Heaven, coupled with our industry, produced them; and thankful are we that we have health and liberty to enjoy them.

Artificial Curiosities of Pottawatamie.

About the 4th of July last, and previous, a number of men were occasionally seen going over into the Bluffs across the bottom in an East or Southeast direction from Mr. Browning's. One man who rode a grey pony was often seen bending his way over in that direction, sometimes a team would go. This man on the grey pony was once seen at the mouth of a certain hollow in the bluffs, and on being discovered, immediately disappeared in a little growth of timber as though he had had a sudden call.

A gentleman of our acquaintance was hunting through this lonely place for timber the other day, and he there discovered, as he informs us, where some curious manufactory had been established, but vacated; leaving behind the marks of a printing or some other press. The barrel or cask did not burn up, nor the lever, and there were the notches cut in an oak log, where the machine stood and had been screwed down. That did'nt burn up too. The great hole in the ground where the machine had been buried had not been filled up properly. The marks of the big levers that pried it out of its bed were very plain on the margin of the hole—not far away there was a little hole big enough to hold quite a keg of bogus dollars for a day or night. That wan't filled too. That green elm log that the "big screw" went through—that wouldn't burn up neither. Now if the fire had burned good, all these things would have been obliterated. But our informant thinks that the trail from this sequestered valley led over in the direction of another rather lonely place, known as the Babcock farm, or possibly over on the Niethnabotna where they are building mills, that perhaps they may avail themselves of the benefit of water power. It is said that the team owned by the grey pony man seemed to be headed over in that direction.

Thus the march of empire, science, and improvement is evidently Eastward.

Some one asked why he was away out there in that secret place with his team:—Our devil answered; "why, don't you know? It was to get out of the mud." We have been kindly furnished with the names of those persons that were seen from time to time, going over in that direction, and the names of some that were seen on the ground; but timidity and fear have suppressed them until now. We have them nicely salted down and laid by, and when the sign comes round right, we can use them to very good advantage, and the proof likewise.

There were eyes upon them when they least suspected it, as we learn. We are glad to hear that no member of our church was seen in their company. God grant that there never may be one seen with such associates when it can be avoided.

Cutlerism.

It is frequently reported to us that Father Cutler and the Silver Creek Branch of the Church are going widely astray, and that they are saying and doing many things—that some of them are holding secret meetings in Missouri, &c.; and we are called upon to take further action in their case: But we here state, that Father Cutler's Mission was suspended at the April Conference. The action of that body was forwarded to the Valley by Elder Egan with all the whys and wherefores. Elders George A. Smith and Ezra. T. Benson will be there to represent, in person, the way Father Cutler has treated the action of the Conference in reference to his mission, also in reference to his holding in fellowship a man that was disfellowshipped by the Conference; and will also faithfully and truly represent to the Presidency of the Church the spirit by which that branch and its leaders are actuated. We decline any further action until we get official returns from the Presidency which we shall look for, in part, by Elder Babbitt, whose return we look for about the middle or twentieth of this month.

Every wise man knows enough to keep away from such as are rejected because of their vanity, self-will, self-righteousness and self-sufficiency: But those who are kindred spirits of theirs, will cling to them, sympathise with them, and will make with them their home, while a heated zeal holds them together; but when this gives way to calm and sober thought, the ties are broken, and one goes to the world, another becomes an infidel, a third goes to Texas or to the gold mines. Be patient, and all things will be done in their time and in their season Pray earnestly that ye enter not into temptation, and commit all things to the care of Him who will deal justly with all men.

Counsel to the Bishop.

There will be many calls on you for assistance and aid, because you are the man appointed to receive the tithing, and from it to administer to the wants of the poor. It is desirable that the honest and virtuous poor should receive succor from the Church: but such persons as waste their time in bed in the morning, when they should be up and at work if they are healthy, have no claim on you for support. That family who are guilty of profanity or suffer the same in their house, have no claim on the tithing for support. Parents who have boys and girls large enough to earn their living, yet instead of working, idle away their time, have no claim on you for aid. If any person or family do not sustain a good moral, upright, and virtuous character, they have no claim on the Church for a living. The tithing, the gifts and offerings of Church, are for the sick, the lame, the halt the blind, and for those whose age and infirmities will no longer allow them to labor: and also for the support of the priesthood, public buildings, &c.

Let your disbursments prove that the Church does not tolerate idleness in any shape or form, neither crime, nor immorality. The more indulgence such persons have, the greater will be their numbers. Remember that God helps those who help themselves, and the Bishop should also help those whose diligence industry and perseverance witness that they try, at least, to help themselves.

To Whom it May Concern.

It is claimed by some correspondents that Mr. Henry Vincent has received money for the Guardian, and forgotten to pay it in: also Mr. Watts in Mississippi. There are some others that have also forgotten to pay over money; but this will put them in mind of it without being particular to mention names in all cases. If this should fail to remind them, we will be more particular at another time

PRIESTCRAFT IN DANGER.—The remaining portion of this interesting dialogue was not received in season for this number—but we shall continue it in our next number.

Timely Caution.

It is the earnest wish of all good citizens in Kanesville, and in the adjoining country that no rum or whisky shop be opened in this place. It demoralizes and corrupts society, and it promotes profanity, idleness, and crime in a hundred forms. The man who will deal out a poison which kills both soul and body for the sake of paltry gold must be an enemy to his race. We are opposed to the operation. We are glad to see any man prosper in an honorable business, a business that is calculated to benefit society; but these grocery or groggery operation we are implatically against. Like the patrid carcass that attracts every filthy bird; So do these groggeries draw around them every lounger and profligate character, and also presents a temptation too strong for even some good men to resist.

Responsibility.

We do not like to be responsible for any thing that is not placed wholly under our control. If our friend, Mr. Clark, will submit himself, with Messrs. Brophy and Townsend entirely to our control and management, we see no reason to urge against being personally responsible for their safety at an adequate per centum. But on no other grounds are we disposed to be responsible. If Mr. Clark is paving the way to his own overthrow, and courting shame and contempt for his friends in whose favor he so stoutly speaks, we will not dispute long with him his claim to the wreath that his own hand has woven.

Vagrants and Loungers.

Our discourse the other day was considered by some to be rather severe. It was based on these words. "The idler shall not eat the bread nor wear the garment of the laborer." We considered that we were preaching the gospel all the time; and it was that kind of gospel that the law of our State fully supports. Read the following from the statute: and it is worthy to be enforced upon all such offenders or suspicious persons as are therein described, whether they are called Mormons or Deists, Catholics or Socialists. Every person has got to live, and if men are not put in the way of an honest living, they will try to get it dishonestly. Idleness is the forerunner of crime. So says the gospel and the law also.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Iowa, That every person, who does, or is suspected to, get his livlihood by gaming, and every able bodied person, who is found loitering, and wandering about, and not having wherewithal to maintain himself, by some visible property, and who doth not betake himself to labor, or some honest calling, to procure a livlihood, and all persons who may become chargeable to the county, and all other idle vagrants, dissolute persons, rambling about, without any visible means of subsistence, shall be deemed and considered as vagrants.

We think the penalties and disgrace attached to the law of vagrants will be learned as soon as any of these characters desire, when they find themselves arraigned before a Justice of the Peace.

Politics.

We don't like to say much about these ticklish things any how, for some would say that we were guilty of treason, murder and sacrilege if we should: Moreover we don't know much about them, and it would not become us to branch out very largely into matters that we do not fully understand.

Some of our exchange papers have said things that we do not exactly see into. At the time Gen. Taylor was a candidate for the elevated, station that he now occupies, the great cry raised against him was—that he gave no pledges, would not commit himself, therefore neither party could safely vote for him. He was called a man without any established principles, or if he had any, the bump of secretiveness was so largely developed that it would not allow him to give them to the people. But now the tone is changed. He has violated every pledge—has become the blind tool of an ultra party, forfeited his honor, and is a perfect cannibal upon every democratic office-holder. If Gen. Taylor made no pledges when a candidate, we should like to know what pledges he has broken since he became the President.

He probably considers the temple of freedom polluted; and who has a better right than he to take a "whip of small cords" and drive out the multitude that have won such large amounts from the political gambling tables, by which the Temple of Liberty has been defiled, and prostituted to purposes which high-minded freemen will only condescend to, to bestow a merited rebuke?

We would advise all our friends, residing East and North of St. Louis, Mo., to address their letters and communications to us, by-way of Fort Desmoines, as a new weekly mail route has been established and is now in successful operation through the interior of our State, terminating at this place. The reason of this advice is the great delay of letters by the other route, and the entire loss of many with the cash they contained. No honorable Postmaster need feel disturbed about this. We believe we know where some of our monied letters have been suppressed, but we dare not say that we know we know. But we know that we know enough to advise our correspondents to forward their communications to us by way of Ft. Desmoines, long enough, at least, to see if we are any more successful in obtaining money and news on this route.

Zion no Refuge for the Wicked.

We have sometimes heard of person, abroad getting into trouble by doing wrong, or committing some crime, or contracting debts, and then running away to the Bluffs to get out of the reach of the consequence. And will sometimes claim that they have been counselled to do so; but we know that no person authorized to give counsel, has given any such counsel. We do not want any such persons to come among us, and if any official member of our Church has given counsel to that effect, let him speedily repent and reform, for the Church can readily dispense with the services of any such counsellor, and most assuredly will do it. We say to all persons abroad, when you leave for this place, leave honorably, so that if you should be sent back to preach the gospel to your old neighbors, you would not be afraid or ashamed to meet them.

The 9th No. of the Guardian is out of print. We have all the other back numbers on hand.

Wanted at this office in exchange for the Guardian 15 or 20 tons good prairie hay—well cured.

Keep Out of Debt.

He that goeth into his neighbor's debt, especially unnecessarily, surrenders his liberty, and independence to another. It is always better, when about contracting debts, to consider well, and see if you cannot do without the articles you are going to run in debt for; apply a little more diligently the hand of industry, and you will have less occasion to run into debt. Do not think that because your neighbor is kind enough to accommodate you with a little credit for a season, you are at liberty to grasp upon every thing you may see. Pay day will come soon, then the mortification and sting are felt. You are powerless, ashamed and confused when you meet your creditors; feel not like a saint, but sort o' mean and foolish. "Owe no man any thing but love and good will." This will keep up confidence, good will and good feelings One feels bold that is free from debt. He feels like a man created in the image of his God. It is very easy to get into debt, but hard to get out. Leave the little niceties behind for the present. Make the old coat, hat, and bonnet do a little longer, and take to the "dodger" till your own industry will make things come round. Do not borrow money if you can possibly avoid it: for ten to one if you don't fail to pay at the time, and thereby sour the sweet temper of your benefactor towards you; and in nine cases out of ten, you are just as well prepared to pay now as you will be at the time you promised to pay. The Alpha and Omega of our song is, "KEEP OUT OF DEBT."

The gold dollar is being coined rapidly at the branch mint in New Orleans, and the journals of that section of country are in ecstacies at the great convenience likely to be experienced from them in place of the heaps of silver necessary to be carried about the person in a country where there is no paper of less value than five dollars.

Dog Killers—Attend!

By the law of the State, any person has the right to kill a dog that is found worrying a domestic animal in the streets. If about forty 'leven of the canine race were killed off in our little town, we should hear less squalling among the swinish free commoners of the street. The quiet peaceable cow, returning from the prairie at evening, ready to impart a flowing pail of milk to her mistress, can hardly pass along the street without being tormented by every cur and whiffet that can yelp. Dog killers, be at your posts; and if dogs cannot be kept under reasonable restraint, let them atone for their cruelty by the half score.

A negro slave ran away from his master in Missouri, supposed to have swum the Missouri river last Fall when very low, overtook our express and went on to the Salt Lake with them, and is now there. The spirit that is breathed from that place concerning the negro is about this. They had no agency at all in causing him to fly from servitude; and are not disposed to have any agency in causing him to return to slavery. He is there and is at work, and if the owner should send for him, he would probably meet with no resistence from our people in getting him, neither would they be disposed to aid or facilitate his return to slavery.

We really hope that all our people will be neutral regarding this vexed question. The hand of the Lord will direct and dispose of Slavery, and he needs not our interferance on a small scale or a large one. We have our part assigned us to act in these last days, and it is not policy for us to clog our own movements by interfering with a work assigned to other hands.

Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals, the publisher may continue to send them till all arrearages are paid, and subscribers are responsible for all the numbers sent.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodical from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible till they have settled their bills, and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and their periodicals are sent to their former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a newspaper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for untill arrearages are paid, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

Advertisements handed in without the period of their continuance distinctly noted, will be continued until forbid; and charges made accordingly.

The above will be our guide, and no paper will be discontinued until notice is given and arrearages paid, except at the discretion of the Editor.

A translation from the leaf of an old manuscript found in the "Gold Diggins," will appear in our next.

Elder J. Goodale, of Bentonsport, Iowa, is disfellowshipped from the Church on account of his erroneous preaching and practice.

Our old neighbor, Mr. Wicks, is likely to have some difficulty about the Indian Mill. Major Barrow, the government agent, has received his orders and must needs execute them. Mr. Wicks, we believe is a good neighbor, and a quiet man. When the hungry have applied to him for food, we have yet to learn that they have been turned away empty. At any rate, the poor speak well of him, and that is a pretty sure index to us of the character and disposition of the man.

Let no excitement get up among the people about the affair, and let no one, except such as the government requires to interfere, take any steps by which they may purchase trouble for themselves. If Mr. Wicks cannot hold legal claim here, it ill becomes any of us to try to weaken his hands. We hear however, that he has sold out and given possession of the premises to the purchaser.

Music.

It is the intention of the citizens and friends here to get up a good Choir of vocalists to be accompanied with instruments of various kinds.

This is a good intention, and we hope that every person whose voice can be modulated to the melody of song, will feel sufficiently interested to insure a successful attempt. Musicians, you can now take your instruments and assemble together, and with your sweet strains, cheer one another, and make joyful the house of the Lord, and edify the congregation of the Saints. We have sent for all the necessary music, and shall expect it here soon. We would like to build a hall for the musicians and for other purposes at an expense of about $500 if some of our good friends abroad or at home could feel to donate this amount for the sake of having a clean and decent place for cultivating the science of music

Doggery.

We have got a little hell here just opened in the form of a doggery at which a most shameful fight took place on election day. It is opened, not by a Mormon, but by a poor drunken blind man from St. Joseph. Why it is that we must be cursed with such a miserable establishment every few weeks is rather mysterious. He is a blind man, it is true; still the sympathies which that state naturally awakens ought not to allow him to go on in his business, breeding strife, corruption and misery in a community. We trust that the legal department will open the eyes of the blind man sufficiently that he may clearly see that he cannot keep a fighting, gambling, drunken hole here with impunity. We have no use for any such establishment.

Mr. Wood, the proprietor, was not only blind, but beastly drunk, and incapable of doing any thing, even if he were not blind. Some wiser and better men, saw that a squall was likely to strike the grocery on Monday night, and they repaired to the establishment, took a faithful inventory of all his effects, money, &c., which were exposed to any one in consequence of his (Wood) being so drunk. They placed a guard over the concern, and have its owner or proprietor in charge, and we learn that they intend to keep him at the hotel till he becomes perfectly sober, then deliver up to him all his effects safe and sound, and give him his orders, and if he neglects to obey them, when they see another squall arising; they probably will not interfere.

POTATOES.—The crop this season will hardly be an average one if all fields in the county do not yield better than those that we have seen in this vicinity.

The St. Louis Republican has made its appearance in its original size, "without even the smell of fire upon its garments," and in a handsome new dress. The type upon which it is printed is from the foundry of Messrs. A. P. Ladew & Co., of that city, and is not excelled in appearance by any we have seen.

Cholera.

At the last accounts it was on the decrease in Cincinnati and St. Louis, but was spreading over all the principle cities and towns throughout the United States. By the foreign advices the cholera had abated, in a great degree, in the City of Paris, but it is spreading among almost all the manufacturing and other cities of the Old World.

The cholera in St. Louis has preyed upon both saint and sinner, high and low, rich and poor—all have felt the keenness of its sting.

At the latest date from St. Louis (the 21st ult.) the number of deaths was 39 from cholera and 21 from other diseases. But at this rate the mortality is very great—from the fact that between fifteen and twenty thousand persons had left the city, besides the large number that had died.

Persons from St. Louis say that it is a most desolate looking place—business of all kinds nearly suspended—sorrow depicted upon every countenance—hearses, furniture wagons and drays, going to and fro through the city, to carry the sick, dead and dying from one place to another—doctors constantly on the move to administer to them in their awful condition. All these things look harsh and severe; but will, in the economy of Heaven, work together for good to those who love God and keep his commandments.

New Goods.

Some of our merchants have received large additions to their stock of goods by the steamer Mustang which arrived here last week. She made the trip in the short space of ten days. Our country friends wishing goods can, we believe, be supplied with almost every article that they may want.

Appointments.

STILL THEY COME.

NEW GOODS
AT NEEDHAM & FERGUSONS
STORE.

NEEDHAM & FERGUSON has just received a choice selection of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, HARD-WARE, BOOTS AND SHOES, HATS AND CAPS, CUTTLERY, HOSIERY, HABERDASHERY, &c., &c., fresh from St. Louis and the Eastern markets.

Mr. Ferguson residing most of his time in St. Louis, we are enabled to watch the market, and select the goods at the best possible advantage. We invite our friends and the public generally to call and examine our large and well assorted stock, feeling confident we have one of the largest and cheapest lot of goods ever brought to this market.

WANTED—The subscriber wishes to purchase a good TURNING LATHE fitted up for turning and drilling iron and steel. Any person having such an one and wishes to dispose of it will please to leave information at this office or inform the subscriber eight miles South of Kanesville, on Musquito Creek.
JONATHAN BROWNING.
August 8th, 1849.

IMPORTANT TO FARMERS.

THE subscribers respectully inform the Farmers of Buchanan county and adjoining country that they will put in operation at the Steam mills on Main street, one set of double wool carding machines, and will be ready to commence carding by the 20th of April.

Mr. Buell, a workman of thirty years experience, will give his personal attention, throughout the season, to the business—customers may rely on having their work well done and at short notice. The machinery will be propelled by steam, day and night all the season. Persons living at a distance may depend upon having their rolls to take home with them.

Terms—As reasonable as at any factory in the country; all damage done to rolls, will be paid for, if the wool is in good order. One pound of clean oil or lard to eight pounds of wool, will be required from those who wish to furnish their own.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT AND WARLIKE NEWS.

Entry of the French into Rome—Attempted Insurrection at Paris—Mob at Lyons—13,000 Austrians and Russians killed by the Hungarians, Hungarian Loss 8,000—Several other large Battles Reported in Hungary—Insurrections in Germany.

Rome.—Up to the evening of the 21st of June, no news had been received in Paris of the entry of the French army into Rome. Oudinot would not make a general attack before the 16th or the 17th, when the news of the failure of the conspiracy of the 13th in France would reach Naples and probably induce the Triumvirate to capitulate.
